Mr. ARMSTRONG: Mr. Bradlaugh, the body to which I belong also have the majority against them; over that we can shake hands. Let us try, each in our own way, as may best seem to us, to serve what we hold to be true. Depend upon it, whether there be a God or not, we each shall do best so. If there be no God, then you tell me I shall still do well to serve humanity. And if there be a God, he will gather you also, my brother, to his arms, so long as you are true—true to those convictions which come to you from the reason, absolutely sincere and which he has given you. You have told us that while religion held sway men were down-trodden. While superstition held sway it is true they were; while false ideas of a cruel and lustful God held sway, it is true they were; but just in proportion as men's thoughts of God have purified and clarified, just in proportion as they have restored to Christianity its sweet meaning, just in that proportion religion has risen to be a power in the world of all that is good, and sweet, and holy. Now, sir, to speak of what I said about the prayers for the recovery of the Prince of Wales. I said I thought they had been of little avail. The prayer for spiritual purity from a Christian man does win its answer by a law—a law of nature, I will now say, since you have defined a law of nature as the observed sequence of phenomena; but I dared not so call it until I knew what your definition of nature might be. But let us come back from these philosophisings, in which it is so easy to go wrong, to the test of experience. Mr. Bradlaugh says I do not submit the experiences of which I have spoken to the test. I invite you to test them, and see whether Mr. Bradlaugh has upset them or not. If you test them fairly, and then find them false, then come and tell me so. They are neither uncommon nor abnormal experiences, but the experiences of nearly every man and woman. It may be that their hearing is dull, but still they know the voice. You all know those in which the initiative comes from God, the voice of conscience, of which I spoke; you all know the solemn feeling which comes over you in the presence of the majesty of nature. You all know the other things in which you have taken the initiative. Heed those things, whether you believe they come from God or not, and you all may know the other—that of worship—and its answer. My contention solely is, that it would be reasonable for you to seek for that experience, that it is reasonable in us to practise. And now I will tell you a little story for the end of this debate, of a little family of children; and as I shall not found any argument upon it, I do not think it will be unfair. They sat one Christmas Eve in a chamber where the wintry gloom of early twilight fell. The eldest son sat and talked of the goodness of their father, and how, from the earliest days he could recollect, his tenderness had sheltered him, and how he seemed to have a heart to love every little child all through the world, and how he was surely even now preparing some sweet surprise for them every one. But John, the second boy, had lived all his life at a school on the far sea coast, where he had been sent that rough ocean breezes might strengthen his weakly frame; and now, tanned and burly, he had just come home for Christmas, and he had not even seen his father yet. And he said he did not believe they had a father; that Theophilus, declaring he had seen him, was nothing to him, for if there was one thing he had learned at school, it was not to trust the experience of other people till tested by his own. But Edward said he, too, knew they had a father; he, too, had seen him, but he was very stern, and he thought they could all do as well without him, and what could be more unkind than to leave them there in twilight solitude on Christmas Eve. And little Tom sat apart in the very darkest corner of the room, with a tear-stained face, crying as if his heart would break, over the hard sums set him there to do, and thinking that his brothers were a selfish lot of fellows, to talk and talk, and not care for him and his hard task. And Theophilus had just come to steal his arm around little Tom's waist, and dry his tears, and try if he could not help him to do his sum, when the door of the next room was thrown open, and a blaze of light flashed upon their faces, and one after the other they all rushed in and beheld their father standing by such a glorious Christmas-tree as boys never beheld before. And for each and all there were gifts so rare and precious—the very things they had longed for all the bygone half. And for John, who had been so far away and had not known his father, there was a grasp of the father's hand so strong and tender, and a kiss from the father's lips so sweet and loving, that he felt as if he had known that dear father all his life; and as for little Tom, all his tears were dissolved in rippling laughter, and he quite forgot his sum, for on his brow was set the brightest coronet on all the tree, and they told him he should be king through all the long Christmas day to follow. And now, dear friends, may the peace of God which passeth all understanding, that peace which the perishing things of the world can neither give nor take away, that peace promised to the weary by our dear brother, Jesus Christ, even in the midst of all his suffering and woe, be with you for ever. Amen. (Applause.)

Mr. ARMSTRONG having sat down, rose again and said: And now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to you the hearty thanks of this meeting for your conduct in the chair, for your impartial manner of ruling over us, and the kind words you have spoken. I thank you, Mr. Bradlaugh, for the courtesy and fairness with which you have conducted your part in this debate; and I thank you, sir, for presiding over us. (Applause.)

Mr. BRADLAUGH: I second that motion. I cannot say that we can thank you for your fairness, for, fortunately, you have had no opportunity of showing it. But I thank you most heartily for accepting a position which might have been one of great difficulty, and the taking of which may cause you to be misrepresented. I also thank Mr. Armstrong for having met me, and for the kindly manner in which he has spoken. (Applause.)

The vote of thanks was put, and carried unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN: Ladies and gentlemen, the thanks which have been given to me are due rather to the gentlemen who have spoken. I cannot but praise the admirable way in which they have rendered my position almost a sinecure. This debate has shown that a subject of such great importance can be discussed fairly, liberally, honestly, as this has been, and that no danger threatens him who occupies the chair, or those who lay their honest and earnest views before you. I feel that I have derived much knowledge from the truth which has been laid before us; and I do feel that there is a growing interest in things of this sort, which is itself a proof that discussions of this kind are very useful. (Applause.)

OVER DARWEN.

OPENING OF THE NEW IRON CHURCH, BOLTON ROAD.

THE opening of the new church in Bolton Road, of which an announcement appeared in our last week's issue, took place last Saturday. The church is a neat iron structure, consisting of a nave and transept, and calculated to seat 240 persons; it has also a comfortable vestry. As the chapel will for the present be used also as a school, the transept is to be separated from the body of the building by a curtain, and is to be used more especially for school purposes. A number of rich and tasteful mottoes have been arranged round the place, so as to give colour and relieve the bareness of the walls. The entrance is through a tower, which is surmounted by a neat little spire. The architect is G. Cunliffe, Esq., of Bolton, and the contractors are Messrs. Crogan and Co., of London. The land on which it stands has been purchased by the East Lancashire Mission, from whose funds also the cost of the building has come, the congregation having contributed towards the furnishing of it.

Unfortunately the weather was very wet. Notwithstanding this there was a good congregation. Among those present were the Revs. E. Allen, C. Beard, B.A., C. C. Coe, G. Fox, E. W. Hopkinson, J. B. Lloyd, J. H. Matthews, G. Ride, and H. S. Solly, M.A.; also Captain Turner, Messrs. J. Barrow, J. Bradshaw, G. Cunliffe, J. Harwood, and others.

The Rev. C. H. Osler being absent in consequence of ill-health, the Rev. J. B. Lloyd, of Knutsford, officiated in his place. The dedicatory prayer, which was offered by the Rev. C. C. Coe, of Bolton, was an earnest and touching appeal that the new church might be a centre of good influence from which Christian virtue might radiate into the hearts and homes of all its worshippers. Following the lessons, and before the prayer, the Darwen choir sang an anthem entitled "The Earth is the Lord's." The opening sermon was delivered by the Rev. Charles Beard, B.A., who took for his text Hebrews xi., 8, 9, 10. He gave a vivid description of the unchanging life of the East, and noticed how Abraham and his descendants dwelt in tents for they had no abiding city, and how at last God gave them the land for their inheritance. Abraham at first was not a monotheist, but a polytheist. Mr. Beard gave a quotation from an ancient legend which illustrated this. It declared that at first Abraham worshipped the stars, but these being extinguished by the light of the moon he worshipped that orb. But when this at length gave place to the sun, he fell down and offered his prayers to the sun. In the end he learned to worship the God who was the maker of sun, moon, and stars. Their own little church, said Mr. Beard, was the latest outgrowth of this monotheism, of which the earliest germ had appeared in Abraham. He reminded the congregation that they were in a measure still dwellers in tents, for that their iron chapel was probably built as a temporary place of worship, though far be it from him to say a word in depreciation of the very neat and comfortable building they opened that day. He doubted not that they had watched its growth with much interest, and had already become quite attached to it. And as a new congregation it was very likely that they had among them so much warm zeal and affection, that they would be happier than many of the congregations owning fenced cities, where discord, disputing, and wrangling existed. They had already laid four foundation stones, which he might call the foundation stones of freedom, truth, faith, and love. Probably all congregations, whether orthodox or not, could claim to possess some of these foundation stones, but Unitarians claimed to have them all. Take freedom first. No orthodox church could claim the same amount of freedom as they possessed. Orthodox churches were bound by dogmatic institutions. In the case of the Church of England it was her creeds and articles. In dissenting bodies it was a trust deed and the opinions of certain influential laymen. With us there is nothing of this kind; the minister is free to alter his real convictions, and the congregation on their part are not committed to believing all he says, but to each and all is conceded the perfect right of private judgment. With regard to truth he said that there was for us no such thing as absolute truth; that that was truth to each man which seemed so to him. He urged that they should examine the evidences on both sides of the question, both the conservative and the heretical, and having once made up their minds as to which appeared to them true, that they should proclaim the result of their reflection in a clear and manly way. Speaking of faith, Mr. Beard said Unitarians were often charged with neglecting that foundation stone, and perhaps with some reason. Faith could only exist where it is admitted that there is a want of knowledge, but as we are too apt to suppose we know everything, we cannot be expected to feel the need of faith. It was hard to show to a man who did not already feel it, how great was the need of faith. If, for example, a man did not himself feel faith in the existence of God, he could do no more than speak to him of the sense of sacred awe and holy mystery which at times filled his whole soul, and made him feel a need of a being who alone could satisfy his higher instincts and longings, and could fill him with rest and peace. Mr. Beard closed his sermon with a few touching words about the foundation stone of love.

The instrument, a sweet-toned American organ, was nicely played by Mr. Thomas Almond, who has lately been engaged as organist.

THE PUBLIC MEETING.

After tea in the Temperance Hall, Captain TURNER took the chair amidst hearty applause, and made a short but pleasing speech. Speaking from a long experience, he said he could say that Unitarianism had the effect of making men remarkable for Christian and social virtues, and that it was in every way a religion which would produce a blessing and not a curse. He said that many of his ancestors had been Unitarians, and among them, men who could fight as well as preach.

The Rev. H. S. SOLLY said a good word for missions generally, urging that people who despised missions only exposed their own ignorance; it was a grand thing to have a mission; and finally he alluded to the passage, "Paul called to be an apostle," showing that Paul himself was a great model to all who have the missionary spirit, whether they be laymen or ministers.

The Rev. J. H. MATTHEWS, as one who had taken an interest in this cause from its commencement, rejoiced with the friends on the opening of a new church. He thought that the best way to spread the Unitarian doctrines was to open places in the great centres of population. He also spoke of the liberalising effect of our literature, and he pointed out that an organisation like ours was needed which on a broad basis could combat with the materialism and agnosticism of the age.

After the speech of Mr. Matthews, young Master Duckworth, who is only about twelve years of age, gave in capital style a solo on the violin, which was followed by loud applause.

The Rev. E. TURLAND, who regretted much the absence of Mr. Osler, said many kind things concerning him, and gave a touching and practical speech, in which he urged the friends to bind themselves together by Christian virtues.

The Rev. J. B. LLOYD expressed his deep sympathy with them, and with their minister. He had known Mr. Osler for some time, and in his case to know him had been sincerely to love him. He deeply regretted Mr. Osler's absence from the meeting, and would give them a word of advice. He urged them to show their consideration in not over-burdening their minister with work. He also spoke in high terms of Mrs. Osler, and of the work which she was doing.

The Rev. C. C. COE said that the Darwen Unitarian Free Church would probably not have been in existence if it had not been for the exertion of Mr. Matthews. But for the Jubilee Fund of the British and Foreign Association, also the church could not have been erected. Again, they would not have been in possession of the church opened to-day if it had not been for the East Lancashire Mission, and still more for the special fund of that Mission. The East Lancashire Mission found a very special man to be their minister. He considered Mr. Osler's position one of great difficulty. The church and chapel going people of Darwen supported their ministers perhaps better than any other place of the same size, and as a natural consequence got the better article by paying for it; and he rejoiced that they had got a man of whom any mission or church might be proud. He hoped that in the course of a year or two they would gather the nucleus of a congregation and put down an iron church at Blackburn. When trade revived he looked forward to the establishment of another special fund of £3,000 or £4,000 for a similar purpose to that of the present special fund. The Mission having done their part, he commended the church to the earnestness and zeal of the congregation.

The meeting was also addressed by the Rev. G. Ride, of Chorley, and the Rev. E. Allen, of Walmsley; and votes of thanks were then passed to the Rev. Charles Beard for his services, and to Captain Turner as chairman of the meeting.

On Sunday last the Rev. C. C. Coe preached two eloquent and touching sermons to large congregations in the new church. The collections for the Saturday and Sunday services, including donations from absent friends, amounted to £21. 15s. Great interest has been displayed throughout the whole proceedings, and there can be little doubt that Unitarianism has now got a firm foothold in the thoroughly Lancashire town of Over Darwen.

LIVERPOOL: HOPE-STREET CHURCH.

INDUCTION OF THE REV. C. J. PERRY, B.A.

ON Thursday the Rev. J. C. Perry, B.A., of Nottingham and Manchester New College, London, was inducted to the pastoral charge of Hope-street Church, in succession to the Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., who retired at Christmas, 1876, since which time the pulpit has been supplied by a number of ministers and students. There was a large congregation, and the Rev. W. Gaskell, of Manchester, conducted the service.

The Rev. CHARLES BEARD, in extending to Mr. Perry the right hand of fellowship, said that not many weeks before, as the representative for the time of the college in which Mr. Perry was trained to the Christian ministry, he had had to offer some words of advice and encouragement to him at the close of his academic career; and now, by a happy accident, he (Mr. Beard) was called upon, as Mr. Perry was about to enter upon his ministerial life, to offer him a cordial welcome on behalf of those who would hereafter be his friends and brothers. Although he was not authorised by a meeting of any Presbytery to welcome him, still he did not think there could be any minister of Christ in that great town who would not welcome in his heart the advent of one more fresh and eager labourer in the great field. For those with whom Mr. Perry was to be more immediately associated he could say that they bade him welcome amongst them with the fullest expectation of a useful and honourable career on his part, and of help which should be valuable to them.

The Rev. C. J. PERRY, after taking the right hand of fellowship, said he publicly accepted the office of minister of that church with the fullest sense of the responsibility which was thereby laid upon him. For the last six years he had looked forward to that time with the most anxious delight. He was aware, however, of the difficulty of the work upon which he was about to enter. The demands which the present age made upon the minister were exceedingly heavy—more perhaps, than the average of men could well fulfil. He knew that to a Christian teacher the times were very trying, and that he required a clear head and a clear spiritual eye to steer a clear course between the iconoclastic and negative tendencies of the day on the one hand, and on the other the increased conservatism in clinging to the old bulwarks which had naturally resulted therefrom. He knew that if a minister was to cope successfully with the doubt and infidelity of the land, he must be able to plead the cause of truth with no feeble tongue; and if he was to do anything to withstand the indifference of the times, he must be possessed of a large wealth of spiritual life. He had considered all these things, and had determined to accept the office of their minister. The congregation had laid on him no fetters of creed or dogma; they had exacted no pledge of any kind; but had left him absolutely free to seek out and proclaim the whole counsel of God. He rejoiced in the liberty, and promised them that he would reverently and faithfully seek for the truth in all things, and having done so, he would speak to them with absolute fearlessness and frankness.

The Rev. Professor DRUMMOND then delivered the charge to the newly-inducted minister. He set forth the true ideal of a Christian Church, but pointed out that that ideal had never yet been adequately realised in actual life, and that the Church had never yet been truly Christian. In maintaining freedom for themselves, he said, they must respect the freedom of others. Instead of condemning one another, they ought to love one another. Not within the limits of any school could they discern the fulness of Christ. That fulness was not yet exhausted, and they might look in faith for new developments. The Church, however divided by artificial separations, was a vast living organism, branching out in various directions, discharging diverse functions, but informed by a common love, and slowly growing towards the divine perfection.

The Rev. CHAS. WICKSTEED afterwards delivered the charge to the congregation, urging upon them to give their minister all the support and encouragement in their power. Referring to the different organisations in connection with the church, he said their new minister would find a copious and healthy machinery in existence for carrying on good works.

The anthem from Mendelssohn's Elijah, "He that watching over Israel slumbers not, nor sleeps," was sung by the choir in a highly effective style, as were also a number of beautiful hymns appropriate to the occasion.

The service was closed with prayer and the benediction pronounced by the Rev. W. GASKELL.

CONGREGATIONAL SOIREE.

In the evening a congregational soirée was held in the schoolroom in connection with the church. There was a large assemblage. Mr. H. W. MEADE-KING occupied the chair, and amongst those present were the Revs. C. J. Perry, Professor Drummond, Charles Beard, B.A., Charles Wicksteed, B.A., W. Binns, J. Harwood, B.A., J. E. Odgers, M.A., S. Fletcher Williams, J. Shannon, H. W. Hawkes, F. Summers, R. Pilcher, B.A., C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S., H. S. Solly, M.A., P. M. Higginson, M.A., D. Agate, B.A., Lloyd Jones, W. Carey Walters, David Scott, J. Towle Marriott, W. M. Ainsworth, George Beaumont, Thomas Jones, &c.; Councillor C. T. Bowring; Messrs. Francis Boulton, F. H. Boulton, Geo. Holt, Thomas Paget, J. H. Genn, Dr. Higginson, J. T. Ellerbeck, C. W. Jones, R. R. Meade-King, &c. After tea a part song was effectively sung by the choir.

The CHAIRMAN then addressed the assemblage. He said they were not unfrequently told that the congregational system that prevailed amongst them was apt to beget a spirit of cold isolation, and to deprive them of the comfort and strength which other religious bodies derived from a different system—namely, that system in which congregations were grouped together under the control and guidance of some common central authority. If that were the case, he should be ready to acknowledge that it was a fault in their system; but he ventured to think that the assembly he had the honour to address was in itself a sufficient answer to such allegation. (Applause.) There could be in the life of a congregation no event more important than the occasion which brought them together that night—namely to commemorate the choice of a minister, and to express their warmest welcome to the object of that choice—Mr. C. J. Perry. (Applause.) Claiming to be unfettered themselves, they steadfastly refused to fetter their minister. They asked him no questions about his belief; they required from him no acceptance of any creed, short or long, but, in calm faith in the principle of freedom that they loved, they warmly welcomed him to take his place amongst them as their leader in their quest after a high spiritual life. (Applause.)

Mr. Francis Boulton, Councillor Bowring, and Mr. S. Bulley having briefly addressed the meeting, and given a kindly welcome to the new minister,

The Rev. Mr. PERRY, in a few words of excellent tone, thanked the friends for their very hearty greeting, and the members of the congregation for the kindness they had shown him since he came amongst them.

The Revs. C. Wicksteed, C. Walters, Lloyd Jones, and W. M. Ainsworth, having very briefly addressed the assemblage on behalf of the ministers, far and near, who had conducted the services in the church during the interregnum,

The Rev. CHARLES BEARD added a friendly word of greeting to Mr. Perry, remarking that the congregation he represented that evening and the Hope-street congregation had been bound together for more than a century and a half by very close ties. He trusted that during the eleven years he had been minister of Renshaw-street Chapel nothing had occurred to impair the sacredness of the traditions which had been handed down from generation to generation. (Applause.)

After some remarks from the Rev. W. Binns, Mr. Geo. Holt, and Mr. J. F. Robinson, a vote of thanks was awarded to the choir, who had given part songs at intervals, and to Mr. Bradley Pass and the ladies who had so tastefully decorated the room.

The proceedings shortly afterwards terminated.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

SHEFFIELD DISTRICT TEACHERS' MEETING.

THERE was at Rotherham, on Wednesday, Sept. 26, a numerous attended and interesting gathering of the ministers, superintendents, and teachers of Upper Chapel, Uppertorpe, Rotherham, and Stannington Sunday schools. Tea was provided in the Hollies schoolroom, and was followed by an excellent meeting, presided over by Rev. Wm. Blazeby. The subject for discussion, "How to Increase the Usefulness of our Sunday Schools," was introduced by the Rev. Wm. Birks, in an able and exhaustive paper, in which he gave the result of his thirty years' experience of Sunday schools, and suggested many ways of making them happier, more attractive, more interesting, and more useful. The subject was earnestly taken up by the Revs. Eli Fay, G. Knight, W. Blazeby, and many of the teachers present. Votes of thanks to the reader of the paper and to the Chairman brought to a close what all felt to be a good and profitable meeting. This, the second associated meeting of Sunday-school workers in the Sheffield district, originated in one convened in November last, at the Upper Chapel schoolroom. By kind invitation of the Rev. Eli Fay and his band of teachers, the district ministers and those interested in Sunday-school work, met, took tea together, and in pleasant social convalescence passed the following resolutions:—1. That an association be formed of the ministers, teachers, and friends of Upper Chapel, Uppertorpe, Stannington, and Rotherham Sunday schools. 2. That the Association meet twice a year, in the last week of July and January, summer meetings to be held at Rotherham or Stannington; winter meetings at Upper Chapel or Uppertorpe. 3. That a paper or address be given by one of the ministers or teachers at each meeting. 4. That a subscription of 5s. yearly from each school be paid to the funds of the Association. 5. That the permanent officers be a secretary (the Rev. W. Birks) and treasurer (Mr. J. Barnes.) 6. That the president of the meeting be elected by the teachers of the school at the place where each meeting is held.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

COLNE: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The annual sermons in aid of the Sunday school were preached on Sunday last in the Cloth Hall to good congregations, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, of Liverpool. The collections amounted to £5. 14s. 8d. The hymns and anthems were very tastefully sung by the excellent choir that has been formed. The building of the chapel is being satisfactorily proceeded with, and the friends hope that before the year is out they may be enabled to retire from the Cloth Hall, and conduct the services in the new schoolroom—a change which will be greatly conducive to the comfort of worship.

DUNFERMLINE.—Mrs. Soule continued her mission work on Sunday last. The weather was most unfavourable—cold and wet—and she found only ten persons at the forenoon service. In the evening, at the service, the number present was calculated to be 250; the results are therefore, on the whole, encouraging. A grant of Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, hymn-books has been made by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The books appear to be very well liked.

DEWSBURY.—On September 24th, a meeting of this congregation was held to give a welcome to the Rev. David Scott. More than a hundred persons were present at tea, after which Mr. Chas. E. Würtzburg presided. There were present the Revs. Goodwyn Barmby, Wm. Blazeby, B.A., Dendy Agate, B.A., J. Fraser, F. E. Millson, S. Dunbar, R. Wilkinson; Messrs. Geo. Buckton, R. Robison, H. J. Marton, and others. On behalf of the congregation the welcome was given by Mr. J. W. Connon. On behalf of the ministers of the district the Revs. R. Wilkinson, Goodwyn Barmby, W. Blazeby, F. E. Millson, and S. Dunbar expressed their good wishes and hopes for the success of Mr. Scott's ministry, to which Mr. Scott responded, expressing a desire that they might so work together as to make themselves a name and a power in the town. We regret that the report came to hand too late to be used in full.

FRENCHAY.—The usual harvest thanksgiving services were held in the Old Chapel on Sunday, Sept. 22nd, when the building was nicely decorated with floral wreaths and festoons. On the 23rd a tea meeting was held, followed by a public meeting, when addresses were given by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, of Bristol, and other friends. The choir of Lewins Mead Chapel, augmented by part of Oakfield Road choir, gave a selection of sacred music, which was greatly enjoyed by a large number of friends.

GLASGOW.—The Rev. Dr. McColister, of America, preached for the Universalists on Sunday last, morning and evening.

GLOSSOP.—Last week the congregation erected a neat marble tablet in their chapel in Fitzallan-street, at a cost of upwards of £20, on which is the following inscription:—"In remembrance of the Rev. Frederick Ashton, M.A., minister of this chapel from its opening on June 12th, 1875, to his death on April 16th, 1878. This tablet was erected by the congregation, which was largely the offspring of his untiring labours, and which held him in unspeakable love and honour for his Christ-like life and self-forgetful devotion to their service."

LIVERPOOL: BEAUFORT-STREET.—On Friday evening, September 27th, a farewell tea-meeting to the Rev. John Shannon was held. Mr. Shannon has been senior minister here for upwards of thirteen years, and for the present, through ill-health, is retiring from the ministry. Mr. J. F. Robinson presided, and a presentation of a silver cruet-frame to Mr. Shannon on behalf of the congregation, &c., as a slight token of respect, was made. The meeting was addressed by the Revs. C. Wicksteed, B.A., C. Beard, B.A., J. Shannon, F. Summers, and George Holt, Esq., &c. On Sunday evening, Mr. Shannon preached his farewell sermon.

MR. CHRISTOPHER J. STREET, B.A., of Manchester New College, London, son of the Rev. James C. Street, of Belfast, has taken the degree of Master in Arts, with second-class honours in History, English, and Political Economy, at the recent examinations in connection with the Queen's University in Ireland, Dublin Castle.

MANCHESTER: LOWER MOSLEY-STREET SCHOOLS.—The opening meeting of the session 1878-9 in connection with the Mutual Improvement Society Science Classes, was held on Saturday evening last when the prizes and certificates, gained in the recent examinations by the students, were distributed. The Rev. S. A. Steinthal presided, and there was a large attendance of pupils and friends. The annual report showed that the schools had fully maintained the position they had occupied in educational work during the past year. In the science and art examinations, held in May last, 52 pupils were presented in science, and 10 in art. Of the former 34 passed—29 in the elementary stage and 5 in the advanced, and of the latter five passed, and an equal number failed. In the examination in connection with the Union of Lancashire and Cheshire Institutes, ten first class certificates were gained, together with four of the second class, and the class examinations were equally satisfactory. The Government examinations of the boys' and girls' evening classes took place in April, there being presented 49 boys out of 54 qualified for examination, and 19 girls out of 20. Of the former, 49 passed in reading, 43 in writing, and 37 in arithmetic; of the latter, 17, 12, and 16 respectively. The Inspector reported that the results of the examinations were very satisfactory, a good proportion of the scholars being in the upper standards.—After an address by the chairman, Miss Lydia Becker distributed the prizes to the students, and spoke briefly in encouragement of their endeavours to secure a good education. The meeting, which was enlivened with glees, given by the members of the school singing class, terminated with the usual votes of thanks.

MANCHESTER: THE REV. WM. GASKELL.—A special general meeting of the proprietors of the Portico Library and News Room was held at the institution in Mosley-street, on Thursday week, to consider the propriety of commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rev. W. Gaskell's membership of the institution, and the 30th anniversary of his chairmanship of the committee. Mr. W. H. Ord was voted into the chair, and, after he had reviewed Mr. Gaskell's services, resolutions were passed appointing a committee to obtain subscriptions to be expended in procuring a portrait or bust of Mr. Gaskell, to be placed in the institution. The meeting terminated with the customary vote of thanks to the chairman.

MALTON.—A successful festival was held by the Unitarians and their friends at Malton on Thursday week. In the afternoon a public tea was held in the Temperance Hall, presided over by the following ladies: Mrs. W. S. Hall, Mrs. E. Hall, Mrs. T. Hudson, Mrs. R. Calvert, Mrs. Spiegelhalter, and Miss Hick. In the evening a musical and elocutionary entertainment was given in the chapel, and a fruit banquet in connection with it. The pretty little chapel was well filled. The Rev. J. Sutcliffe was in the chair, and said he considered entertainments of this kind were decidedly in keeping with the time of year. At the conclusion of the programme Mr. E. Hall proposed a vote of thanks, which was carried, to those ladies and gentlemen who had so kindly given the fruit.

MANSFIELD: OLD MEETING.—On Sunday last the anniversary services on behalf of the Sunday school, and in celebration of the harvest festival, were held. Sermons most appropriate to both occasions were preached by the Rev. J. Page Hopps, of Leicester, to large and attentive congregations, the chapel in the evening being crowded to overflowing. The decorations, upon which considerable care and trouble had been expended by the ladies of the congregation, were of fruit, flowers, corn, and evergreens, and though not profuse, were remarkably tasteful and elegant. The services throughout were of an exceedingly interesting and attractive character. On the following evening the congregation held its annual tea party in the Town Hall, when about 150 were present. The Rev. A. W. Worthington, the pastor, presided. He said that whilst members of other denominations often found their opinions opposed to their feelings, and their heads to their hearts, with Unitarians the head and heart could always go concurrently. He hoped the usual classes would be carried on during the approaching winter; and in addition it would give him much pleasure to see established a weekly meeting for amusement, and also to throw open the schoolroom on Sunday evenings for a social gathering of the poorer classes, as suggested in last week's Herald. The Rev. J. Page Hopps delivered an address, which was enthusiastically applauded. An address was also given by the Rev. C. D. Badland, of Derby, and the proceedings were pleasantly enlivened by selections of vocal and instrumental music by the choir and friends. [We much regret that we are not able to give a longer report of this meeting.]

OLDHAM.—On Sunday evening last, the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., preached a sermon on the discussion which has lately taken place at Nottingham. During the course of the sermon, he said public discussion was one of the most unsatisfactory methods which could be invented for the decision of reconcile political or religious subjects. Often the object was not whether the disputants could convince one another, but each tried to beat or appear to beat his opponent in argument in the estimation of the audience. Recondite questions were not settled by one discussion, one sermon, or one lecture; it took weeks and years to settle some difficult problems, even when they were within scope of human intelligence.

ROCHDALE: CLOVER-STREET.—On Sunday last the Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached in the Unitarian Chapel, Clover-street, Rochdale, afternoon and evening, by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., of Manchester. In the morning an address to parents, teachers, and scholars was delivered by the Rev. Joseph Freeston, of Blackley. Mr. H. Hawkins, of Southport, presided at the organ, and about sixty of the female portion of the scholars had been specially trained as singers for the occasion by Mr. James Hill, who conducted them, and was assisted by an efficient choir. As usual on the school anniversary day, the chapel was completely crowded, and both the singing and the services gave great satisfaction, and notwithstanding the depressed state of the times the collections for the day amounted to the unprecedented sum of £48.6.6½d., which shows that the people of Rochdale, by their pecuniary contributions to the cause of Sunday-school education are not found wanting when required.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—On Sunday last the annual sermons were preached by the Rev. Robert Spears, and on Monday a meeting was held to welcome the Rev. Wm. Stoddart, B.A. The report came to hand just as we were going to press, and we can only say that Mr. Robson presided, and Mr. Bell, the Revs. A. Payne, Dendy Agate, Robert Spears, Councillor Walton, Mr. Hall, Mr. Talintyre, and Mr. Freund addressed the meeting. Mr. Stoddart accepted their cordial welcomes, and the meeting was closed with prayer.

SUNDERLAND.—On Sunday, 22nd inst, sermons were preached in connection with the Sunday-school anniversary, in the Unitarian Church, by the Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved, of York. The congregations were numerous, and the discourses listened to with very deep interest. On Monday the 23rd inst., the teachers and friends took tea together, after which a meeting was held. The Rev. Wm. Elliott presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. C. H. Wellbeloved, Alfld. Payne (Newcastle), R. C. Smith (South Shields), and Messrs. James Watson (Newcastle), Geo. Lucas (Sunderland), Mr. Fothergill, Street, Macnab, Brown, and Hemsley. The proceedings were varied by several pieces of music, given by Mrs. Beckwith, Miss Mary Metcalf, Miss Mary Greenfields, Miss M. Hemsley, Mr. Gowdy, and Mr. Thos. Manning. The occasion was rendered specially interesting by the chapel being decorated with plants and flowers, liberally contributed by members and friends of the congregation.—On Sunday evening last the Rev. W. Elliott delivered the first of two lectures on the controversy touching the doctrine of everlasting punishment, with special reference to the severance of the Rev. W. Impey's connection with the Wesleyan body. The chapel was most inconveniently crowded. The rev. gentleman denounced the doctrine as a horrible superstition, contrary to our common sense and common humanity, and having no warrant in Holy Writ.

YEOVIL.—On Sunday, September 22nd, a harvest thanksgiving service was held in the Vicarage-street Chapel. The preacher was Mr. H. E. Bunce, of Frome, his text for the morning being from Psalm lxxv, 11, and in the evening Matt. vi., 30. The congregation in the evening was especially good. The fruit, floral, and vegetable decorations were exceedingly profuse, arranged with remarkable taste, and called forth joyous exclamations from all who attended the services. A long table across the chapel groaned beneath its choice burden, a table under the reading-desk supported some choice hothouse plants, a festoon of flowers, grapes, &c., was suspended from the pulpit to the body of the building. The organ was gracefully trimmed with wheat and flowers. Various crosses and devices of anchor and heart hung on the walls. Altogether the services were a pleasing success.

TROWBRIDGE.—The Sunday school festival was held on Sunday last, and was as successful as on any former occasion. The recently appointed pastor, the Rev. John Felstead, preached the sermons. The morning discourse was about children from Mark x., 3-16, and the evening one to children from Hebrews iii., 15. At the conclusion of the evening service twelve Bibles were presented to as many children—eight girls and four boys—in the Sunday school. The collections amounted to rather more than £20.

WALSALL.—The New Liturgy, "Prayers and Ministries for Public Worship," was used at the Unitarian Free Church, Walsall, for the first time on Sunday morning last. The service taken was the fourth—Duty. It has been adapted to music by Mr. James Anderson.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors. No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

J. W. C.—In type. Several paragraphs stand over a week.

THE "CONFESSION OF FAITH."

To the Editors.—Thank you for inserting my letter. Now allow me to say that I must not let my offer stand beyond October 7th. It may interest some of your readers to know that of the present and previous editions (old and new) we have sent out about 400,000 copies.—Hearty yours, J. PAGE HOPPS.

Leicester.

UNITARIAN HOSPITALITY.

To the Editors.—Having previously lived many years in London, and having at times visited other places of worship besides the one I generally attended, I can bear testimony to having received the greatest kindness and courtesy from our friends at other Unitarian chapels. I cannot say so much for the orthodox. For instance, I and my wife went into a church in a country place, there not being a chapel of our connexion. The service had commenced; the pew-opener showed us into a pew in which was a gentleman of Dombey aspect. When we had taken our seats he bent stiffly down and said, "If the party comes you will have to go out." Instead of waiting for the party we immediately walked out of the church. J. S. MAYNARD.

Oxford, Sept. 30, 1878.

A MISSION FOR OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—I am sure we have many good ideas that, were they perseveringly applied, would become useful realities; but because of our want of perseverance they drop and are lost. But I do not think to make your readers believe that a mission for our Sunday schools is a good thing by mere assertion. My desire is that the question should receive the consideration that it so well merits.

I believe that it is practicable and would lead to good issues, therefore I write once more about it. Why cannot our schools have their home mission fund as well as other Sunday schools? Why cannot our scholars point with their fingers to this stately church and that towering spire and say with pride, "I helped to build that: our school sent so many pounds?" Will some of the district associations see to this?—I am, yours truly, W. R. SHANKS.

Stockport.

COMING WEEK.

LONDON: UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON.—On Friday, Oct. 11, a service of praise and prayer, at 8 p.m.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On Sunday, annual sermons of the Northumberland and Durham Association, by Rev. Wm. Henry Channing. Monday, soiree at 5.30.

PADIHAM.—On Sunday, school sermons, by the Rev. H. W. Crosskey, at 10.30, 2.30, and 6 o'clock.

SCARBOROUGH.—On Sunday morning, at 10.45, and in the evening at 7, the Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A., will preach.

Birth.

KNIGHT.—On the 28th ult., at Westbourne Road, Sheffield, the wife of the Rev. Geo. Knight, of twins.

Marriage.

DREW—ASHWORTH.—On the 26th ult., at the Unitarian Chapel, Newchurch, by the Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A., assisted by the Rev. A. Lazenby, Alexander, eldest son of Alexander Drew, Esq., Blaimore, Argyllshire, to Alice, eldest daughter of Edward Ashworth, Esq., J.P., Staghills, Rossendale.

Deaths.

GUNDRY.—On the 22nd ult., at Bridport, Mr. Benjamin Peakes Gundry, aged 57 years.

STEPHENS.—On the 1st inst., at 74, Stoke Road, Newcastle. Staffordshire, William Stephens, sen., aged 49 years.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

PAPERHANGINGS.

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE:

93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOUNTINGS, PAINTERS' VALETINES, &c., &c.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, and at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street, as said, in said Parish of Manchester. London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, Lombard-street, London. Printed on Friday, October 4, 1878.

DOING AND SAYING.

About £75,000 has been promised towards the fund required for endowing a bishopric for Liverpool.

The Governing Body of the Wesley College, Sheffield, have resolved, by a majority of 36, to continue the use of the Liturgy of the Church of England in their services.

It is stated that Professor Leone Levi estimates that out of every pound of taxation contributed by the working man to the National Exchequer, 13s. 5d. comes from alcoholic liquors and tobacco.

The Irish Church is said to be barely holding its own in consequence of the bad state of business this year, the number of working clergy being reduced, and arrears of assessment having increased. With a good harvest, it is however hoped that the financial condition will improve.

At Yeovil, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., said that some action was necessary to put an end to public-house legislation, and that if working men would decide in their own houses, instead of in public-houses, who they would send to represent them in Parliament, they would fare better than they now did.

Well-merited honour has been done to the Mayor of Manchester (Alderman Grundy) in his being requested to accept nomination for the mayoralty for a second term of office. It is, we believe, an unprecedented circumstance that the requisition was signed by 63 out of 64 members of the Council, one member being absent through illness.

The Archbishop of York, having been criticised by the Times for speaking at Barrow of "a paroxysm of building churches," says if that expression be irreverent what becomes of the "paroxysm of love and of good works" in Hebrews x., 24, veiled from the English reader by the paraphrase "provoking one another." It could not be said that a "paroxysm of good works" was laudable, and a "paroxysm of building churches" unmentionable.

The Peace Congress at Paris was of a cosmopolitan character. There is no country where the arguments against gigantic armaments ought to have greater weight than in France. Next year its Legislature will be invited to vote the enormous sum of twenty-two millions sterling for the military establishment alone. The active army of France, with its reserve and its disposable men, consists of no less than 2,080,000 troops, and the permanent army of 480,000 men. These are very sad facts, and will ere long be so regarded by Frenchmen.

The Bishop of Chichester in delivering his triennial charge on Tuesday, referred to the recent perversions to Rome of several of his Brighton clergy. From one church alone five clergymen had lately passed over to Rome, and they had to the utmost of their power leavened all they could influence with Romish doctrine. Such defections betrayed inward unsoundness and unsettlement, and they asked with fear, "Who shall be the next to forsake our communion?" The path towards Rome had been smoothed for their converts by excessive and illegal ritual. Did the Bishop when at Middleton never toy with "illegal ritual?"

The resolution of the Manchester Town Council to throw open the Free Libraries on Sundays has been in operation four weeks, and already the average number of visitors on those days is greater in proportion than the average attendance during the week. The returns in respect to the branch-rooms for the first three Sundays show that altogether 8,142 persons availed themselves of this new privilege; but the total issue of books only reached the comparatively small figure of 1,665, the chief attractions to visitors being apparently the newspapers and publications on the stands and tables. There are no means of ascertaining the status of the visitors to the branch rooms; but inquiries made in the Reference Library show that the persons who use that institution on the Sundays belong principally to the artisan class.

The announcement of the intention of the Archbishop of Canterbury to confer degrees upon whomsoever he will, is not so modest a proposal as it may appear to be at first sight. Dr Tait is about to revive a long disused prerogative. The power of granting degrees at will was exercised in pre-Reformation days by the Bishops of Canterbury as Papal Legates, and this power was not interfered with by Henry VIII. Since then archbishops have but rarely exercised their power, and when they have done so, their degrees have been simply regarded as practically worthless. Dr. Tait, however, aims to confer degrees as though he were a University. He will make doctors of those who cannot otherwise gain a degree; but he requires an examination of candidates for the degree of "M.A." "Anyone," we are told, "may become a candidate who can produce testimonials of good character, a certificate of baptism, and a recommendation from the Bishop of the diocese in which he resides," the italicised words being intended, of course, to exclude Dissenters. The standard of learning is to be very low; candidates must have some knowledge of the English language and literature, but Latin and Greek will not be essential. The object evidently is to give degrees to young curates and parish priests who could not earn them.

OUTSPOKENNESS IN RELIGIOUS LIFE.*

REV. BROOKE HERFORD.

Seeing, then, that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech.—2 COR., iii., 12.

BRETHREN, my subject is our need of more simple, outspoken religious life. I think this is the special need of liberal Christianity to-day. In all the larger and outward aspects of religion, as we stand facing the great needs and questions of the time, our liberal churches hold a strong position, their thought is fearless and clear, and their word is firm, direct, and—listened to. But we must be conscious that we have no similar fulness and heartiness of utterance on the smaller, inner, more personal side of religion. This is about our weakest side to-day. The high thoughts of our faith want "reducing to lower terms;" they want bringing to bear not only on the lofty problems of science and philosophy, but on the daily needs and cares of struggling, sorrowing, tempted men and women; they want shaping not only into the great utterances of pulpit and press, but into something of an altogether plainer speech, into the language of common life, into the happy tones of household piety, into the frank utterance of friend with friend.

The function of religion is not accomplished when it has explained for us "the riddle of the painful earth," or made us content to leave it unexplained; when it has dissipated the abstruse definitions of Athanasius or the gloomy decrees of Calvin; nor even when it has taught us that there is no real antagonism between science and faith, and that the hypothesis of evolution still involves the postulate of God. These, after all, are only the difficulties of the meditative few, and religion has in it to be the joy and life of all. The common people should hear it gladly; it should be not only the lamp of studious hours, but the wholesome daylight of busy life. It should dwell with us in the world's common level, and go with us in its common round. It should mingle with our daily life as "a spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." It should be an undertone of happy praise and trust rippling among our manifold occupations, and near enough to the surface to break out now and then into articulate melody. It should be a homelike atmosphere in which the dear relationships of life should find a finer closeness and tenderness and purity. It should be a thought in which the old man and the little child may feel a common interest; to the busy life and to pain and sickness the music of "a low, contented song," in which even the harsh discord of death shall pass as a suspended harmony into the firm cadence of triumphant faith. All this is what religion should surely be in the midst of the longing, burdened, struggling life of man.

A central peace subsisting at the heart
Of endless agitation;

But how is religion to be all this? It cannot be merely by being made the topic of sermons and lectures. It cannot be by mere public ministry at all. It will need much besides this—ministries of home, ministries of friendship, frank, unashamed speech between man and man. Here is where we are weak. Here is where I find the suggestiveness of Paul's word: "Seeing, then, that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech." We want so to feel the blessedness and value of our faith as to be lifted out of our miserable reserve, and learn to speak of it with more earnest freedom and simplicity.

There are several directions in which we need to learn this greater "plainness of speech" about religion.

For one thing, we want it even in our preaching. I have said that our strength at present lies chiefly in our spoken word; and yet even in this we do not manage to have that simplicity which such a faith as ours deserves. Nothing can be more simple than our faith! Faith in God as the great Heavenly Father, stopping at that and refusing to enter into the Trinitarian speculations about the inner mysteries of His being; loving discipleship to the Christ of the gospels, without insisting on any special creed about his nature; the doing of one's duty as the condition of acceptance; an immortality of new and onward life, the very discipline of which is ordained in infinite love and has hope in it for all. Some think that it does not make more way just because it is so simple. The multitude love mystery, they say, and they point to the success of other churches whose systems, compared to ours, are a tangle of theological confusion. I am afraid the real explanation is very different. It is that though it is perfectly true that we have the simpler doctrines, it is the other churches that have the simpler preaching.

I remember well the incident which first brought me sharply to book upon this matter. I was travelling by rail, a good many years ago, and was looking over a number of tracts and sermons that had recently been published in connection with one of our missionary efforts, when a thoughtful-looking man, who had noticed what I was doing, said to me in perfect good faith, "Sir, have you a tract to spare that would help a young friend of mine, who is very sad and anxious under the sense of sin?" Well, I thought that I had tracts for almost everything. I had a tract to prove that God was one and not three, and others against original sin and eternal punishment; I had a most convincing argument against offering prayer to Christ, and a common-sense view of the Bible, and some most eloquent statements of the essential harmony between religion and science, and in fact I had about every theological aspect of our faith plentifully declared—and yet, as I turned these over, I was uncomfortably conscious that none of them would have much help for a distressed and anxious soul, and I had finally to admit, with some hesitation, that I had not one suitable with me!

The second direction in which we need more simple, outspoken religious life, is that of home. Fifty years ago Dr. Channing took as the title of one of his sermons, "Unitarian Christianity Most Favourable to Piety." How does that sound to-day in the light of the so general disuse among Unitarians of the old observances of home-piety? I know that the disuse of these does not necessarily imply that the spirit of religion is absent or feeble. I know that there are some who have no religious observances at home; who have no family worship; who do not like the use of "grace" at meal times; who hardly ever say a word to their children about religion—and yet who at heart are sincerely religious. I remember an orthodox preacher visiting me years ago. For a week he went in and out with me among my people, and in our school, and our services and meetings. And when he parted from me he said, "I have had a curious experience this week. Among my own folks I have always had a fear that there is rather more religion comes out than there is in; but here, I have kept feeling that there is more religion in than comes out." I believe he was right; and of the two extremes, better this than the other. But still we carry this reserve altogether too far. If some people put reflectors round about their piety to make it show for more, that is no reason for our hiding ours under a bushel to keep it from showing at all. "Let your light shine," was Christ's word; and home is just one of those places where surely, if anywhere, it ought to shine out with a sweet, natural openness.

* From a Sermon preached at the opening of the National Unitarian Conference, Saratoga, N.Y., on Tuesday evening, September 27, 1878.

It was so with Puritanism in its best days. It was so on the inner side of the Lutheran Reformation. Look at the sweet home-life of early Christianity. And that early Christianity, with its simple rejoicing pieties, did but take up the best spirit of the old Hebrew household life. When Christ, as he took bread, "gave thanks," he only did what he had been used to do from childhood; and, moreover, what, in some rude way—casting a morsel in the fire or on the floor—the idol-worshippers of Greece, and Rome, and all ancient lands, had done from the very childhood of the world. And so the heathens with their household gods, and Abraham sacrificing at each camping-ground on his rude pile of stones, are but the ancient types of that piety of the Christian home which Burns describes in his "Cotter's Saturday Night," and which prompted Baxter's noble saying, "Wherever I have a home, there God shall have an altar."

I plead, therefore, for religion in the home, and not merely for the spirit of it, but for that spirit to have earnest, simple expression and culture!

I plead for family prayer. That in this busy, hurrying life of to-day, and all the more because it is so busy and so hurrying, there be that daily pause that our fathers had; that quieting of the hearts of all together into the thought of God, with some old Bible-word, it may be, to set the key-note of the day, and the humble bending in common prayer.

I plead for the old family Bible. Said a poor woman to me, once, in one of my Manchester mission districts, when I called to change a tract: "Oh yes, here it is; I always keep it with the rent-book, in the Bible; them it's sure not to be disturbed." I could find Bibles in other than poor men's homes—Bibles beautiful with brightest clasps and binding, prominent ornaments on parlour tables, that would also be better if they were "disturbed" a little oftener, opened with the little children round, that they might learn where to find the best of the old-world stories, or their favourite verses in psalm and gospel.

I plead for home psalmody. I do not know any memories that cling more sweetly to one's life than those of quiet Sunday evenings in the old home, when young and old gathered round, and each had some favourite hymn to ask for. Have those old times been quite banished by the modern fashion of the church-music being confined to a quartette and the congregation praising God by proxy?

And I plead, too, for the old custom of grace before meat,—just a word of thanksgiving for daily bread. I plead for this almost more emphatically than for prayers or hymns, because it is within reach of all. Some people, in these progressive days, have got—or think they have—beyond praying, and if it is not every one who can sing. But even the most "advanced" have hardly got beyond feeling thankful, and everyone could speak a simple word of thanks. I know it is easy to raise objections. Probably there is no religious usage which has suffered more from ridicule. In some homes they never have it except when a minister is present to say it, which always looks as if it was said out of compliment to the minister rather than out of gratitude to God. Besides, why single out one's food to be particularly thankful for? Charles Lamb said he would sooner say grace for a good book than for a good dinner. Say grace in your heart for every blessing you have; there is no danger of too much thankfulness. But my point is, that it is good for this general spirit of thanksgiving to come to the surface in some open fashion now and then. And if it is so, then there is no better occasion for it than these common daily mercies. For, just because they are so common, they are in more danger of being taken as a matter of course; and just because they are enjoyed by all the family together, they furnish the better opportunity—say once a day when the family are most together—for a united remembrance of the good providence of life. Yes, the more you look into it, the more you will see the real worth and fitness of a reverent custom, which in one form or another is almost as old as the world, and which is so simple that it may be repeated by a little child.

Religion openly acknowledged by all the family together helps to keep the home life up to its true pitch. It keeps the home affections more delicate and pure; it softens the little household strifes and jars and worries; it breathes into parent and child the spirit of kindlier helpfulness and happier content; and when trials and sorrows come, as come they will at times, in every family, it makes it easier alike to young and old to speak out their deepest word of mutual comfort, and to reach out together to the higher comfort still. And so through all our comings and goings, and sunshine and shadow, it brings a richer, closer life, and helps all our changing days to be Linked each to each by natural piety.

There is yet a third direction in which this grand, liberal faith of ours should teach us more of this "plainness of speech." I mean in personal religious intercourse and fellowship, in frank converse between friend and friend, and in being ready to speak an open, unashamed word for our religious convictions. I cannot help thinking that we have carried individualism in religion to an extreme. We have lost sight of the help to religious life which there is in frank interchange of thought and experience. We say that religion is a thing simply between each man and his maker. So it is, in its inmost essence; but, for its culture, it is something which should be also between man and man. That was a wise word the old man gave to John Wesley when he was wearing his heart out in the lonely struggles of his first deep convictions: "Sir, the Bible knows nothing of solitary religion." It was out of that word came all that net-work of close, brotherly fellowship by which early Methodism strengthened its new converts, and helped to keep them on their feet. Perhaps some of our evangelical friends have carried this too far. We do not want any spiritual inquisition. We do not want to have people coming round and asking us or our children whether we have found Jesus,—to which, perhaps, the best answer is that which the little child gave to the revivalist: "Why, I didn't know that he was lost!"

These great thoughts and truths of ours are not given to be merely the light of solitary thought, but for the happy converse of friendship and the frank intercourse of home. I like that word which our "free religious" friends have taken for their motto: "Freedom and Fellowship in Religion." Only, let us have this in its fullness; not "fellowship" only among those who hold different faiths or no faith. Suppose we have a little more fellowship with each other, a little more trust to speak out our beliefs. Is there no lesson for us in that old word that has come down from Moses' time, about those great thoughts that he gave his people? "These things which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." It was but the law and faith of Israel that Moses and his people had to talk of. Shall we not be at least glad and earnest in speaking of those brighter, larger truths which Christ has given us,—truths which we humbly think we see in clearer light than most?

REVIVALISM AT MORETON-HAMPSTEAD.

CERTAIN Gossellers of the atrabilious sort, as Mr. Carlyle might call them, have visited Moreton-hampstead, and made themselves busy in detecting the sins of the place and the causes of sin, chief among which they find to be the prevalence of Unitarian doctrine among some classes of the community. This libel upon his flock has called forth a remonstrance from the Rev. W. H. Eastlake, and one also from the editor of the Devon Weekly Times, on Friday last. The charge was that until lately in Moreton "no special effort has been made to bring the light of God's truth to shine in the darkness. Unitarianism in its strongest and deepest phase has long reigned undisturbed in this little market-town on Dartmoor, and as a natural consequence vice in every form abounds; for where the need of an atonement is denied, and both the fact of a Devil and of a Hell are treated as myths of man's devising, we may well believe that the less educated and ignorant will be swayed by the more intelligent, and use such fatal doctrines as a salve to their conscience and an excuse for their immorality." This charge was published, says the Devon Times by "a set of fanatical 'brethren' whose mission is to 'lie' for the cause of God and to bear false witness against their neighbours" in their organ called The Christian, and also in a tract. Dealing with the special charge against Unitarianism, the Devon Times says: "We have no doubt but that in Moreton there is a fair share of the infirmity of human nature, but to say 'that vice in every form abounds as a consequence of Unitarianism,' and to insinuate that drunkenness exceptionally prevails in Moreton, and also as a consequence of Unitarianism, is an assertion as utterly void of truth as anything can be. . . . Moreton has its church and its chapels, like most of the towns of England. Its Orthodoxy is much more than its Heterodoxy. And even the Heterodoxy of the town for many past years was veiled under the orthodox teaching of the Rev. Kentish Bache, the Unitarian minister, who was not a Unitarian, and who is now a clergyman of the Church of England. . . . We believe that there is a building in Moreton entirely devoted to the instruction and benefit of the inhabitants, known as 'Smethurst Hall.' Its name proclaims its origin, it having been the result of a legacy of a former Unitarian minister. . . . There has been of late a large amount of ranting preaching in Moreton, and the agents of missions are always ready with their manufactory of converts. Revival meetings are held, and not only have scandals been reported, but they have actual existence. The excess of excitement is a dangerous thing, and the meetings which decency cannot share can hardly be deemed religious. 'The man in charge of the coffee-room' (says the tract) 'delights to testify the name of Jesus, and rejoices in every soul won over to his side.' This man has been since turned out for drunkenness. . . . The professed purpose of the tract-writer is to save souls, the real purpose to get £365 to build a coffee-room founded on temperance principles. He seeks to do a good thing in the wrong way. He spoils his temperance advocacy by his falsity and his bigotry."

Our minister, Mr. Eastlake, in an excellent pamphlet, after refuting the charge, adds: "With regard to intelligence, Moreton has not been behind the rest of the world, and we have here two good Board-schools, a Unitarian being chairman of the Board and J.P. for the district. As to the Unitarians, their congregation in this town was founded by the Rev. Robert Woolcombe, M.A., on his leaving the living of Moreton at the passing of the Act of Uniformity in 1662. He remained the minister until his death, in 1692. In Murch's History of the Western Churches it states that 'many of Mr. Woolcombe's congregation adhered to him, and provided a place of worship, in which they assembled till prevented by Acts of Parliament. They then met as often as they could in secret, sometimes in neighbouring woods; but their adversaries watched them, and procured informers to swear against them. On several occasions they were brought before magistrates, had their houses rifled, and their goods confiscated; and to complete all, their worthy minister, who had been expelled five miles from the town, was seized while paying a visit to his flock, and committed to prison.' A still older, but small, congregation of Unitarian Baptists in this town amalgamated with the Unitarians in 1818. Mr. Murch, in 1835, thus concludes his brief history of these two congregations: 'All are united as worshippers of the only living and true God, and disciples of His beloved Son; all profess the simple faith of the early Christians: To us there is but one God the Father, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus.' I need not here enter into an explanation of the fact that Unitarians do not deny the need of an atonement, but only deny the false ideas of the atonement which are generally prevalent."

"KISS AND MAKE IT WELL."

In childhood's day, when little hurts
To little hearts seem great,
When strength is small to bear the pangs
We suffer, soon or late;
One medicine lulls the pain to rest,
And checks the sobs that swell,
When, cradled on the mother's breast,
'Tis "Kissed to make it well!"

Ah! many a hurt of later life
Might seek the medicine too,
That on the sores of weary strife
Can leaves of healing strew—
Then wounded souls in whispers low
Their aching grief might tell,
And hearts that break with hidden woe,
Be "Kissed to make them well!"

How oft it is that bitterest tears
By trifling jests are stirred,
And friends whose love has stood for years
Are parted by a word—
Long months of loneliness steal by,
Made dark as by a spell—
Ah! foolish ones, the medicine try
And "Kiss and make it well!"

How oft, the friendships seem the same,
And smiles beam bright and warm;
Some unsuspected thought of blame
Just breaks the perfect charm;
And day by day the jarring thought
Rings forth love's funeral knell:
Speak out, before the harm is wrought
And "Kiss and make it well!"

Alas for him, who never knew,
And evermore must miss
A mother's love so sweet and true,
A mother's healing kiss;
Who yearns with longings strange and deep
When sorrows surge and swell,
That some kind heart might hear him weep
And "Kiss and make him well."

Some day I know, when life is o'er
With all its sin and pain,
When earthly love can soothe no more
Weak heart and weary brain,
We all shall find a deeper rest,
And, as our grief we tell,
Like babes upon God's ample breast,
He'll "Kiss and make us well."

H. W. H.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

MR. GASKELL'S JUBILEE.

WE have already informed our readers, in general terms, of the arrangements being made for the commemoration of the Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL'S Fifty Years' Ministry. The soirée will be held on Tuesday next, the 15th instant, in the magnificent rooms of the Manchester New Town Hall. We have been favoured with a sight of the programme, which is as follows:—At half-past five, coffee in the Sculpture Gallery. At half-past six, after a performance on the organ by Thomas Rawson, Esq., the chair will be taken, in the large hall, by R. N. Philips, Esq., M.P., who will open the special proceedings of the evening, with an address. H. J. Leppoc, Esq., will then present an address to Mr. Gaskell on behalf of the Cross-street Chapel Congregation, and G. Stanley Darbishire, Esq., will make a presentation of a gold service, the gift of the congregation. E. C. Harding, Esq., will present Mr. Gaskell with a sum of money for the foundation of a scholarship to bear Mr. Gaskell's name.

Addresses will then be presented on behalf of the numerous bodies with which Mr. Gaskell has been so long and honourably associated:—The Provincial Assembly represented by Rev. G. H. Wells, Rev. H. E. Dowson, Mr. Harry Rawson; Manchester New College, Rev. Charles Beard, Mr. J. S. Ainsworth; Unitarian Home Missionary Board, His Worship the Mayor of Manchester, Mr. Harry Rawson, Rev. H. E.

Dowson, Mr. Francis Nicholson; Manchester District Unitarian Association, Rev. G. H. Wells, Rev. Chas. T. Poynting, Mr. John Dendy, jun.; Trustees of the Memorial Hall, the Mayor of Manchester, Mr. Robert Nicholson, Mr. Harry Rawson; Lower Mosley-street Schools Committee, Rev. S. A. Steinthal, Mr. W. E. Nanson, Mr. Richard Wade; Lower Mosley-street School Teachers, Dr. H. J. Marcus, Mr. John H. Reynolds, jun.; Manchester Domestic Mission Committee, Rev. S. A. Steinthal, Mr. R. D. Darbishire, Mr. E. C. Harding; Students of the Home Missionary Board, Messrs. Wm. Mason, Joseph Harrison, William C. Bowie; Unitarian Sunday School Union, Rev. J. T. Marriott; the Literary and Philosophical Society, Professor H. E. Roscoe. Mr. Gaskell's reply will follow the presentation of addresses.

During these proceedings the united choirs of Cross-street, Strangeways, and Upper Brook-street chapels will give several anthems and glees, conducted by Mr. Thomas Rawson, and there will be an interval for conversation.

The gold service has been manufactured by Messrs. Elkington and Co., at whose premises, St. Ann's Square, Manchester, it will be on view until Tuesday afternoon. It consists of the following pieces:—A centre-piece and four compotiers or fruit stands, all of solid silver, richly gilt and ornamented with fruit and flowers in relief, interspersed with raised scroll work. A new feature in these compotiers is that the ordinary glass dishes are dispensed with, the fruit being placed directly upon the burnished gold surface, producing an exceedingly rich effect. There are also a pair of antique vases, oxidised and gilt in relief, on richly ornamented plinths. These vases are reductions from the celebrated antique in the British Museum, and hence are called the museum vases. A silver parcel-gilt jug, with two goblets, in a handsome morocco case, one of the choice examples prepared by Messrs. Elkington and Co. for the Paris Exhibition, most elegant in outline, they possess a rare richness and delicacy of finish, the combination of chased and engraved foliage on a dead gold ground being decidedly novel and beautiful.

We are requested to state that the committee meets every afternoon at half-past two, and on Monday and Tuesday in the forenoon, also, in the Chapel rooms, Cross-street, and will be happy to supply any information that may be desired as to the soirée.

The subscriptions to the Commemoration Fund now amount to £2,136 6s. 9d. Numerous applications for tickets having been made, the Committee regret that for want of space they are obliged to decline all except those of subscribers.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

MODERN SCEPTICISM.

THE Sheffield Church Congress stands out from and above its predecessors in several important respects. First of all, in its inclusiveness. In the gatherings of former years the Broad Church element was studiously ignored—at least, its presence was not sought. At first the Congresses were, mainly, meetings of the Evangelical party. Then the Ritualists, shrewdly noting what leverage they gave with which to move the public mind, took heartily to them, went up in large numbers, and impressed upon them such a character that the Evangelicals began to feel alarmed. For two years at least the question "Shall we go" has seriously perplexed the soul of Canon RYLE and his friends. Happily, they have gone, and have provided an antidote for every Ritualistic dose of poison; and by the large charity of the Presidents both bane and blessing have been sanctified. But an assembly of Evangelicals and Ritualists was assuredly not a Church Congress—only a Congress of Church parties. To have a really representative Congress the Liberal element must be included. Accordingly the Congress has widened with the times, and now, what was chiefly a society of two sections of the Church promises to become an organ of the Church as a whole. It is a distinct advance in the representative character of the Congress that its platform has included, along with the Hon. C. WOOD and Canon RYLE, Mr. LLEWELLYN DAVIES and the newest-fledged heretic upon whom Lord SHAFTESBURY a little while ago fired a harmless shot, Mr. BROWNLOW MAITLAND.

In the second place the spirit of the Sheffield Congress was admirable. But two or three years back the tone of the Church militant was loudly heard in the midst of discussions on such "burning questions" as the right of the Anglo-Romanists to a place within the Establishment. The Evangelicals are none the less decided in their antagonism; the Anglo-Romanists none the less determined in their policy; both parties none the less resolved to make war upon each other to the end. But the air of this year's Congress seems to have had, for the time being, a soothing effect all round, and to have enabled parties fundamentally opposed to discuss their several attitudes to the Church in a tone that contrasts favourably with the "cries of dissent," "confusion," "disorder," and "uproar" that were frequent of old. It is something gained to the cause of common sense, and to the ultimate settlement of difficulties, when men, holding essentially irreconcilable theologies and pursuing hostile lines of action, are thrown together and influenced in any way to exercise towards each other a little of the charity that beareth all things. May we hope that the Sheffield gathering will mark a new era in the history of Church Congresses, and that henceforth they will welcome the representation of Broad Church principles equally with those of High and Low, and will manifest a growing spirit of tolerance?

Among the discussions was one on "Modern Doubts and Difficulties in Relation to Revealed Religion." The papers were no new contribution to the subject; but they were thoughtful and earnest productions, pervaded by the recognition that the scepticism and agnosticism of to-day must be met in a very different spirit from that of the old-fashioned contempt and scorn and flinging of epithets. Professor WATKINS, of King's College, urged that "doubts and difficulties in relation to revealed religion" were now prominent in two currents of thought. There was the tendency to deny the possibility of any revelation from God or of any true knowledge of Him; and there was also the tendency to regard Christianity as one among many revelations. The first or agnostic tendency had its fascination for minds with the brooding sense of the mysterious, and for minds devoted to one line of thought and reading. But Professor WATKINS held that agnosticism could not bring the rest which is an indestructible yearning of the human soul. Its gospel was a bitter mockery of mankind, and the hearts of the people, in their need and sorrow, longing for a Father's comfort and support, could not offer their sacrifice of prayer and praise upon the altar of an Unknown God. The higher nature of man, which asserts itself at intervals, is the source of salvation from agnosticism. The second tendency, Professor WATKINS admitted, was powerful in the present generation, and certain to be more powerful in the next. But he regarded it as fraught with danger. To grant a difference only of degree and not of kind between the teaching of CHRIST and that of CONFUCIUS or of BUDDHA was "to grant too much or too little. Christianity is true or false. If false, it has no right to the place they [the Comparative Religionists] assign to it. If true, its very essence is the claim to be the revelation of God to man in the person of JESUS CHRIST." The weakness of this argument lies in the entire absence of any definition of what Christianity is. The affirmation that "Christianity is true or false" seems to imply that Christianity must be taken to be a compact system of doctrines which differentiate it from all other religions, and which must be received or rejected, in toto. Such an assumption is untenable, and with its untenableness Professor WATKINS's argument is reduced to a nullity. Comparative Religionists would never concede to Professor WATKINS that Christianity is a body of divinity utterly marking it off from all other historic religions, and to be accepted as wholly true, or repudiated as wholly false. Denying his premises they deny his conclusions. They maintain that Christianity is the culmination in the life of CHRIST of principles that are universal, rooted in the nature of man, and that, in incorporating the essential truths of other religions, it becomes the most perfect exhibition of spiritual truth, and is enriched with an expansiveness and adaptability that fit it to be the religion, not simply of races, but of mankind.

Mr. BROWNLOW MAITLAND took ground different from that of Professor WATKINS. He argued that the cause of Christianity had suffered as much from the injudicious arguments used in its defence as from actual assaults. Particularly had it suffered from the unwarranted manner of exhibiting the idea of Revelation, and of the Bible as its inspired record. Revelation had been taught as a communication of pure, unmixed, perfect truth, all on a level throughout, of equal value and authority in every part for all time, and everywhere bearing the full stamp of the heavenly and divine. The Bible had been taught as a storehouse of perfect, unmixed truth, every part being equally divine, equally authoritative for all ages, equally on the highest level of moral and spiritual truth. But this teaching about Revelation and the Biblical record of it was widely at variance with facts. Its result was to prejudice the inquiring sceptic against the Bible, and to give him an easy retort on those who were pressing its claims. But let Revelation be presented as of a progressive and conditioned character, let "the honest sceptic be familiarised with the idea of the Divine Spirit informing and guiding mankind from age to age, as they were able to bear it, condescending to their ignorance and superstition, sanctioning for a time a lower morality in order to lead them to a higher, content to use imperfect representations of Divine things so long as more perfect ones were above their capacity, and thus slowly and patiently to guide them through long ages of twilight till the true Sun rose in the fullness of His light and glory; and then the sceptic will come to the Bible prepared for what he will find there, and its mixed character and progressive development will no longer be a stumbling block to him, or seem to him a contradiction of its claim [a claim, we remark, which the Bible itself nowhere makes] to be indeed of God." Whether we may think Mr. MAITLAND's presentation of Revelation and of the Bible an adequate solution of the difficulties of the honest sceptic or no, we gratefully accept it as a presentation which a few years ago a clergyman could not have hinted at without being assailed as an unbeliever. It is substantially the argument of the paper in Essays and Reviews for which Dr. TEMPLE was denounced with all kinds of opprobrious names. It is the argument elaborately built up in Ruling Ideas in Early Ages, by the late Canon MOZLEY, Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford, from whom it has been received by some as a cleverly-constructed way of escape from the perplexities of the accepted Divine origin of the Old Testament, by others as an instance of the special pleading which creates more perplexities than it relieves, by others again as an example of subtle and insidious error. That such an argument should have been offered to the Church Congress, and that the theologian who offered it, notwithstanding the brand fixed on him by Lord SHAFTESBURY and the Record, should, as the Guardian reports, have "thoroughly gained his audience," and have "sat down amidst warm acknowledgements," assuredly marks most clearly the growth in the clerical mind of the consciousness of a more rational conception of the Bible as a necessity in the presence of the theological doubts and difficulties of the age.

THE SARATOGA CONFERENCE.

THE eighth "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches" assembled in the Methodist Church at Saratoga, U.S., on the 17th ultimo. The Christian Register says that the Conference is declared by acclamation to be not only the largest, but in every respect the most satisfactory national gathering the Unitarians have ever had. "The old jealousies and confusions seem to have disappeared; we know ourselves as 'one body in Christ, and every one members one of another,' nor can we longer doubt that 'where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.' . . . The religious chord was deeply touched by Mr. Herford's opening sermon," a condensed report of which we have given in another column.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

CURTIVS.

AN OLD STORY RE-TOLD.

ONCE upon a time there was a very noble city which had had many enemies, but had mastered them one by one. Little by little it had grown in grandeur and importance, until its inhabitants were so proud of it they boasted that it was the finest city in the world, and they thought themselves the bravest and strongest people that ever lived under the sky.

In the centre of this city there was an open space, which served the double purpose of a market and a court of justice. Now, notwithstanding their bravery, it happened that their city was besieged and destroyed by a host of barbarians, whom they despised. It took some time and trouble to get rid of those barbarians again; but this conquering people did get rid of them at last, and you may be sure they took no small pains to rebuild their city. When it was all new built, they were prouder of it than ever. But now the strangest of all possible wonders came to pass, and terrified them out of their wits. Their beautiful market-place was shaken by an earthquake, and cleft asunder in the middle, where a great rent was made, that remained open like a yawning mouth. You can imagine their consternation if you think how you would feel if the old market-place in your town were suddenly to gape open and swallow up all the stalls. They were a very superstitious people, and had odd sorts of notions about the vengeance of their gods. When they saw this great gaping hole in their market-place they thought the gods must be very angry with them, and some of them said at once that it was all because their restless politicians had ventured to change certain ancient (rather stupid) laws.

Now what follows in my story is very extraordinary, but it is quite as true as a story needs to be. All the wiseacres came round the hole and shook their heads, and then went away looking more knowing than ever, but without filling up the gap. Not but they suggested how it might be done—some of them even wondered that such a fuss should be made about it. Why, they said, the thing is simple enough; all they need do is to get some soil and throw it in. One asthmatical old gentleman was especially pleased with an idea. "The gods angry!" he said. "Nothing of the kind. The fact is they want to do us a good turn. It is I who ought to know. I have been toiling up and down these plaguy old hills all my life, and here at last comes the very thing that is wanted. The fact of the matter is, the gods have given us a chance of making a decent level place out of the most provoking up and down city that ever was erected. It will just take all the hills of Rome to fill up that big chasm." Many other suggestions were offered, such as throwing an arch over it. Others thought it would be a good thing to turn a canal from the river into it, and so have a good supply of water in the middle of the town. At the barber's shop, which stood close by, all these projects were talked over, and the barber commended each and objected to each according to the humour of his customers. The city council, however, would not take action upon any of them. They had not, they said, carts or labourers enough in their employ to get as much soil as would fill the hole. Much to the disgust of the asthmatical old gentleman, they treated his request as both impious and impracticable. As for arching it over, they said that was out of the question—the hole was at least four times as wide as any arch that could ever be made. Besides, it began to be seen that it was slowly growing wider and wider! Upon this, all the council came and looked at it. Then they held two or three special meetings, and had several dinners, but after all they could make nothing of it. Things were really getting desperate.

Meanwhile the priests, who were a most important body, had assembled together, and in a very careful and curious manner had consulted the gods. Some watched the flight of the ominous birds; others anxiously observed the sacred chickens as they were engaged picking up their morning meal. By accurate observations made in these and other ways they came to a conclusion, which was announced as follows: "That the gulf could only be filled up by casting into it the most precious thing in Rome."

It was most satisfactory to have this decision, although it still left a serious question—What was the most precious thing in Rome? The wiseacres had their say again. The asthmatical man was greatly delighted. He maintained that what the gods had declared proved him to have been right all along. What did they all (except asthmatical folks like himself) boast and make more fuss about than their Seven Hills? But somehow the authorities did not see it.

The gravest senators were in a state bordering on despair when a young man presented himself at the door of the Senate-house, and said that he had discovered the most precious thing in the city. They asked him what it was; but he only struck his breast and went away. The crowd heard what he said, and followed him. He went home, and there he dressed himself in a complete suit of armour, went for his horse (he was a noble young Knight), and rode forth. The crowd came with him, straight on, in the direction of the gulf. His dearest came also—his mother and his wife, with her babe. Marcus Curtius rode on, deaf to their cries. It was quite plain what he was going to do. The senators stood in his way. They were indignant at his impious arrogance.

"Young man," said one of them, "will you mock the gods? Do you presume to think your life the most precious thing in the city?"

"Mine, or that of any man who dies for Rome," replied Curtius.

The senators and the crowd stood back. He put spurs to his horse, looking right before him. In plunging forward the horse's shoulder brushed the face of the asthmatical man, who, gasping for breath, uttered a curse on the young knight as a conceited idiot. Next moment a flash of lightning and a clap of thunder; and the gulf closed above the hero. The thunder-peal rolled and brattled off to the left, the gods thus declaring that they accepted the sacrifice.

The Romans built an altar over the spot where Curtius leapt into the chasm. And as offerings were laid upon it, they taught their children that of all things in this world the most precious is a brave man who gives himself for others. C. H. O.

BELFAST.—Mr. D. Thompson, late hon. sec., of the Manchester Sunday School Union, has been appointed Missionary of the Belfast Unitarian Missionary Association, and will enter upon his duties at Hopeton-street, Belfast, and at Carrickfergus on the first Sunday in November.

LEEDS: HOLBECK.

DOMESTIC STREET UNITARIAN CHAPEL.
SPECIAL SERVICES.

ON Monday, October 7th, a special service was held for the purpose of inducting the Rev. R. Wilkinson, who for seventeen years has laboured as Domestic Missionary, and has been invited to become the first minister. The congregation on the same occasion established itself on an independent footing, it having since its establishment been a mission chapel in connection with the Mill Hill congregation, Leeds. There was a crowded audience, amongst those present on the occasion and at the subsequent proceedings being the Revs. Chas. Wicksteed, B.A., Wm. Blazeby, B.A., Chas. Hargrove, M.A., M. S. Dunbar, M.A., G. Barmby, F. E. Millson, Jno. Fraser, Chas. Wellbeloved, Dendy Agate, B.A., David Scott, John Thomas, B.A., J. W. Braithwaite; and Alderman Luccock, Councillor Mathers, Messrs. Jas. Lupton, Geo. Buckton, Frank Lupton, Durnton Lupton, Henry Lupton, John Craven, &c.

Prayer having been offered, the Rev. CHAS. WICKSTEED proceeded to address the new minister. He said the charge was a most important part of the service, especially when the minister appointed was young, inexperienced, and untried. In such cases both he and the congregation (which was always more or less a fluctuating one—the old dying, the new coming, children growing up into young people, and young people to maturity) were in need of, and ought both to benefit by, the counsels of older ministers, who had had a longer and wider experience of those relations, than those addressed could possibly have had. But the present case was different, and the occasion in many respects a peculiar one. The congregation was not only a regular one, like others, but they were on the point of commencing a new career; their minister was not only a regular one, like others, but he, too, was about to be put in a new relation to them. Starting thirty-four years ago as a dependent congregation—the offspring of the generous and philanthropic feelings of the congregation of Mill Hill chapel—they now wished to undertake their own responsibilities, and manage independently their own concerns. Nothing would be more inappropriate, and indeed presumptuous, than to think of addressing words of council or advice to Mr. Wilkinson—a man of so much experience, energy, and force of character, with a knowledge of his congregation and its needs, of the neighbourhood and its requirements, far greater than any comparative stranger like himself could be supposed to have. His only words, therefore, to Mr. Wilkinson would be words of brotherly, or, if he would, fatherly sympathy, in reference to a work which they both had at heart, and which they both thought of the greatest importance to their fellow-creatures and to the world. Mr. Wicksteed then spoke of the labour of the ministry, and said they could not conceal from themselves of what a peculiarly high and pure and privileged character their work was. Mankind felt it to be so, and they were anxious by making some sufficient provision for the ministry to save them from the necessity of other work, and to keep them to their own. For if he entered on their ground they felt it not only to be a trespass, but a wrong. If he was successful, there was felt to be an incompatibility and unsuitableness in his success; and if he was unsuccessful, it must lead to all kinds of distractions, if not degradations. His position set him free from most of the entanglements, rivalries, and misunderstandings of the secular life around him. He walked this earth a highly privileged being, bound in love to his church and people, and in piety to God. Mr. Wicksteed then proceeded to enumerate the advantages accruing to the minister and the congregation from the change. The former would assume his proper position amongst the clergy of his district of all denominations, and the congregation achieve its financial and ecclesiastical independence. His discourse was concluded by urging both minister and people to renewed endeavours. Let the services they had partaken in prompt them to humility, to gratitude, and to renewed effort, and to that prayer to which, while they cried out in it “Who is sufficient for these things?” there should come an answer in the voice of our dear Father from Heaven, “My grace shall be sufficient for thee, and my strength shall be made perfect in thy weakness.”

Mr. JOS. WINPENNY offered the right hand of friendship to Mr. Wilkinson, on behalf of the congregation. He said that upwards of seventeen years ago he took a part in inviting Mr. Wilkinson to Holbeck. The congregation had never regretted the step, and he trusted Mr. Wilkinson had been himself satisfied. There was now a new phase of their religious life, for that day they became a congregation, and they welcomed him as its minister. They welcomed him to its pulpit without asking him to subscribe himself to any article of faith. They would welcome him to their homes, and they were prepared to give and receive sympathy and assistance. In conclusion, he was sure the history of the past was a guarantee of a satisfactory and successful future.

The Rev. C. HARGROVE also, on behalf of the ministers, offered the right hand of friendship to the Rev. R. Wilkinson, on the new position his congregation and himself had attained. He expressed his sincere sympathy and congratulation on what he considered an auspicious occasion.

Mr. JOSEPH LUPTON went through the same ceremony on behalf of Mr. James Kitson, jun., who was not present. He was sure that when he said that Mr. Wilkinson and the congregation had his sincere congratulations and heartfelt sympathy they would believe that he was speaking the sentiments of all their friends.

Mr. WILKINSON said that day was certain to be a very important one to him. The words that had been addressed to him in the name of the congregation came to him with great force indeed. Mr. Wicksteed's words, although they were not addressed to him as a young or inexperienced man, yet they were to him words of great weight, and a great encouragement and hope. In his new position he trusted to be able to give more of his time and labour to the work of the congregation. He felt sure that success was in store for them in the future, and that the work of that day would be brought to a successful issue. It was his heart's desire that a pre-eminent success might attend their undertakings, and he was confident that he would not be disappointed. In conclusion he thanked all for their kind expressions and goodwill.

The Rev. W. BLAZEBY, B.A., then addressed the congregation. He said it was a very interesting and encouraging event that they had met to recognise, viz., the religious enfranchisement of a congregation, and of a voluntary dedication of the congregation to the free worship and undefined service of God, and concluded by hoping that God in His holy spirit would render their worship fervent, faithful, and successful, and their congregation united and helpful in Christian brotherhood.

Several hymns were then well sung by an efficient choir, and the benediction having been pronounced, the services terminated.

A public tea was afterwards held in the school-room, to which a large number of persons sat down. At a public meeting subsequently the chair was occupied by Mr. Councillor Mathers. There was a large attendance, and on the platform were most of the gentlemen whom we have already enumerated.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, gave a brief resumé of the history of the movement during his connection with it, from boyhood. They remembered, at least most of them did, when they landed first in a small chamber down by Holbeck Bridge. Their services there were indeed very primitive, but still they progressed, and in time it became necessary to have a new building, the result being that the chapel in which they held their services that afternoon became their temple. (Hear, hear.) It both served the purpose of chapel and school, and gave them a new “lease of life.” Time progressed, and again it was found necessary to make an addition to their chapel in the form of a separate Sunday school—(applause)—and about three-fourths of the room in which they were then assembled was built. They still increased in numbers in school and chapel, until 1870, when further improvements, as many of them knew, were still necessary, and were carried out. And now, he said, they were assuming the name Unitarian specifically, in no dogmatic spirit, but to indicate to the world the general position they held theologically. He spoke of the question of science and religion, and said it appeared to him that the great subject of the future was not so much between orthodoxy and free inquiry, as the reasonableness of a belief in a God or no God. The Chairman concluded his address by wishing the future progress of the new congregation, to be a success.

Mr. JOSHUA DIXON proposed the following resolution: “That the warmest thanks of this meeting be accorded to the Rev. Charles Wicksteed, B.A., and the Rev. Wm. Blazeby, B.A., for their valuable aid in conducting the services of the day.”

Mr. JAMES HIRST seconded the proposition.

The Rev. CHAS. WICKSTEED, in responding, paid an earnest tribute to the memory of the late Mr. Darnton Lupton, whose sons, he was pleased to see, were taking so active a part in the movement. He was glad to see so many young people following in their father's footsteps, and when such fathers were as the late gentleman he had referred to, was their children were doing wisely and well in imitating them.

The Rev. WM. BLAZEBY, in responding, made special reference to the advisability and needfulness of continued attendance at church, and impressed upon young people the necessity of attending their religious duties above all others.

Mr. LILEY proposed the second resolution: “That the congregation desire to express their sincere gratitude to the many past and present subscribers and friends, who for upwards of thirty-four years have, by their constant kindness and material assistance, maintained the usefulness of the Holbeck Domestic Mission.”

Mr. JNO. SMITH seconded the resolution, which was supported by Mr. WESTERMAN, and carried.

Mr. JOS. LUPTON made a suitable response to the remarks of the Rev. Chas. Wicksteed, and concluded by reiterating his best wishes for the success of the movement in Holbeck.

The CHAIRMAN stated that he had received a letter of apology from the Rev. J. E. Carpenter, regretting his inability to be present, but wishing the chapel and its new position all success; and one from Mr. Grosvenor Talbot to the same effect.

A resolution was then moved by the Rev. C. HARGROVE, seconded by the Rev. G. BARMBY, and supported by the Rev. F. E. MILLSON and Mr. GEO. BUCKTON, as follows: “That the hearty good wishes of all our kindred churches be accorded to the Rev. R. Wilkinson and his congregation, in the altered position to which they have attained as an independent congregation; and that God may prosper them in all their undertakings for the wellbeing and religious elevation of all who come within the influence of their church.”

The resolution was carried unanimously, as were also the two following: “May we uphold the principle of free inquiry in theological thought, and hasten the time of communion between all religious bodies, irrespective of creeds and dogmas.” “Success to the Sunday schools and the allied institutions of the church.”

A vote of thanks to the Chairman, proposed by Mr. JOSEPH LUPTON, brought the proceedings to a close.

MIDDLETON.

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. B. GLOVER.

ON Saturday week a farewell tea-party was held at Old Road Chapel, Middleton, in connection with the removal of the pastor, the Rev. B. Glover. A good number sat down to tea. In addition to other presents already bestowed upon Mr. Glover, a very handsome solid silver inkstand was contributed by the congregation, and the teachers and scholars showed their esteem by subscribing for a splendid pair of marble and ormolu vases. The inkstand bore the following inscription, in neat characters: “Presented to the Rev. B. Glover, by the congregation of Old Road Chapel, Middleton, September 28th, 1878.” After tea Mr. T. B. Wood occupied the chair, and was supported on the platform by the Rev. W. Wiggins, Messrs. E. Brookes, J. Hilton and S. Lawton.

The CHAIRMAN said some eight years ago it devolved upon him to offer to Mr. Glover a greeting of welcome to that congregation, and it so happened that he had now to take a prominent part in that gathering of leave-taking. It was certainly much more agreeable to welcome a friend than to bid him good-bye. When Mr. Glover came they were simply tenants of that building. However, with his assistance, and he might say mainly through his exertions, they had been able to purchase the building, and in leaving it he left it under an open trust, and he might say practically free from debt. (Cheers.) His pulpit ministry had been acceptable, and the good results might be seen in the increased number of the congregation, and in the steadfastness of those amongst whom he had laboured. Since Mr. Glover came they had lost a good many friends, but as their pastor said the other evening, they had lost none by desertion. (Cheers.) It was in Mr. Glover's labours in the Sunday school that their ground of hope rested, and those who had joined in the morning service after the close of the work of the school would appreciate the simple and practical addresses given to the children, and feel deeply impressed with the assurance that in the breasts and minds of these young people before them the good seed had been sown, the fruits of which would afterwards appear.

Mr. J. HILTON then made a presentation on behalf of the school. They wished their pastor God's blessing. He was entitled to their attachment, and he prayed that He who ruled the affairs of all men would go with him, and His choicest blessings attend him in his walks in life.

The Rev. W. WIGGINS (Baptist) said on the one hand he was sorry that he was the only Nonconformist minister present besides Mr. Glover; on the other hand he felt glad that he had made an effort to come, in order that he might express his esteem for their minister. Although Mr. Glover differed from him in points of doctrine, he (Mr. Wiggins) felt at home on that platform—(hear, hear)—and thought it was best to sink these things, and not say they were the only right people in the world. They ought not to be narrow-minded, and then there would not be so many religious feuds in the world. (Cheers.) He felt sorry that Mr. Glover was going, and prayed that God in His infinite goodness would follow him, as he had followed His people of old, with His light and His cloud. He also prayed that the church might obtain the services of another man who would be their guide and counsel, and dispense the things of God to them, that, as a Christian church and congregation, they might not only continue to exist, but that they might continue to grow, and become very prosperous.

Mr. W. H. JONES regretted very much that Mr. Glover had to leave them, one reason being that he did not know another minister of the gospel with whom he had been brought into such close contact. In the various pursuits he had followed he had received the advantage of Mr. Glover's kind assistance. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. J. TIORPE (Commissioner) also regretted exceedingly that Mr. Glover was obliged to leave them. For the last eight years they had found Mr. Glover a very useful man, not only in religious, but also in political life, and it was a great pleasure to the speaker to see a minister take such wide views as Mr. Glover did.

The Rev. B. GLOVER replied that although he had been accustomed to the platform for nearly forty years, he must confess that that night he felt an embarrassment that he did not remember experiencing before. It was the third time in his ministerial life that he had had to leave a congregation, and he had there felt himself so thoroughly at home, and his work had been so exceedingly happy, that he went away with the feeling that he had received nothing but kindness from them. They had not one single hard word, or one single quarrel to remember. They had spent the eight years of his ministry there in useful and peaceful work, and it was because of that that they felt the separation. There was only one motive for the change. They could not tell how much during the last few winters he had suffered, his life at times being a positive pain to him. As God knew his heart, he was making the sacrifice of that change with no other motive than with the hope that his health might be benefitted. He could not help taking the opportunity of thanking Mr. Wood for the uniform kindness and help which he had in every way received from him. They had, as a church, every reason to be proud of their president, who took such deep interest in the welfare of the place. In conclusion, he thanked the president (Mr. Wood), Mr. Brookes, Mr. Lawton, Mr. Hilton, and his friends right and left, and urged the young people present to keep up their attendance at the chapel, and grow up good men and women.

Mr. LAWTON then addressed the meeting, calling upon them to show by acclamation their thanks to Mrs. Glover for her labours amongst them during the past eight years.—Mr. BROOKES (Commissioner) seconded the proposition, which was carried with hearty acclamation.

The Rev. W. WIGGINS then offered prayer, and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman, on the motion of Mr. E. BROOKES, seconded by Mr. LAWTON.

On Sunday night the Rev. B. Glover, at the close of his discourse, referred to the fact of his removal, and to the very happy way in which he and his congregation had worked together during the eight years of his ministry. Both the rev. gentleman and many present were visibly affected during his remarks. It might be added that many members of other congregations of the town were present, out of respect to Mr. Glover.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.

WELCOME TO THE REV. WILLIAM STODDART, B.A.

On Sunday, September 29th, the anniversary sermons were preached at Stockton-on-Tees by the Rev. R. Spears, of London. On Monday evening a welcome soirée was held. About 200 persons met in the chapel after tea to give a reception to the Rev. W. Stoddart, B.A., late of Cambridge, who has preached with much acceptance for three months at Stockton. Mr. Stoddart formerly belonged to the Independents, preached for some time among our Unitarian churches as a layman, and received a few months ago a unanimous invitation to the Stockton pulpit. The meeting was opened with a hymn and a very appropriate prayer, offered by the Rev. Dendy Agate, of Scarborough.

Mr. HEAVISIDES, the secretary, read several letters from ministers and laymen of the district who were not able to be present, but who felt much interested in the welcome to Mr. Stoddart, and the prosperity of the congregation at Stockton.

Mr. ROBSON, chairman, now said: We are assembled here this evening to welcome the Rev. Wm. Stoddart, our newly-appointed minister. From the short time that he has been amongst us we have had opportunities of noticing his many qualities, and I think he is in every way well fitted to carry out the work which he has undertaken. Let him see that you take an interest in his work. He will need the support and co-operation of all the members of this church. One of the many and best ways of supporting him is to come here as often as you possibly can. That will strengthen his hands very much, and enable him to do the good work we all desire to see carried out.

Mr. J. J. CLEPHAN welcomed Mr. Stoddart on behalf of the congregation, and concluded by saying to him: In extending to you the right hand of fellowship I give you a warm welcome on behalf of the members of this congregation, and I am sure their prayers go with me when I say that I hope you may be blest with physical health and spiritual strength to perform your duties, and that you may feel yourself happy and comfortable amongst us.

The Rev. W. LUTHER SPENCER, of Middlesborough, addressed a few words of welcome to Mr. Stoddart, on behalf of the ministers of the district. There was, he said, a dark as well as a bright side to a Unitarian minister's life. A Unitarian minister was to some extent an isolated man, and had to dispense with the sympathy and help of other ministers and friends outside his own denomination. The bright side was a consciousness that in battling for Unitarianism he was advancing a high, a true, and holy faith.

Mr. BELL, speaking on behalf of the laymen of the district, said it was no use lamenting and bemoaning the difficulties which might be in Mr. Stoddart's path, for these were intended to draw out what Robert Collyer termed the clear grit within him. He wished him every success and happiness.

The Rev. R. SPEARS was called upon to speak to the congregation. He said he must in the first place remind them that much as we honour all our ministers, we still more highly honour our married ministers, and so we would accord to Mrs. Stoddart, as well as to Mr. Stoddart, a hearty welcome to Stockton. He had spent three of the happiest years of his life at Stockton. The minister that followed improved on him, and was here five years; and then his friend the Rev. W. Elliott did better still—he had left a noble monument of his twelve years' service in this large and suitable chapel in which they were met; so then, if Mr. Stoddart kept up the ratio of progress, they would all be aged people, if alive, before another minister would be called to this pulpit. Mr. Spears then gave the charge to the congregation, and dwelt chiefly upon the importance of regular attendance at public worship. He also addressed the congregation on the vast importance of illustrating in their daily life, in their homes and business places, the religion they professed on the Sunday. The world needed at the present time the practice of a gospel life as much or more than what is called preaching the gospel.

The Rev. ALFRED PAYNE, in delivering the charge to Mr. Stoddart, said a minister's duty was said to be not only in his pulpit, but as a man among men he had also to bear his share of the duties of life as a citizen, a politician, and social reformer. That was true, but the special functions of a minister were twofold—that of the duties of the pulpit, and that of visiting the homes of his people as their guide, counsellor, and friend. In the pulpit he was by word and action to inspire his people and lead them to worship God, and fill their hearts with a living desire to draw near to Him in earnestness of spirit. This might be done by undertaking all the duties of the pulpit in the true spirit of devotion. It was the fault of Nonconformists to esteem too highly the sermon. In his opinion the singing of the hymns, the uttering of the prayers, were of equal if not of more importance, because they lifted the heart into communion with the All-wise God, the unseen Spirit. Then the duty of a minister in visiting his people was very important. By coming into contact with them in their daily lives he gained an insight into the joys and sorrows, the hopes and fears, and the temptations and victories which attended their lives; and was able, in consequence, to offer words of sympathy and counsel, and knew better how to speak the right words of comfort and encouragement from the pulpit. This part of a minister's duty should receive his special attention. In conclusion, as a brother minister he trusted Mr. Stoddart would be worthy of the high vocation upon which he had entered, and from his heart he wished him God-speed, and hoped the blessing of the Dispenser of every good and perfect gift would attend him.

Mr. STODDART said that he felt grateful for the kindness which he had received during the three months he had been among them. There was a warmth of heart among the people of the north which infused itself into their religious life, so that it could not be said that Unitarianism in the north was cold and lifeless. The first time he preached at Stockton he felt there was a spiritual power among them, and he was encouraged in this work by the fact that there were in the congregation a number of young men zealous for the propagation of the truth, and ready to help in every good work. He rejoiced to know that in the past the voice of that church had not been unheard in Stockton, and he hoped in the future it would be heard still louder. He was anxious, above all things, that, as a church, they should take their part in the battle with vice and misery; and, in order to reach the lower strata of society, he would suggest that they should open a room in the lowest part of the town, and on Sunday afternoons he, attended by a band of young men who were ready for the work, would go, armed with suitable tracts, among the poor, gather them into this room, and give them short addresses. In time this plan might be supplemented by classes for their mental improvement. By such means as these we should reach the people, and be enabled to elevate them above their present state of degradation. Unitarianism has a grand future before it. In the past we have been working underground, we have been excavating, and at last we have discovered that the solid rock is the ancient of days, the Eternal God, and now we have to build up the glorious edifice of the Universal Church. There is much superstition and bigotry to fight against, but the truth must prevail. He felt the greatness of the responsibility which he had undertaken, but he trusted in a power greater than his own—in God, who can give wisdom and eloquence; and he must also ask for their sympathy, their prayers, and their forbearance. He should not forget that the special sphere of religion was not only to direct and impart a higher tone to morals, but also to develop the religious faculty in man, whereby he became conscious of the presence of God, and was saved from Atheism. There was also in the soul of man latent spiritual powers, the cultivation and development of which would mark a fresh epoch in the history of the world's evolution. Creation was groaning in travail to-day, endeavouring to bring forth a nobler race of men. The Golden Age of Peace, when men should become as gods, holding communion with the Father of Spirits, is yet in the womb of futurity, but the time shall come when the Christ-Spirit shall descend on men, and they shall truly be the sons of God.

Mr. Councillor WALTON proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Spears for the sermon, and said it was owing to the services of Mr. Spears, at Stockton, some twenty years ago, that he was a member of their church.

Mr. TALINTYRE said he had much pleasure in seconding this vote, as he was much in the same position as Mr. Walton.

Mr. SPEARS thanked them for this resolution, and said he was glad that Mr. Stoddart was about to encourage the young men of his congregation to go out and preach.

Mr. HALL thanked the ministers of the district for their presence at that meeting, and read some extracts of dreadful sermons that had been recently preached, to show them how much need there was that they should all do their best to preach a better gospel.

Mr. FREUND seconded the motion.

The Rev. DENDY AGATE, of Scarborough, said this was the fourth welcome meeting he had attended during the last few weeks. He had not been specially commissioned by any assembly or convocation of ministers in the Yorkshire district to welcome Mr. Stoddart into the neighbourhood, but he had no doubt but that he might safely do so on their account. There was need of more union and brotherhood amongst them. Like the conies, they were a feeble folk yet; by being united they would become powerful.

The meeting was also addressed by the Rev. W. J. Taylor, of Barnard Castle, the Rev. R. C. Smith, of South Shields, and Messrs. Clephan, Wright, Hall, Fawcett, and others, of Stockton.

The choir sang very beautifully several pieces of music during the evening. The chairman and others received hearty votes of thanks, and the Rev. Alfred Payne closed the meeting with prayer.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

AINSWORTH.—On Sunday evening last, an extra service was held in the schoolroom. After brief devotional exercises, conducted by the minister, Mr. John Hayes, Radcliffe, read a paper entitled "One Hundred Scriptural Reasons for Unitarianism," a brief address was also given by Mr. John Spencer. The service was closed with hymn and benediction. The attendance, in spite of unfavourable weather, was very encouraging.

ALLOSTOCK.—An unusual event took place at this chapel last Sunday. Allostock is one of the chapels that was built under the "five mile act." It is just five miles from Knutsford. For some years the congregation has been very small, but lately it has considerably increased. The Rev. J. B. Lloyd determined to venture upon a harvest festival this year, and a collection for the sufferers of Abercane. No harvest festival had ever been held there, and no collection had been made within the memory of man. About 120 persons assembled at the time of the service, which was conducted by the Rev. J. B. Lloyd. The Knutsford choir sang an anthem, "O sing unto the Lord." The collection amounted to £6, which has been forwarded to the relief fund at the Manchester Town Hall. The experiment was in every way a success, and offers encouragement to further effort. All will be glad to notice that the interest in these old causes is reviving.

BLACKPOOL.—On September 29th, the Rev. A. B. Camm delivered a discourse on "Modern Unbelief v. Christian Rationalism," in reply to a lecture in Blackpool by the Rev. J. G. Rogers, B.A., on the same subject. There was a large congregation. The discourse is reported at considerable length in the Blackpool Herald. Towards the close Mr. Camm said: "Nobody wanted to destroy the real Jesus. It was the theologic Christ that men reject. They did not wish to discern Jesus, but to vindicate the humanity to which he belonged. They need not be discouraged if some sneered because they tried to be thoughtful. It was too late in the day to frighten young men with the dangerous tendencies of men of thought. They need not be afraid of doubt, or proud of heresy, but the religion they professed was not their own till they had thought it ought for themselves. Coleridge says, 'No one believes a doctrine unless he has first doubted it.'"

DEWSBURY.—On Sunday last, through the generosity of friends, the pulpit, reading-desk, chancel, and communion table were adorned with flowers and fruit. The congregations, both at the morning and evening services, were very large, at the latter the church being so full that discomfort was felt from the oppressed heat. The minister of the church, the Rev. David Scott, preached in the morning, from Romans, xvi., 23, "Quartus, a brother;" and in the evening from St. Matthew, xiii., 39, "The harvest is the end of the world."

GLASGOW: SOUTH ST. MUNGO-STREET.—On Friday last, a soirée was held to inaugurate the commencement of the evening lectures for the winter season. A good number of members and friends sat down to tea. Mr. Mitchell occupied the chair, and on the platform were Revs. F. W. Walters, Glasgow, W. Bennett, Paisley, and Messrs. Robertson and Porter. A most enjoyable evening was spent with speech and song, indicating an absence of that coldness of feeling frequently attributed to Unitarians.

HALIFAX: NORTHGATE END SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The half-yearly tea meeting of teachers, elder scholars, and friends was held on Tuesday evening, October 1st, when M. E. B. Stott read a paper on "The Influence of the Sunday School." The paper aimed at showing, by contrast, the superior moral influences of well-conducted Sunday schools. The essayist considered first the school services, pointing out the necessity of punctuality, promptitude, and distinctness, and he compared these with their opposites. He spoke of the influences of well selected hymns, and with the prayers showed the value of this part of Sunday school work. Teaching as part of our labours was treated in a forcible way, for, while showing the need for real preparation for the work, the worth of the personal character of the teachers was thrown into bold relief. The value of all knowledge was enforced, and here the writer alluded to the introduction of subjects that the teacher himself might be specially interested in, had made his own, and told to the class. The paper dealt briefly with the outside influences of the school, pointing out the charm of some hymn or tune, or some scientific taste carried by the scholars to their homes; but above all, the practice of kindness and forbearance at home, sometimes, perhaps, learnt at school. Mr. Stott concluded by saying that the number of self-sacrificing workers was a test of the success of the Sunday school. The paper was listened to with much interest, and hearty thanks were given to the author of it. Some discussion followed.

HALIFAX: NORTHGATE END CHAPEL.—On Sunday, October 6th, the congregation had the great pleasure of a visit from their old friend Mr. Wicksteed, who preached in the morning. In the evening, the Rev. Charles Hargrove preached. The offertory was for the choir fund. The congregations were large, and the collection was £20.

ABERDARE.—On Thursday, the 3rd inst., the English Unitarian congregation held their annual tea party. The chapel was tastefully decorated for the occasion by some of the ladies of the congregation. Nearly 300 sat down to tea. In the evening a public meeting was held, at which the choir performed very creditably the cantata entitled "Peace and War." Some selections of music were also given on the piano. Altogether a very pleasant evening was passed. Votes of thanks to the ladies, the singers, and the chairman concluded the meeting.

DUNFERMLINE.—Last Sunday the mission was fairly successful, a slight increase in the forenoon, and in the evening it was calculated there was an attendance of 300. A Sunday school of 45 scholars has been gathered. Some signs of local help are showing themselves.

LIVERPOOL: NORTH END MISSION.—On Sunday last the annual flower service was held in the afternoon, when the chapel was decorated with flowers and evergreens. Addresses were delivered by Mr. J. L. Haigh (a teacher), Rev. H. W. Hawkes, and an American visitor, who arriving in Liverpool the night before, straightway sought out the nearest mission school, being himself a teacher. He expressed himself highly pleased with the singing and conduct of the children, and his visit was much appreciated. It would be a helpful service if travellers would often show their interest in this friendly way. In the evening an anniversary sermon was preached in connection with the Order of Good Templars, to a large congregation.

LIVERPOOL: BEAUFORT-STREET.—On Sunday the 6th October, we held our annual thanksgiving services, which were well attended; that in the morning was conducted by the Rev. F. Summers, and that in the evening by the Rev. Thomas Jones (formerly one of the ministers), when very appropriate discourses were delivered. The chapel was very prettily decorated with corn, leaves, fruits, flowers, and vegetables, forming a collection well calculated to excite feelings of thankfulness in the minds of all present. The articles given were on the following day distributed to the deserving poor of the neighbourhood.

LIVERPOOL: RENSHAW-STREET CHAPEL SOCIETY. An open meeting of this Society, being the first of the session, was held in the Mount Pleasant school-rooms on Wednesday, October 2nd, and was very numerously attended. The room presented a very pleasing appearance, the tables being covered with flowers. Books were lent by kind friends, while at one end three oil paintings (one a Royal Academy picture) were exhibited. The proceedings were interspersed with music by various friends. Some members of the Liverpool Vocalist Union kindly favoured the meeting with their presence, singing glees in a very excellent manner. Towards the close of the evening Mr. McGuthrie, chairman of the committee, drew attention to the programme of the session, especially to two lectures—one to be delivered on November 6th by Dr. Rickard, on "The Gems of Sculpture," illustrated by excellent photographs of some of the finest works of art in the world; and the other, to be delivered on December 4th, by the President, Rev. Chas. Beard, B.A., on "Alexander Pope." Both of these meetings will be thrown open to anyone who is either a regular or occasional attendant at the chapel services. Mr. Beard then, in a few words, expressed the pleasure he felt in being able to meet so many of those whom he saw before him on the Sunday, in these social gatherings. He noticed among them that evening the Rev. C. J. Perry, recently inducted minister of Hope-street Church. In their name he offered Mr. Perry a very cordial welcome amongst them. The Rev. C. J. Perry briefly responded, and after the usual vote of thanks the meeting closed.

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—The opening soirée of the Mutual Improvement Society in connection with the Sunday school was held on Saturday last, October 5th; H. B. Wilkinson, Esq., presiding. After tea the Secretary, Mr. N. A. Pethybridge, read the report for the previous and first session, 1877-8, which stated that the number of members last year was 31. There had been eleven meetings during the session, the average attendance at these meetings being exactly 30, and the highest attendance on any night 36. Owing to the kindness of a number of members and friends an exceedingly pleasant evening was spent in a choice selection of music, both vocal and instrumental. At the close a cordial vote of thanks was given to the chairman and ladies and gentlemen who had taken part in the evening's entertainment.

PADIHAM.—On Sunday last, October 6th, the annual Sunday-school sermons were preached in Nazareth

Chapel by the Rev. H. W. Crosskey, F.G.S., of Birmingham. In the morning Mr. Crosskey delivered a very suitable address to the parents, teachers, and scholars. In the afternoon and evening his subject was the Kingdom of God upon earth. The congregations were very large and attentive. Notwithstanding the bad state of trade, the collections of the day amounted to the sum of £66. 9s. 8d.

PRESTON.—On Wednesday evening, October 2nd, a tea meeting was held in the schoolroom, Percy-street, for the distribution of certificates to those who had successfully passed the examination held under the auspices of the Manchester District Sunday-school Association, in April last. The Rev. J. G. Evans presided, and stated that 35 scholars had been taught in the subjects for examination—26 were examined and 23 passed. In the young women's class, which was taught by Mrs. Evans, five had gained first-class certificates, and two had obtained second-class certificates, the subject being "Health in the House." In the first class of girls—teachers, Misses Dalby—two had gained honours, one had got a first-class and three had obtained second-class certificates in the subject "Gift of Life." Mr. Elliott's young men's class, in the subject "Geology," had carried away three honours, four first-class and one second-class certificates. The scholars in the boys' first class, taught by Mr. Barnes, had secured one first-class and a second-class certificate in "Lessons in Religion." Mr. Jesse Pilcher and the Rev. Charles T. Poynting addressed the meeting, after which a vote of thanks to them was passed with acclamation.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—On the 2nd inst., the first entertainment in connection with the Mutual Improvement Society was held in the schoolroom. Over sixty members and friends were present. The proceedings consisted of musical and literary selections, glees, songs, &c., and were highly successful, the musical portion was assisted materially by some Wesleyan and other friends, who kindly volunteered their services, and whose help largely contributed to the enjoyment of the evening. The Rev. R. C. Smith presided. The membership of the Society is steadily increasing.

SHEFFIELD: UPPERTHORPE.—On Sunday, September 29th, harvest thanksgiving services were held in Uppertorpe Chapel, Sheffield. The decorations were elaborate and tasteful. The corn-field supplied its ample sheaves, the moorland its heather. The vegetable world was well represented alike in variety and bulk. The simplest flower stood side by side with the luxuriant production of the conservatory, while grapes and fruit of various sorts added their own special richness to the whole. Each side of the chapel was festooned with ivy and dahlias, as were the gas-brackets and tops of the pews. In front of the organ gallery were the words, "God gave the increase," the letters being formed with wheat, on a crimson ground, overarching which was a beautiful festoon with pendant. The stained glass window on each side of the pulpit presented a beautiful appearance, every available part being decorated with the choicest flowers and fruit, together with the hop-vine and foliage and flowering plants. The whole of the decorations reflected great credit on the skill and industry of Mr. C. R. Webster and a band of helpers. Appropriate anthems were ably rendered by the choir, and the hymns were heartily joined in by the congregations, which both in the morning and evening were good. The service in the morning was conducted by the Rev. G. Knight, the sermon being founded on Psalm cxlvi., 5, 6; that in the evening by the Rev. Eli Fay, the text being I. Corinthians iii., 21, 22, 23. The services throughout were very impressive. Collections were made for the poor. The services were continued on Monday evening, when a forcible address to young men was given by the Rev. G. Knight. The flowers were afterwards sent to the Jessop Hospital and the Infirmary.

TAIVISTOCK.—A harvest thanksgiving service was held in the Abbey Chapel on Wednesday evening, October 2nd, the sermon being preached by the Rev. Lindsey T. Badcock, from Mark iv. 28-29. The decorations were appropriate and beautiful, imparting a truly festive appearance to this ancient edifice. In the centre of the Communion table was an exquisite design of moss, lichen, berries, ferns, flowers, and fruit, among them being some fine wild strawberries, picked by a lady of the congregation; on each side were vases of choice flowers, grapes, &c. The text, "Thou crownest the year with goodness" in white letters on a crimson ground, and bordered with moss, corn, and flowers, the work of another lady, hung on the north wall. The choir sang a sanctus, an anthem, "Praise the Lord," and appropriate hymns. Considering the service was held on a week evening, when many find it difficult to be present, there was a good congregation.

TROWBRIDGE.—The resting-place of the mortal remains of the late Rev. S. Martin has just been marked by a fitting testimony to the respect universally felt for his memory. It consists of a massive block of polished grey granite of cruciform shape erected over his grave, and surrounded by a low palisading of iron embedded in pennant stone. Carved on the front of the base of the huge block is the following inscription: "In loving memory of Samuel Martin (for fifty years pastor of the Congregational Unitarian General Baptist Church of this town), who died 27th July, 1877, aged 75 years. This monument is erected by the family and the congregation. 'I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him against that day'—II. Timothy i., 12."

WHITCHURCH.—In connection with the Free Christian Church, the annual harvest festival was celebrated on Sunday, October 6th. In the morning there was a good congregation, and a sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Carey Walters. In the afternoon a children's service was held, and an address delivered by Mr. Walters on "Sowing and reaping, or the lessons of the tares and wheat." In the evening, notwithstanding the downpour of rain, the church was filled to overflowing, and numbers were unable to gain admission. The musical part of the service was good, and morning and evening the anthem "Thou visitest the earth" was sung. Offertories amounting to £10. 14s. 3d. were taken, in aid of the church debt and of the relief of the sufferers from the Abercane colliery explosion.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, just to hand as we go to press.

W. L. M.—Received.

ROMANS IX., 5.

To the Editors,—May I add a few words to the paper on this verse, inserted in the Unitarian Herald of the 20th September last? I learn from a friend that Professor Ezra Abbott, in his edition of Norton's "Statement of Reasons," 1856, has an elaborate note in which he speaks of the presence of a stop after σάρκα in the Codex Alexandrinus (A), and in the Codex Ephraemi (C). The Vatican (B), he leaves it to be inferred, is without the stop—which, as I pointed out, is not the case.

I will also take this opportunity of explaining the sense in which I used the words "heretofore unnoticed." They referred only to the statement of evidence in the critical editions, and the meaning should have been more carefully expressed, seeing that the presence of a stop in C is noticed by Tischendorf. But this editor, although he gives a stop in his text, does not appear to do so on manuscript authority. Indeed, he expressly excludes A and B from among the few MSS. which he mentions as containing a stop. Dr. Liddon (Bampton Lectures, vi., iv., 2) is, of course, strangely wrong in stating that the earliest manuscripts which contain this punctuation are two cursives of the 12th century.

G. V. SMITH.

COMING WEEK.

BLACKPOOL.—On Sunday, at 10 45 and 6 30, the Rev. A. B. Camm will preach. On Wednesday, recognition service.

BLACKLEY.—On Sunday, at 11 and 6 30, harvest sermons by the Rev. Jas. McConnochie.

LONDON: HACKNEY.—On Wednesday a social meeting of the London District Association, when the Rev. T. W. Freckleton will read a paper on "The use of Liturgy in public worship."

SCARBOROUGH.—On Sunday morning, at 10 45, and in the evening at 7, the Rev. David Scott will preach.

STAND.—On Sunday, choir sermons, by Rev. Wm. Harrison.

STRANGEWAYS.—On Sunday evening, at 6 30, lecture by the Rev. J. T. Marriott, on "Money."

Marriages.

COPPOCK—MASSEY.—On the 8th inst., at the Parish Church, Stockport, by the Rev. Canon R. H. Browne, M.A., Russell Coppock, second son of the late Henry Coppock, Stockport, to Mary Worsley, eldest daughter of Thomas Massey, surgeon, Stockport.

TITFORD—JONES.—On the 2nd inst., at St. Augustine's, Highbury New Park, London, by the Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A., Arthur Titford, of 56, Leadenhall-street, to Eliza Mary, second daughter of John Jones, of 63, Grosvenor Road, Highbury.

Deaths.

PROBERT.—On the 27th ult., at the Brades, Oldbury, Sarah Probert, aged 74 years.

MASON.—On the 5th inst., at her residence, 65, Wright-street, Hull, aged 91, Ann, widow of the late Thomas Mason, of that town. Much respected by a large circle of relatives and friends.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

H. OGDEN & SON,
MANUFACTURERS OF
USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION.

AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, }
MANUFACTORY—CORNBROOK, } MANCHESTER.

PAPERHANGINGS.

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE:

93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS, PAINTERS' VARNISHES, &c., &c.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 20, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester 5 and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street, above said, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, October 11, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—912.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doing and Saying	372
Scottish Notes	372
Books and Authors	373
The Saratoga Conference	373
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	374
London District Unitarian Society	374
American Notes	375
Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Association	375
Beautiful Things	376
Commemoration of Mr. Gaskell's Fifty Years' Ministry	376
The Library Question	377
The Gaskell Commemoration Soirée	377
Our Sunday Schools	380
News of our Churches	381
Correspondence	382

CHARGE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Ten lines and under.....6d. a line.
After the first ten lines.....5d. a line.
For 6 consecutive insertions, a reduction of.....25 per cent.
" 13 " " ".....50 per cent.
Half column.....£1. 6s. 6d.
For all insertions of "Births" or "Marriages" a uniform charge of 1s.
Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

BIRMINGHAM: OLD MEETING HOUSE.
Dr. R. LAIRD COLLIER, of Boston, U.S., will preach on Sunday next, October 20th. Morning service, 11; evening, 6.30. Friends and strangers are cordially invited.

SCARBOROUGH: WESTBOROUGH CHURCH.—On Sunday next, October 20, Rev. DENDY AGATE, B.A. Morning (10.45), "David in Saul's Armour." Evening (7), "Not Ashamed of the Gospel."

BLACKPOOL: BANKS STREET.—On Sunday next, October 20th, the Rev. A. B. CAMM will preach. Morning (10.45), "The 'Cold Morality' of the Liberal Faith, and the Fervour of the Evangelical Creed." Evening (6.30), "A Chapter of Mental Autobiography; or, How I Became Free."

FRIARGATE CHAPEL, DERBY.—ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.—On Sunday, Oct. 20, TWO SERMONS will be preached in the above place of worship by the Rev. WM. HENRY CHANNING, B.A. Services at 10.45 a.m. and 6.30 p.m. Collections will be made on behalf of the Chapel Funds.

CHELLENHAM: BAYSHILL CHAPEL.
The Rev. WM. HENRY CHANNING will preach on Sunday, October 27th. Subjects: morning, "The All-Giver and Forgiver;" evening, "Christian Optimism versus Agnostic Pessimism." Service at 11 and 7.

EASTERN UNITARIAN MISSION.
The ANNUAL MEETING of the above will be held at Norwich, October 20th and 21st, 1878.

On Sunday, 20th inst., the Rev. ANDREW CHALMERS will preach the SERMON in the Octagon Chapel. Divine Service will commence at 11 o'clock. A Collection will be made for the Mission Funds. Subject of discourse: "The Special Mission of Liberal Christianity."
On Monday, 21st inst., a LUNCHEON will be provided at Mr. Cooper's, Bank Plain. Tickets, 2s. each. The cloth will be laid for 2 o'clock.

The BUSINESS MEETING will follow, commencing at 3 o'clock, the attendance of all subscribers being earnestly desired. Tea will be served in the Girls' Schoolroom, Calvert-street, at 5.30; after which, a PUBLIC MEETING will be held in the Boys' Schoolroom. Chair to be taken at 7.30. The Rev. T. L. Marshall will attend as a deputation from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

Ministers and Friends intending to be present will kindly notify the same as early as possible. Accommodation will be found for those residing at a distance.

JAMES FREEMAN, President.
GEO. A. STEVENS, Treasurer.
A. P. ALLEN, } Secretaries.
F. WOOLNOUGH, }

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the NORTH MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, will be held at Sheffield on Monday and Tuesday, October 21st and 22nd.

On Monday evening, at 7.30, a CONFERENCE will be held in the Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street. Paper on "Church Extension in large towns," by Rev. G. KNIGHT.

On Tuesday, DELEGATES MEETING at 10 a.m. Service in the Upper Chapel, conducted by Rev. C. D. BADLAND, M.A., at 12 o'clock. Sermon by Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD, B.A., of Bristol. Collection at 1.30 p.m.; tickets, 2s. 6d. The ANNUAL MEETING at 2.30 p.m. President's Address by Rev. ELI FAY, of Sheffield.

The Rev. P. W. Claydon, and S. S. Taylor, Esq., will attend as a deputation from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE.

The ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING of the members and friends of the Alliance will be held on Tuesday, October 22nd, 1878, in the large room of the Free-trade Hall, Manchester. The following are expected to take part:—His Eminence Cardinal Manning, Sir W. Lawson, Bart., M.P., Dr. Charles Cameron, M.P., Peter Rylands, Esq., M.P., A. M. Sullivan, Esq., M.P., John Barran, Esq., M.P., Benjamin Whitworth, Esq., M.P., Rev. Percival Grier, M.A., Rev. H. H. Pereira, M.A., Rev. Charles Garrett, Rev. A. Holliday (ex-president U.M.F.), Rev. Charles Hugh Mason, Esq., J.P., Thomas Gaffikin, Esq., (Liberal), Arthur Pease, Esq., Samuel Pope, Esq., and others. The chair will be taken by Professor RICHARD SMYTH, M.P. Admission by ticket. Gallery and body of the hall free. Chair to be taken at seven o'clock; doors open at six. Registered seats in the arena and gallery may be secured (1s. 6d. each) at the Alliance offices.

TAMWORTH.—THE UNITARIAN CHAPEL will be RE-OPENED by the Rev. D. MAGINNIS, of Stourbridge, on Sunday, the 20th inst., after considerable repairs, consisting of new roof and introduction of gas. Services at 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m.

Subscriptions in aid of the fund for the above, and for special efforts for the revival of the cause, will be thankfully received by the treasurer, Mr. John Lakin, Frezelev, near Tamworth.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

A COURSE of FOUR LECTURES will be delivered under the auspices of the above Society as follows:—

At the Luxembourg Hall, Dalston (opposite the railway station), on the following Wednesday evenings:—

October 23rd, 1878, "What has Unitarian Christianity done for the People?" By the Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS, of Liverpool.

October 30th, "The Religious Value of the Unitarian Faith." By the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS, of Leicester.

November 6th, "Religion for to-day." By the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., of Nottingham.

November 13th, "The Catholicity of Unitarianism." By the Rev. A. WORTHINGTON, B.A., of Mansfield.

On Thursday evenings, October 24th and 31st, November 7th and 14th, they will be delivered at the Town Hall, Hammersmith.

On Friday evenings, October 25th, November 1st, 8th, and 15th, they will be delivered at the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms, Southampton-street, Peckham.

To commence at eight o'clock.

STOCKPORT UNITARIAN CHURCH.

The ANNUAL SCHOOL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, October 27th, by the Rev. ELI FAY, of Sheffield; morning service at 10.45; evening service, at 6.30.

SCOTTISH UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETINGS of the above Society will be held in Edinburgh on Sunday, the 27th, and Monday, the 28th inst. The Rev. HENRY IERSON will preach the SERMONS on Sunday, in St. Mark's Chapel, Castle Terrace, and on Monday the Committee will meet at two o'clock, and the members of the Association at three o'clock, in the same place. A SOIREE will be held in the Church at 7 o'clock, Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND, president, in the chair.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines."

AN ADDRESS (in connection with the opening of the Session) will be delivered by the Rev. JAMES MARTINEAU, LL.D., D.D., at University Hall, Gordon Square, London, on Wednesday, October 30th, at 4 o'clock. The lecture is open to the public.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION FOR MISSIONARY PURPOSES.

A MISSION SERVICE will be held in CROSS STREET CHAPEL, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 6th, 1878, when addresses will be given by Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., Rev. CHAS. WICKSTEED, B.A., and Rev. Dr. SADLER. CHAS. T. POYNTING, } Hon.
JOHN DENDY, JUNR., } Secs.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, COLNE.

Subscriptions already advertised.....£1,492. 3s. £ s. d.

BURY.—
Rev. C. C. Coe.....3 3 0
Mr. J. Crook.....2 2 0
Mrs. Haslam.....2 0 0
Mr. A. Bromley.....1 0 0
Mr. W. Haslam.....1 0 0
Mr. L. Haslam.....1 0 0

Subscriptions, which will be duly acknowledged, will be thankfully received by Rev. W. Matthews, Derby-street, Colne, Minister.

Mr. James Hartley, Skin Yard, Colne, Secretary.
Mr. W. Spencer, Shackleton-street, Colne, Treasurer.
Mr. Harry Rawson, Market-street, Manchester.
Rev. C. C. Coe, Highfield, Bolton.
Rev. D. Walmsley, Manchester Road, Bury.
Rev. W. C. Squier, Whitefield, near Manchester.
Rev. H. S. Solly, Albert-street, Padham.

DOB LANE NEW CHAPEL.

The Building Committee earnestly appeal for further Subscriptions, to enable them to complete the building, protect the graveyard, and procure an organ. To accomplish this, they will require about £300.

This appeal is urgently presented by Halliwell Thomas, minister; Harry Rawson, trustee; Luke Pollitt, treasurer; John F. Allen, secretary.

The Committee thankfully acknowledge the following gifts and donations:—

£ s. d.
Stained glass window (from the daughters of the late Rev. James Taylor, a former minister), value.....70 0 0
A bell for the church (the gift of James Hopgood, Esq., London), value.....20 0 0
Mrs. Cookson, Stretford.....70 0 0
James Schofield, Newton Heath.....2 0 0
Wm. Ogden, Newton Heath.....1 0 0
Wm. Hall, Pendlebury.....0 10 0
William Branton, Newton Heath.....0 10 0
Mrs. Etchells, Chester.....1 0 0

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY BOARD, MEMORIAL HALL, MANCHESTER.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Alderman Wm. Kenrick, Mayor of Birmingham.....2 2 0
Rev. J. B. Lloyd, Knutsford.....1 1 0
Mrs. Seaton, Manchester.....1 1 0

In consequence of the great increase of students (now numbering 19), new subscriptions will be thankfully received by

E. C. HARDING, Treasurer.
18, New Brown-street, October 16th, 1878.

THE Rev. A. BUCKLEY, Elland, is open to SUPPLY VACANT and other PULPITS.

SHEPTON MALLET.—The PULPIT of Cowl-street Chapel, Shepton Mallet, will be VACANT after the 29th of the present month.—Applications to be addressed to F. Showering, Secretary and Treasurer.

A MINISTER is required for the chapel at Pudsey, Yorkshire, in connection with the West Riding Unitarian Mission Society: salary £150.—Applications to be addressed to the Rev. WILLM. BLAZEBY, B.A., Secretary, Rotherham.

HAROLD VILLA SCHOOL, HORSHAM.
The Rev. T. W. Scott has VACANCIES for a Few Additional PUPILS.—Terms on application.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD.
Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS RE-OPENED her School on Tuesday, September 24th.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, between the ages of 7 and 15: careful attention is given to the education, health, comfort, and happiness of the pupils.—For prospectus, apply to Miss Curtis, Westbourne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

Miss M. WAGNER (17, Helenenstrasse, Wiesbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the Instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Rev. Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Wellbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.

Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., of the Universities of London and Heidelberg, assisted by Mr. G. H. HENSON, University of London, thoroughly prepares Boys for college, the local examinations, or for business. The school possesses an unusually complete provision of apparatus and specimens for the teaching of science. No means is neglected which the experience of fourteen years has shown to conduce to the progress and interest of pupils in their studies. Good cricket ground and playground.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

NURSE Wanted for Four Children under eight.

Apply, in the first instance, by letter, to Mrs. Walton Gillibrand, Bowdon, Cheshire

A Gentleman, Scholar, and Popular Lay

Preacher of liberal Unitarian Views, is willing to give an OCCASIONAL DISCOURSE on Sundays or otherwise to causes needing help.—Address M. A., at Hammond's, stationer, 207, Walworth Road, London.

A Young Swiss Lady wishes for a Situation as GOVERNESS in a Unitarian family in London or the South of England: pupils over twelve years of age preferred: ten years' experience: excellent testimonials.—Address Miss M. Y., Helvetia House, 15, Powis Square, Bayswater, London.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock

Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE,

39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.
Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE

HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET, SCHOOLS.

THE BRITANNIA BUILDING SOCIETY

MEETS on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in every Month at Lower Mosley-street Schools from 7.30 to 8.30. FIVE PER CENT INTEREST ON LOANS.

Shares may be taken up and Loans Paid daily to HENRY PAULDEN, Secretary, 1, Cooper-street, Manchester.

PAPERHANGINGS.

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE:

93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS, PAINTERS'

VARNISHES, &c., &c.

DOING AND SAYING.

The Rev. J. C. Rust, preaching before Cambridge University, earnestly advocated efforts for reunion with Nonconformists in preference to alliance with foreign churches. The fact of there being Dissenters outside the church proved a failure or defect in the church. He reminded his hearers that Methodism had kept religion alive in the Southern and Western States of America, and that the first mission to the Hindoos was sent by the Baptists.

The eminent Roman Catholic prelate, Monsignor Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, died on Friday at the age of 76. Bishop Dupanloup, though he played a prominent part in French political and religious controversy for many years past, was not a Frenchman, but an Italian by birth. His writings and speeches were remarkable alike for their liberal tendencies, their devotedness to the Holy See, and their violent antagonism to the revolutionary party. Although he made a determined stand against the dogma of Infallibility, he made prompt submission to the decision of Rome once that dogma was proclaimed.

Here is an answer to the doleful lamentations concerning the disestablishment of the Irish Church which were recently so common. The new Bishop of Ossory, speaking for the first time in public since his elevation, at a missionary meeting in Dublin last week, said that it was gratifying to find that the disestablished and disendowed Church of Ireland had done more during the last nine years for the cause of Christian missions at home and abroad than it ever did in the memory of man. It was a proof that there was real life at the heart when they saw the blood sent out to the very extremities; and he trusted they would ever continue to maintain the reputation and glory of a missionary church.

According to a telegram from Rome, Cardinal McCloskey predicts a considerable Catholic revival in the United States. "Whole districts," his Eminence is reported to have said, "are disposed to join the Roman Church," and he is anxious that this outburst of religious zeal should be fostered. May not this be imaginary, the fruit of much zeal rather than a reality? It is too general to be dealt with. The Pope, it is said, is taking measures accordingly. From the same source it is announced that if the Anti-Socialist Bill should be passed by the German Parliament, negotiations between Germany and the Vatican will be immediately resumed "on a new basis." The probable elevation of the Archbishop of Bamberg to the cardinalate is mentioned.

"Little Mr. Haweis," as the Broad Church clergyman of Marylebone is always called, has taken St. James's Hall for another series of those special Sunday evening services of which he is so fond, that he may have a larger audience to whom to teach the newest news from the land of daring theological speculation. He proposes to preach four sermons upon matters of public importance. Nobody can object to that; but what is objectionable about these services is that Mr. Haweis advertises that reserved seats may be had at 8s. for the course. When a Ritualist parson charges a shilling a-piece for an admission to his musical entertainment, and his Broad Church brother follows his example by charging for the best seats from which to hear his sermons, we don't see how it is possible to talk very much about the "free gospel." Everything is commercial nowadays, even church-going.

At the London School of Medicine for Women in Brunswick-square, the lecturer at the opening of the session was Miss Edith Pechey, M.D., and Professor Aldis, of Newcastle, occupied the chair. Addressing herself to the medical missionary students, Miss Pechey appealed to them to make it a point of honour to go out to their future fields of labour with the best credentials possible, and to show that, while they belonged to two professions, they were determined to serve both faithfully. The highest medical skill was fully as necessary among the heathen as among Englishmen, and she trusted that, although Christian England was renowned in every land for her adulterated goods, it would never be said that the medical missionary was also an inferior article, and that the reproach which was made against missionaries more than 100 years ago—that they pretended to practice physic in order that, in destroying bodies, they might save souls—would never be repeated in their case.

The speech of Mr. Hutton, of the Spectator, at the Winchester Diocesan Conference, on Scepticism, a few days since, somewhat astonished the clergy who were present, and is being a good deal talked about, possible because there was a larger proportion of laymen present. When Mr. Hutton condemned the clergy for encouraging scepticism by teaching that all parts of the Bible were of equal authority, some perturbation was caused. The Bishop, however, was very outspoken, and said he would give anyone £100 who would show from the Bible that God meant to condemn the heathen to eternal damnation, a doctrine many of them were taught in their childhood. Mr. Hutton expressed a desire to see "Ecclesiasties" out of the canon of Scripture. He made a hit in saying that what he condemned, was the morbid cowardice of the clergy, not their morbid activity.

A long debate took place at the Oxford Diocesan Conference upon a motion made by the Rev. E. A. Knox, declaring that the teaching of Cuddesdon College was not entitled to the confidence of members of the Church of England. Sir Robert Phillimore moved that the subject be not entertained; and this was ultimately carried by a majority of 252 to 75. Mr. Knox not being even allowed to make a speech to explain and justify his motion. At the same time, it may be useful to remark that nothing is settled by an affair of this kind, except the relative strength of church parties in the diocese of Oxford. Cuddesdon College still stands, and everybody, friend and foe alike, knows pretty well what it is. Dr. Pusey boasts in the public prints of the number of confessions which he hears: Canon Liddon and Canon King pursue their work of conversion among undergraduates: the teaching and ritual in many of the Oxford parish churches are only not Roman. It is pointed out that of the 353 clergymen educated at the College no less than 263 have publicly adhered, in one way or other, to the teaching of the extreme Ritualists, while eleven have seceded to Rome. Perhaps the High Church party, whose energies of offence never seem to tire, is destined to win at last; but, then, what will that large part of the nation say which objects to sacerdotalism, less on religious than on social and political grounds?

The moderate speech of M. Gambetta at Romans has been severely criticised in the Spectator and other papers on the ground of its hostile references to the Roman Catholic priesthood. It is not surprising that our able Broad-Church contemporary should dissent from M. Gambetta's views on this subject. If the latter are extreme, so also are the former. The Spectator, indeed, goes so far as to advocate giving all beneficed cures some civil appointment to eke out their small incomes, such as registrarships and postmasterships, of which, if they were disloyal to the Republic, they could be deprived. M. Gambetta went so far as to lay it down that one object of the Republican party must be to abolish the regulation under which students for the Roman Catholic priesthood are exempted from service in the army. This may be fairly regarded as a needless interference with the Romish Church and for this he has been severely criticised. But, according to the full report of his speech, M. Gambetta confined his proposal to withdraw the exemption of Seminarists to those intended for the religious orders, leaving it still in operation with respect of those intended for the parish priesthood.

A Mr. Porter, a Wesleyan, has been having a correspondence in the local paper at King's Lynn arising out of some default of the Mayor and Corporation in "turning up" at the Wesleyan Chapel. A Churchman, justifying this, supposed that Mr. Porter would draw the line of fellowship not only at the "Roman Catholics but the Unitarians also." To this Mr. Porter, a strong opponent of the Unitarians, replied, "I do not exclude the Unitarians. I need not say that Unitarians are loyal subjects. In the ranks of the Unitarians are to be found some of the most accomplished and distinguished citizens of our land, and not a few of the most valiant and successful advocates of human freedom and the common rights of man. If I am asked, 'Do you agree with all their theological notions?' I reply, 'No.' But their most determined opponents must admit that Unitarian Christians teach a high morality, and that they are lovers of whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are of good report. It cannot be denied that in works of charity and mercy they are not a whit behind the very chiefest, and that in caring for the widow and the fatherless, the poor and the needy, the desolate, the outcast and the oppressed, they often set an example, which some who plume themselves on being a higher style of Christian would do well to imitate. Then, in the matter of Hymnology, I feel under the deepest obligation to many members of the Unitarian Church. No! I repeat, I do not exclude the Unitarians. There is the jubilant and heart-stirring Song of the Cross by the late amiable and accomplished Sir John Bowring, and also 'Nearer, my God, to Thee' by another Unitarian writer."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

EDINBURGH BIGOTRY.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT was advertised to deliver on Thursday week, in Grindlay-street Hall, Edinburgh, a lecture on "Christianity," which, together with one of Mr. Bradlaugh's on another subject, had been originally announced for the Music Hall. A number of people assembled at the appointed hour, but only to find the door of the Drill Hall closed, and a large poster intimating that, in consequence of the directors of both halls referred to having "refused to fulfil their contract," the lecture could not be delivered; but that another hall had been secured for Mr. Bradlaugh for next evening. The use of the Freemason's Hall had also been refused. The people of Glasgow and Paisley seem to be more liberal, as at both these places Mrs. Besant and Mr. Bradlaugh lectured in the Public Hall to good audiences. At Paisley Mr. Bradlaugh declared that he would deliver his lecture in Edinburgh if it should be in the open air.

PROFESSOR SMITH AND THE ABERDEEN PRESBYTERY.

THE recent discussions in the Aberdeen Free Presbytery on Professor Smith's case were livelier and more interesting than usual. When the Professor's views on Canticles came up for consideration, the question of the spiritual significance of that book was debated with the utmost freedom. Mr. David Mitchell, an elder who has been a prominent opponent of Professor Smith's opinions, pleaded that the allegorical character of Canticles had been to his personal edification as well as others in his position. The reply of the Professor, whose power of retort has been strikingly manifested on several recent occasions, was very effective. Referring to Mr. Mitchell's argument from personal experience, he said that no doubt it was of psychological interest, as showing that a rich and very peculiar type of Christian character might be nourished on the popular exegesis; but many excellent Christians had been produced in the Roman Catholic Church, and nourished on false and distorted doctrine. "The question was," he finished up by saying, "would a man, if he had Canticles put into his hands without permission to read something into it out of the New Testament, come to the conclusion that its language was literal or illogical?" By 25 votes to 22, the Presbytery declared that Professor Smith's views on Canticles were to be tolerated; by 25 to 17, that he was not guilty of holding "opinions which contradict or ignore the testimony given in the Old and New Testament as to the authorship of the Old Testament Scriptures;" by 29 to 9, that the charge of "disparaging prophecy" was irrelevant; and by 28 to 10, that the Professor's ideas regarding the angelic beings of the Bible were not deserving of condemnation.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

The Mystery of Pain, Death, and Sin, and Discourses in Refutation of Atheism. By the Rev. Charles Voysey, B.A. Williams and Norgate, London and Edinburgh.

IN a letter subsequent to the Nottingham debate, Mr. Armstrong recommends those who desire to pursue the line of thought which he unfolded with so much force of personal conviction, to read, among other books, this one of Mr. Voysey's. We heartily endorse the advice. Mr. Voysey, like Mr. Armstrong, speaks as one who believes; who is not unaware of the difficulties which hinder others from believing; nor has any word of contempt for those who do not see as he sees; but who would help them, if he could, to enjoy what is life's joy and comfort to himself. Mr. Voysey's style of thought, as well as of expression, will commend his works to the class whom he addressed. He is eminently clear and logical. If at the same time he recognises the reality of things not seen, he is ever ready to show the intellectual necessity which compels him to acknowledge them, and to answer intelligently objections which may be raised against his views. The book, as its title indicates, contains two series of discourses, the first discussing the problems of Pain and Moral Evil; the second, a defence and exposition of Theism. There is an exceedingly valuable appendix by Dr. Andrew Wilson, of Edinburgh, on the sufferings of the lower animals.

The Theological Review, October, 1878. Williams and Norgate, London; Johnson and Rawson, Manchester.

THE opening article gives an account of the curious part fulfilled by the "Goel," the Redeemer of Blood or Next of Kin, in Hebrew society, a personage who has his representative, as is here shown, in all the branches of the Aryan family, as well as among Semites. The first of a series of articles on "The Archaic Solar-cult of Egypt," is a valuable contribution to the popularised History of Religions, as is also an article on "The Religion of the Sikhs." Professor Edward Caird's "Critical Account of the Philosophy of Kant," is criticised by one who joins in the cry "back to Kant," and thinks Professor Caird and others quite wrong in representing Kant's teaching as obsolete. The article, however, which will most come home to the reader, is Professor Upton's sketch of "James Hinton and his Philosophy," founded on Miss Ellice Hopkins's Life and Letters of Hinton, and a volume of Selections from his MSS. printed for private circulation. We are made acquainted with a gentle and translucent spirit, rich with high thoughts, full of pity for the men and women whose lives are loveless and unlovely; one that speculated fruitfully in the deeper questions of physics and metaphysics, and who had engraven on his heart the thought "To make Whitechapel a little better." The book-notices include short reviews of Dr. Kalisch on Jonah; Sir W. Martin's Semitic Language; Rev. J. McNaught's Cœna Domini; The Parousia: a Critical Inquiry into the New Testament Doctrine of our Lord's Second Coming; The Theological Translation Fund's new volume; Baur's Church History of the First Three Centuries, vol. I.; and Hilda among the Broken Gods, &c.

Eymnau o Fawl a Gweddi. Wedi eu casglu a'u trefnu gan R. J. Jones. Aberdare: Jenkin Hawell.

THESE Hymns of Praise and Prayer, collected and arranged by the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., have at length appeared. They supply an urgent and a long-felt want of Welsh Unitarians. The hymnbooks hitherto used were out of print; and, pending the appearance of this collection, several congregations had recourse to small collections published in pamphlet form. The hymn books referred to were called respectively "Salmau Iolo" and "Casgliad Jones." The first of these was the work of Iolo Morganwg, the grandfather of the newly-elected president of the Iron and Steel Institute. "Old Iolo" was noted, in his day, not only for the excellency of his "psalms," but also for his extensive knowledge both of Welsh and of general archæology. "Casgliad Jones" was a compilation from various sources, the "psalms" of Iolo, however, occupying a prominent place. The compiler was the Rev. J. Jones, the father of the collector and arranger of the present volume, and his predecessor in the ministry of the Old Meeting House, Aberdare. The present collector has very wisely not confined himself within narrow limits. Nearly all the best Welsh hymnwriters are contributors. Translations from English writers further enrich the collection. The translations are from the writings of Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Barbauld, Addison, Cowper, Montgomery, Watts, Wesley, Dr. Newman, Tennyson, Gaskell, and others. The editor has taken the liberty of making a few alterations which he hopes are, at least from a Unitarian standpoint, improvements. The result of his labours is a collection of great usefulness and beauty. The "get up" is creditable to the publisher, though the price, on account of an expected limited circulation, is, necessarily, somewhat high.

Prayers and Ministries for Public Worship, in Six Services. Selected and arranged by Peter Dean. Walsall: James Anderson, 2, Sandwell-street.

MR. DEAN has done a real service by the publication of his Prayers and Ministries. With general good taste he has collected some of the choicest specimens of liturgical devotion, and thrown them together in a book which is conveniently small and cheap. We should have been glad to find in it a few more traces than we do of the Book of Common Prayer, which, to our view, in some respects still ranks at the front of all devotional literature. For our part, too, we a little miss the ordinary allusions to Jesus Christ, many of which, without offence or ambiguity, might be introduced into books compiled for the use of Unitarian and liberal churches. Surely the name of Jesus Christ, when properly spoken, has not ceased to adorn the pages of rational worship! Instead of the usual endings Mr. Dean selects such expressions as "For Thy love's sake"—not much to be admired we think, especially when often repeated. Conscious of these feelings chiefly as to what we do not find in Mr. Dean's little book, we turn to repeat our appreciation of the high and useful character of his actual work. The contents are divided into six parts, named the Ministry of Adoration, Aspiration, Thanksgiving, Duty, Contrition, Avoidance; all of which are so high in merit, that it seems almost unfair to select any one of them for special praise. The exhortations are short, pointed, and deeply reverent; and Mr. Dean has wisely suggested here and there the insertion of the minister's own prayer. The addenda, containing passages from the beatitudes of Jesus, from Buddha, Mahommed, &c., do not interest us equally with the services proper, though we like most of the sayings, and feel that good may have been done by appending them. But no portion of the book fails to breathe upon us the spirit of pure and earnest adoration; and we heartily commend it to the notice of our friends.

Messrs. Cassell Petter and Galpin announce a serial issue, in monthly parts, price 6d., of their Half-guinea Bible, under the title of The Crown Bible. We have already strongly recommended this Bible to our readers, and especially to Sunday teachers, as beautiful in type, full of useful and well-executed illustrations, and wonderfully cheap.

The Rev. Edward C. Towne, recently of Boston, U.S., and now of Manchester, has published some new biological discoveries, as an abstract of a larger work, under the title of The Causes of Life, Structure, and Species. Mr. Towne's conclusions embrace a supposed "complete material explanation of the hitherto mysterious problem of plant and animal vitality;" a disclosure of the method by which the forms of animals and plants have been made; and a view of the origin of species, which confirms evolution, but finds for it a method of natural creation, instead of Mr. Darwin's "by means of natural selection." There is embraced also in this interpretation of nature a correction of the current theory of the relation of the sun's energy to plant-life and to the energy of our fires. The views taken are not only anti-Darwinian in respect to the method of evolution, but they contradict most thoroughly the extreme materialistic conceptions of Hæckel and his school, which refer life to the properties of the matter of which protoplasm is composed; and yet they find a material explanation of life, and purport to make more sure than ever, because more rational and far less offensive, the doctrine of evolution.

THE SARATOGA CONFERENCE.

THE eighth "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches" assembled in the Methodist Church, at Saratoga, on September 17th. At the last meeting of the Saratoga Conference, two years ago, a discussion arose upon the wisdom of holding the Session of 1878 in some other locality—the acoustical properties of the Town Hall, where the meeting was held, being so faulty as to be a serious objection to gathering there again. While the discussion was going smoothly on, pro and con, a gentleman in the gallery—a stranger to most of the members of the Conference—addressing the chair, stated that he was the pastor of the Methodist Church of Saratoga, which had one of the largest houses of worship in the city, and that he felt authorised to say that if the Conference deemed it advisable to come to Saratoga in 1878, it would be welcome to the occupancy of that house during its sittings. The statement was then received with great applause. The Methodist was as good as his word, and the large building was put at the disposal of the Conference.

A devotional meeting, in which many participated, was held at nine o'clock, under the direction of Rev. Dr. Hosmer. At ten the PRESIDENT (Judge Hoar) took the chair, and said: Brethren and sisters of our household of faith, whose familiar countenances are so pleasant to my eyes, I am happy that it is my privilege to greet you at the opening of this interesting occasion, held under such favourable circumstances. Believers in the doctrine of divine love and human welfare, the gospel of charity, liberty, reconciliation, and righteousness, you have come together as the representatives of our denomination to strengthen each other's hands and encourage each other's hearts. You are all welcome, and the great company who have come up hither with you are also welcome to the influences and the privileges of the time. Our large spirit welcomes both wings of our churches. Everything that will bear us up we cannot spare. We welcome, also, even what I once heard rather wittily described as "feathers that the bird seemed to have dropped." We expect on this occasion that we are to receive instruction from the most thoughtful minds among us; that we are to deliberate upon the interests committed to our charge; and are to bear constantly in mind that the purpose of this meeting, as expressed in its constitution, is to the end of energising and stimulating the denomination with which we are connected to the largest exertions in the cause of Christian faith. Upon the accomplishment of that purpose let us now enter.

THE NEW THEOLOGY: ESSAY OF JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

Friends, brethren, sisters, I have been asked to read a paper to-day on the New Theology. In one sense there cannot be any new theology. But the best theology comes from the inflowing of new life, which renews, however, and transfigures the old forms. This new life springs from the old roots, works by the old methods, carries onward the old movements; it is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Theologian, in the original sense, meant one who is himself a word of God, one by whom God utters himself; and thus Orpheus, Mæuseus, and other prophets were called theologians. In this, the highest and noblest sense of the term, theology is older than religion, for it is the revelation or word of God from which religion is derived. In the lower sense, theology is only a word about God. But if we take it in the higher sense, it was from the beginning. The Word made flesh is no new revelation, but is that which was before Abraham, a portion of the Divine Word which is found in the creed of the universe, and without which nothing was made that was made. Christianity, therefore, understood in this sense, is no interruption of nature, but is in harmony with science which recognises the necessity of an unbroken, universal, permanent law. Now what science affirms of law, theology affirms of God, each following its own nomenclature. Where theology says "he," science says "it." Science, because it studies outward forms and external movements, prefers the neuter gender, that it may retain its hold on things; but theology, because it goes to the source and centre of the universe, must speak of this supreme essence as a person, since only in our own personal identity do we find the conception of a living central unity. All else that we know comes and goes, and can be divided into parts. If, therefore, we are to conceive of a real unity in nature, we are compelled by the very structure of our mind to conceive of it as a person. But why are we compelled to accept such a unity of being? it may be asked. May we not be satisfied with the wonderful play of phenomena, the variety of forms, the ever-changing appearances of things? We only know phenomena, it is said; separate phenomena, which are the facts; grouped phenomena, which are the laws. If this were true, theology, of course, would be at an end. But with theology science would, sooner or later, cease; for if we must regard creation as a drifting storm of confused phenomena, the deepest life of science, which strives for universal order and a central unity, would disappear. And this unity, which is the end of science, as of theology, unfolds itself evermore into variety. It follows a law of growth, of development, or, to use the latest term, evolution. The term is new, but the idea is old. Jesus gave a formula of evolution when he said, "I am not come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." Evolution is fulfillment. And so all real advance in theology must follow the law of evolution—not dropping the past but fulfilling it. The religion of Abraham and the patriarchs was fulfilled in that of Moses; the religion of Moses in that of Jesus. The religion of Jesus will be fulfilled, as it has been in the past, in some higher development of Christianity. Out of the Jewish form the universal form, taught by Paul, was developed; out of the mediæval form was developed that of Protestant orthodoxy. It is now undergoing a new transformation; but this transformation will not take place out of the line of development. It will be another stage of growth. [Here Mr. Clarke quoted from Herbert Spencer's Sociology, to the effect that, pernicious as have been the effects of the theological bias, those of the anti-theological may be more so; inasmuch as this latter bias not only leads to errors of its own, but sets up such a spirit of antagonism to the truth as well as the error of the past, as to obstruct the development of new truth which can only spring out of the old.] We may conclude, therefore, that the fundamental ideas of theology in the past will be found, in a higher form, in the theology of the future. The ideas of unity and variety, substance and form, cause and effect, the infinite and the finite, final cause, right and wrong, and the divine personality, will be left behind, but will be transfigured into something nobler with the advance of thought in all directions. These ideas hold every intelligent creature bound fast to the infinite mind. The same mighty power which holds physical nature bound into a perfect order reaches, by means of the moral laws, through the vast hierarchy of spiritual being, and maintains a moral order of the universe. The principles here laid down show that, according to the law of evolution, many objections to anthropology in theology will have to be relinquished. To think the Infinite Being altogether such a one as ourselves no doubt creates a theology destined to pass away. But there will remain a substance of human consciousness always in our conception of Deity. A God above ourselves, but like ourselves, is the only object of worship. The religions of the world, thus far, have gone along this line of development. The four hundred millions who worship Buddha worship a divine man. The Gods of Egypt were men and women. The gods of Greece and Rome, of Scandinavia, and of all polytheism, were intensely human. And equally so is the supreme being of the three great monotheisms. And why not? Is not the soul of man the highest fact in all our knowledge? If mystery is the essence of religion, what better type of mystery than the human soul? If the essence of worship is the adoration of power, what power do we know to be compared with that mental power which can grasp the universe, and whose creations are almost as unperishable as those of nature itself? When, therefore, we are told that we must not attribute design to the Deity, because it is making him like man, we may properly reply that this is a reason, so far, for doing it. Design, or the adapting of means to ends, is the universal attribute of manhood. Design runs up along the line of development from the rude building of huts or the carving of a club by the savage to the design of a Parthenon, an Apollo, or a tragedy of Hamlet. Why should the development of this faculty end here? Why may not the universe be the continued work of a hierarchy of intelligences reaching up towards the very throne of God? There is, then, the theology of substance and the theology of form—the first unchangeable, although it may become deeper and fuller with experience; the second advancing with advancing thought. The theology of substance, which is properly the knowledge of the infinite in the finite, may be increased but cannot be lost. It is the divine spirit in the soul; and, once seen, once felt, once known, always remains, either as comforter or reprover, either as lover or as judge. As regards the theology of substance, therefore, we reject the Agnostic theory, which denies to its object reality. All belief is relative, we admit; but knowledge, if there is knowledge, is absolute. It is no fugitive emotion or vague sentiment. The human race holds as firmly to the infinite as to the finite. Passing on to the theology of form, we find that this has risen through all past fetichisms and idolatries, polytheisms and monotheisms, to the Christian monotheism. This, again, has had its ritual theology, its ecclesiastical theology, its pietistic theology, and its theology of decency and propriety—the last teaching salvation by conformity to social customs. These theologies have all hardened into routine, have all in turn been frozen into creeds. The ancient systems are now falling into ruins. Orthodoxy is very different from what it was, and is so far advanced that we may say that the heresies of our Unitarian fathers have become the orthodoxy of to-day. The three Presbyterian churches of Scotland are saturated with heresy, which is constantly increasing in the Church of England also. It was openly asserted in one of the great ecclesiastical synods of the Church of England that no bishop or priest of that church believes the Athanasian Creed, which is nevertheless solemnly read in all the churches at least four times a year. The old orthodoxy, once so rigid, is fast disappearing in all the Protestant churches of the world. What is to take its place? The answer, according to the principles we have been considering, is not difficult. It will not be the work of anyone thinker, or any one class of thinkers, to make the new theology. As the religious life advances, the new creed conforms itself to that life, and again contributes to the advance of that life. Prophets and thinkers can help forward this progress, provided they work in the line of growth, but not otherwise. The new theology will therefore be a Christian theology, for the best religious life of the world is still advancing along the line of Christian development. The power of Christianity as a life in the soul, as a life in communities and nations, is by no means exhausted. Those who identify Christianity with any part of its past creeds, and see these in process or decay, may naturally prophesy a speedy dissolution of Christianity. But Christianity has outgrown one creed after another, and always as the life unfolds the new creed adapts itself to it. We ascribe too much importance to thought in supposing it can create life. The life is the light of men, but the reverse is not true. The creed of the future, like the creeds of the past, will be the expression of new life; and as Christianity is still a growing and an active power—a spiritual and moral—the new theology will necessarily be Christian. Christ will be centre of the new theology, as he is the central figure in human history. Finally, the new theology will not be an exclusive one; not building walls around the Church, as though it were a fort to be defended, but sending out labourers to reap harvests wherever the divine husbandman has scattered the seed. If God has shown anything to the world by Confucius or Zoroaster, by Buddha or Mohammed, by Socrates or Plato, the large hospitality of the coming theology will set wide open its doors to receive it. Thus shall Christ bring together in one all the scattered rays of truth, and his great Atonement will be more fully illustrated and understood.

In the discussion following the essay the Rev. Wm. ALGER said the neglect of the study of theology by all but theologians, was not owing to any lack of attractiveness in the theme itself, or to any lack of fitness in the faculties of men for the study of the theme, but to the characteristics which have been stamped upon theology by those who have appropriated it to themselves, and who have taught their systems exclusively to their own disciples, using them as a means of preserving their own prerogative of teaching. Not that this has been done consciously and deliberately. It has been due to the unconscious instinct of the class. The aim of the new theology was to remove those restrictive and repulsive characteristics, and to make theology as wide and wholesome and breezy as all outdoors, so that everybody will be attracted to study it. We must include among the recognised theological teachers not only the prophets who are the founders of churches, and the priests who are the defenders of churches, but also the other leading classes of human minds. When Spinoza was grinding glasses in the upper chamber of Van Ende, in the Hague, and at the same time by his thought working to make all things transparent to the human mind, to turn the satanic element out of creation and give us a universe all divine, he was a better theologian and more worthy of our study and reverence than John Calvin, holding Servetus in the flames with one hand, while he wrote his Institutes with the other. Dante and Shakespere were certainly inspired, if there be any such thing as inspiration. And we must not only recognise the philosophers and the poets, but also the great men of science. We conceive of God as the creator of the universe. That is one aspect in which we regard God, who is the subject of theology. Science is giving us the noblest illustrations of religious ideas, and is giving us the thinkable conditions for realising the old and yet for ever new conceptions of theology. We want to reconcile the two spheres, the objective and the subjective, the internal world of ratiocination, working out a body of reasoned truths from the data of reason itself, with the material universe revealed to us by our senses, aided by the reaction of reason within. The two are hemispheres of a perfect sphere and must come together. When theology is treated in this spirit it will have charm enough to make it a universal study. And it will have better forms of statement. The old theology was stated in terms borrowed from political science. The new theology must be cast into forms whose typical conceptions are borrowed from the methods of nature, in which we see the workings of universal law not interfered with by self-will in the subject or in the object. Further, the new theology will be more practical than the old, because it will be something that concerns us here and now. Mr. Alger went on further to illustrate what he considered to be the spirit and work of the new theology, which he identified with an enlightened Christianity.

Dr. STEBBINS said that the tendency to-day of all thought, and of all philosophy worthy the naming, is to give personality and consciousness to the infinite power that lies behind all matter. It is false, wholly false, that the progress we are making in philosophy and the sciences leads us to think of the Infinite One as an unthinkable, an unknowable, an unconscious power, and that prayer is to cease. When human beings cease to want, prayer will cease, and not before. We never shall be satisfied, philosopher or fool, to pray, "O thou great Inane! O thou everlasting Emptiness, thou wholly Unknowable, thou great Unconsciousness! We ask thee nothing, for there is nobody to ask; we ask no gift, for there is nobody to give anything. Amen." Now, it is affirmed that there are men who have so far lost themselves in the upper ether of thought, or what they call thought, as to believe that mankind will sometime pray in that fashion. Do you believe it? Never. Theology is bringing God nearer and nearer to every human soul, so that we feel the heart-throbs of the Infinite Father. And when trial, when sorrow, when distress, when disappointments come, when our fortunes are wrecked, then we look up with perfect confidence, and say, "Father, thy will, not our will, be done; for thy will is perfect wisdom, and thy ways are the outgoings of perfect love." And so we repose in the shadow of the wings of the Almighty. Yes; the new theology is bringing us near to God, God immanent in nature, not residing beyond the infinite spaces. This practical Atheism has almost passed away. God lives in all things,—

Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glow in the stars and blossoms in the trees,
Lives through all life, extends through all extent,
Spreads undivided, and operates unspent.

Nor is it true that the new theology is going to remove Christ out of the world, and make him less precious to the Church. There are a great many who feel that they have outgrown Christ—that they have got beyond Christianity. Why, they have not the slightest conception of the everlastingness and infinitude of the Christian religion. Christ's principles sweep the whole universe of thought; the love that he teaches us to cherish encompasses every intelligent being in God's creation. The religion of Christ is an all-comprehensive religion. It is based upon the needs of man and the outflow of the nature of God, and therefore never can pass away. Nor is it the tendency of the new theology to banish worship. Prayer is not a sign of dotage. It is not a superstition, or a meditation. It is a pouring out of a child's desires into the ears of an infinite Father. It is a lifting up of the soul in adoration of all that is best, and noblest, and purest, as we conceive it, in the character of God; and as long as we live we shall pray, for we cannot help it. We are so made that we must pray. And what does the new theology teach in regard to man? The thought which is in the air is that man is a child of God, the object of perpetual divine care. Man has the inspiration of the Almighty, and is therefore worthy to be honoured in the lowliest sphere, in the humblest occupation. However far he may wander from the path of duty, the Heavenly Father still calls after him. The new theology, therefore, will recognise that man is the greatest of earth's creatures. All institutions are for man, and not man for institutions. Old institutions crumble the moment they cease to be useful in the promotion of truth, in the formation of character, in the uplifting of the human soul. As the new theology makes its way such institutions will perish, for it is a practical theology, and will accept nothing which is not useful, and cannot prove its usefulness by experience.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN • ASSOCIATION.

THE COUNCIL MEETING.

THE second meeting of the Council for this session was held at the rooms of the Association, in Norfolk-street, on Wednesday; the President (H. Bicknell, Esq., J.P.) in the chair. The Secretary read the minutes of the last council meeting, and the report of the executive committee, which was received. It was resolved to print an edition of 2,000 copies of the Rev. Charles Beard's volume of sermons, "The Soul's Way to God." Mr. Crosskey expressed a hope that this step would be extended by the publication of religious literature as distinguished from controversial theology, and suggested that ministers should be asked to prepare volumes. The question of an autumnal or a spring meeting of the Association was next taken into consideration; and it was ultimately agreed that the provincial meeting be held at such time as the executive may be best able to arrange. Mr. T. C. Clarke thought that it would be desirable to have a vigilance committee, who should watch questions relating to religious equality.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE members of this Society held, on Wednesday last, a social meeting in the Schoolroom at Hackney, under the presidency of the Rev. J. T. Whitehead, when an interesting and animated discussion took place on "The Use of Liturgy in Public Worship." The question was opened by the Rev. T. W. Freckleton, in a paper of great force, in which, after graphically comparing the advantages and disadvantages of liturgical and non-liturgical services, he declared emphatically in favour of the latter mode of worship. It was, he assumed, an open question to be decided by high considerations of utility and spiritual expediency. The uses of prayer—prayer being the spontaneous expression of our felt relations to God—were to render us more equal to self-surrender, and to great achievement, and to enable us to enter more closely into communication with God. That mode of worship was best which best secured such results. In his opinion, non-liturgical services best attained that end.

Among those present were the Revs. T. Dunkerley, B.A., A. W. Worthington, B.A., R. Spears, J. D. H. Smyth, C. B. Upton, E. R. Grant; Messrs. Taylor, Bartram, Jeffrey, J. Preston, S. Preston, secretary, and others. During the evening the proceedings were agreeably enlivened by very excellent vocal music by the choir, which in no small measure contributed to the pleasure of the gathering.

AMERICAN NOTES.

JOHN WESLEY AND GEORGIA.

A MEMORIAL church and schools to John Wesley are to be erected in Savannah, the scene of Wesley's early labours. Dr. Gervase Smith appeals to the various sects of the Methodists to unite in the promotion of this design, which will, he believes, promote the brotherhood of Methodism in every part of the world. Upon this the Methodist Recorder says, "The Georgian era no less than the subsequent experience is the traditional heritage of universal Methodism. True, he was then a ritualist, a bigot, and a somewhat severe and unbending neophyte in Government, but these were only the youthful exaggerations of great virtues. His ritualism was simply reverence gone mad for the time; his bigotry was subdued by the wise Providence which ordained that his greatest blessings should come to him through channels which he would at one time have dispised; and the mortification of his Georgia failure taught him to govern more wisely, and impressed on him the truth which church rulers are so slow to learn, that the compactest system is of infinitely less value than the feeblest man."

A movement is on foot looking toward securing a Unitarian Headquarters in Chicago—that is, a place, centrally located in the city, where liberal books and publications of various kinds may be kept for sale, and where pastors, and others from all over the West may go when they are in the city, to write letters, and get information, and see the Chicago pastors, or other representatives of our city liberal work. More about this anon!—Unity.

NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

On Sunday, October 6th, the annual sermons of this Association were preached in the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne, by the Rev. William Henry Channing, B.A., of London. The rev. gentleman spoke in the morning on the "Central Principle of the Christian Religion," and in the evening on the "Church of the Children of God." There were large congregations, the church being crowded at the evening service.

On the day following, the annual soirée was held in the schoolroom. There was a large attendance, which included friends from Sunderland, South Shields, &c. After tea the company adjourned to the church, when the chair was taken by the president of the Association, Joseph Clephan, Esq., who was supported by the Rev. W. H. Channing, B.A. (London), C. J. G. Eiloart, Esq. (deputation from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association), Revs. Alfred Payne (Newcastle), W. Elliott (Sunderland), W. Stoddart, B.A. (Stockton), W. J. Taylor (Barnard Castle), W. L. Spencer (Middlesborough), R. C. Smith (South Shields), and Messrs. W. Clayton, Joseph Ellis, G. G. Laidler, J. Watson, R. B. Brown, J. Walton, J. Johnston, S. Pescod, J. Dixon, &c.

The PRESIDENT, in his opening address, congratulated the meeting on the presence of their old friend Mr. Channing, and of a deputation from London in the person of Mr. Eiloart. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association had long afforded them substantial aid, and they could only regard Mr. Eiloart's presence as a further proof of interest in the work in the North. After referring to several ministerial changes in the district, Mr. Clephan said that, speaking generally, at no former period had the cause in this district looked more hopeful and prosperous than at the present time, all the stations being provided with suitable chapels, and with ministers able and willing to do the work required of them. There was indeed a reverse side to the bright picture, which he laid before them. The cause at Choppington was still in a languishing condition, from causes which he proceeded to point out, but he hoped it would not be thought that even here there was total failure. Several members were as faithful as ever, and the Sunday school had always been a good one. The thing needed in the district was an active, energetic missionary, as the work amongst pitmen needed the inspiration of a leader upon the spot. He urged the preachers of the Association to do their best to win men to Unitarianism, though in no hostile spirit to other churches. They would thus effectually promote the objects which they had set before them. (Applause.)

The Rev. A. PAYNE (who is secretary and treasurer to the Association) then read the report and balance sheet, the following being an abstract of the former:—

"The work of the Association has been done, during the past year, in the presence of many obstacles and great difficulties. Not the least of these has been the continuance of the depression in trade, which has seriously interfered with the pecuniary resources of the assisted congregations, wherein that depression has been most heavily felt. At the same time good and steady work has been accomplished in an earnest and faithful manner, which, we doubt not, will bring forth fruit at length. In consequence of the reduction of the grant from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association from £150 to £90 per annum, the committee issued in October last a circular to friends of our cause in the north of England, asking for increased pecuniary support. That appeal, however, did not call forth more than a very partial response, and the committee only await the revival of trade to undertake some more active measures for the enlargement of our list of subscribers. Another difficulty against which the committee had to contend was that of finding a successor to Mr. Lee, as the missionary of the Association. After some negotiations, which ended in an increase of local subscriptions of £10, and a special grant from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association of £40 per annum, the committee appointed the Rev. W. J. Taylor, the respected minister of South Shields, to be their missionary, and he entered upon his new duties in the middle of the month of June. The Rev. J. Macdonald has left Sunderland, having removed to Kendal, and has been succeeded by the Rev. W. Elliott, who during his ministry at Stockton gave frequent help to the Association. Mr. Elliott has been followed at Stockton by the Rev. W. Stoddart, B.A., to whom the committee hereby offer a most cordial welcome. Barnard Castle: Both the congregation and school are in a healthy and hopeful condition. Mr. Taylor has been very cordially received. It is gratifying to be able to state that Mr. Lee's health has so much improved that he is now able occasionally to take the services in Mr. Taylor's absence. Choppington: The long continued unsatisfactory state of things at this place has in no degree abated, though a few of the members continue very earnest and faithful. The committee have decided to resume the weekly services. Crook: The services here have had to be suspended, but the committee trust that the time is not far distant when something more may be done, though it is not impossible that they may prefer to establish the station at the near and populous town of Bishop Auckland. Darlington: The committee cannot express too strongly their sense of gratitude for the ready help of the zealous secretary, Mr. W. A. Snaith, who on numberless occasions, and almost without notice, has conducted the services, so as to prevent the doors of the church being closed. In the immediate neighbourhood of the chapel there is a thickly-populated district which might well constitute its parish, and from which at least a good Sunday school can be gathered by earnest work in that direction. The committee feel that the congregation at Darlington, under Mr. Taylor's ministry, has a hopeful future before it. Middlesborough: After an interval of about three months following Mr. Hill's retirement from the pulpit at this place, the congregation secured the services of the Rev. W. L. Spencer. In support of his ministry the committee made a grant for the second half of the past financial year at the rate of £30 per annum, which, in accordance with the rule, has been reduced to £25 for the present year. South Shields: The committee rejoice to report the recent settlement at this place of the Rev. R. C. Smith, late of Hopeton-street, Belfast. Towards the stipend the congregation, which has no wealthy members, has, by a most creditable effort, undertaken to guarantee £55, to which the committee have added £45. Mr. Smith has received a very cordial welcome into the district, and has entered upon his important work under the most favourable circumstances. The committee call the attention of the subscribers to the valuable books for sale in the library of the Church of the Divine Unity. Most of these are offered at less than the published price of a single copy, and should be in the homes of all who are interested in the welfare of our cause. The attention of subscribers to and sympathisers with the work is also directed to the treasurer's balance sheet. The revenue has been £130 less this year than last, this circumstance resulting from the fact that the grant from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had been reduced from £150 to £90 per annum, and that, owing partly to the bad trade of the district, partly to disorganisations of congregations through changes in the ministry, the subscriptions and collections have by no means reached the usual amount. There have been no collections in any of the churches except Newcastle and Middlesborough, the usual subscriptions from Stockton have not yet been received, and the annual payment from Barnard Castle is £15 less than usual, owing to the non-appointment of a missionary till the very close of the year. On the other hand, the stipend of such missionary not having been paid, the balance in hand is unusually large, namely, £63. 13s. 2d. This, however, and more, will be needed to meet the future engagements, and the committee strongly urge upon all the churches in the district to take the financial condition of the Association under their most cordial consideration, and by the appointment of local treasurers, and other means, to secure a large addition to its annual resources. In conclusion, the committee express their conviction that the work of the Association is a very solid and substantial one. The congregation at Sunderland has attained to a self-supporting condition, that at Middlesborough is making yearly progress in the same direction, and only time is needed to enable that at South Shields to do likewise, while the mission stations at Barnard Castle and Darlington contain elements of considerable promise for the future. The condition of theological thought is in our favour, and signs of encouragement appear on all hands."

The CHAIRMAN moved, and the Rev. W. ELLIOTT seconded, the adoption of the report. Mr. Elliott said it was characterised by a noble candour, for while it put forward the bright side it did not omit the dark. He had listened to it with feelings of mingled satisfaction and regret. The condition of affairs at Choppington was painful, and the suspension of services at Crook was also much to be regretted. These were stations in the midst of a large, though sparse, population, who in these hard times especially need the comfort of religion. He trusted the Association would do more than ever to spread Unitarian principles amongst the people, and made an earnest appeal to the young men connected with our churches to give themselves to the work of lay preaching. The report was adopted unanimously.

Mr. JAMES WATSON then moved a vote of thanks to the officers and committee for their past services, and submitted a list of names for the ensuing year. His motion, being seconded by Mr. JONAH JOHNSTON, was carried nem. con.

The Rev. ALFRED PAYNE then moved a resolution to the effect "that this meeting offers its cordial thanks to the Rev. W. H. Channing for his services of yesterday, and greatly rejoices in his presence to-night." He said it was not for him to attempt any exhaustive criticism of Mr. Channing's sermons. They were instinct with his own spiritual life, and it was his (the speaker's) faith that if the Christian Church was to do the work which the world needed, its preachers of all denominations would have to stand in the pulpit full to overflowing with spiritual power. We are now in the midst of a great crisis, with a crumbling orthodoxy on the one hand and with an unsatisfied and unsatisfying Secularism on the other. Then there were scientists, whose utterances often took a sceptical tone. To all these we must present the possibility and power of the spiritual nature of man. Mr. Channing did well to present Christ to them, as he had done yesterday, for the personality of Christ seemed to be the satisfaction of the world's need. Man is of divine worth; let them only see that they were sons of God, and God's work would be done by them. The sermons were also permeated by the spirit of Christian charity, which was fundamental to the Christian life. Mr. Channing visited Newcastle as a personal friend of his (the speaker's) and as an old and valued friend of the congregation, and they all wished him a long life and God's blessing. (Applause.)

The resolution was seconded by Mr. Councillor BROWN, and was carried amid loud applause.

Upon rising to respond, Mr. CHANNING was most heartily received. After referring to his satisfaction at the increasing prosperity of the Newcastle congregation, he asked—"But how is it that our glorious faith does not take a complete hold upon all men and win worldwide success?" It seemed to him that ours is the very faith to give universal satisfaction to men: the grand consciousness that we are children of God should win all men and draw them to us. Men have been scourged out of churches by fear of God, and he could sympathise with him who could no longer look upon God as a wrathful tyrant. To such our faith comes like sunshine telling of the eternal love. We want to bring ourselves into close contact with the people. Every one should be doing missionary work, filled with true missionary zeal. We can also meet and satisfy the Secularists. To us heaven and earth meet. Secularism did not answer. No Secularist was thoroughly satisfied, while we take what is best in Secularism and crown it and complete it. With regard to the great secession that is going on from old orthodox conceptions, what have we to do but to present our pure form of the Christian religion so as to satisfy their need? He (Mr. Channing) believed that a great change was going on, which would end in the creation of a new church—a church without sects. But meanwhile our form of faith is the only one which will really meet men's wants. But our want of success results from our being insufficiently real in our religious life. He had not a word to say against those who take the Theistic ground, but he felt that we need to enter into personal relation with the beloved Son. He thanked God for his communion with Jesus Christ, and he longed for the time when they all should feel that they also were sons of God. Let them, then, so proclaim their glorious affirmations till all men should see their glory and their truth. Mr. Channing concluded amid great applause.

The next part of the proceedings was to recognise the services done by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to mission work at home and abroad, and to welcome Mr. Eiloart, who was present as its deputation. The motion was proposed by the Rev. W. L. SPENCER, who illustrated his theme by references to the various operations of the Association, and seconded by Mr. JOSEPH ELLIS, who drew special attention to its circulation of valuable books, a mission agency of no mean order.

Mr. EILOART then responded, expressing his pleasure at seeing so large and earnest a meeting, and stating the constant willingness of the British and Foreign Association to send deputations to similar anniversaries. He was fully convinced that their work in the north of England was being well done, and their appreciation of the assistance of the British and Foreign Association could not be doubted, as they had made a considerable increase of subscriptions to its funds. Referring to the circumstance that the old orthodox views seem to be largely crumbling to pieces, he said that he thought that circumstance was somewhat against our progress, for, hearing newer and freer faiths taught in their own places of worship, through the dark outlines of orthodoxy being kept in the very background, people are less likely to sever their connection with them. After illustrating this approach of some among the orthodox to a broader and more catholic view of Christianity, he proceeded to combat the idea that the British and Foreign Association was a useless body. He asked the audience to do their best to help on the work of that Society, and concluded by expressing his thanks for the hearty welcome he had received.

The Rev. W. J. TAYLOR followed by moving a resolution of cordial welcome to those gentlemen who had recently settled in the district, and of trust that, under the Divine blessing, the work might prosper in their hands, which was responded to by the Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., who, in an interesting speech, pointed out how, in his opinion, Unitarian missionary work should be carried on.

The usual votes of thanks brought the meeting to a close.

BEAUTIFUL THINGS.

BEAUTIFUL faces are those that wear—
It matters little if dark or fair—
Whole-souled honesty printed there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where hearth-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like songs of birds,
Yet whose utterance prudence girds.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest and brave and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindly ministries to and fro—
Down lowliest ways, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Ceaseless burdens of homely care
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless—
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose hidden fountain but few may guess.

Beautiful twilight, at set of sun,
Beautiful goal, with race well won,
Beautiful rest, with work well done!

Beautiful graves, where grasses creep,
Where brown leaves fall, and drifts lie deep
Over worn-out hands—oh, beautiful sleep!

—Public Opinion

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

COMMEMORATION OF MR. GASKELL'S FIFTY YEARS' MINISTRY.

It was not a common occasion which brought so large and representative a meeting together on Tuesday last, in the Manchester Town Hall. Rarely is a minister privileged to celebrate the 50th anniversary of his induction, and rarely can a congregation rejoice in having for half-a-century been led in their Christian work by the same man. It speaks high praise for both minister and people. But the celebration on Tuesday was more than a congregational festival. Cross-street Chapel, as is only right, took the first place in the Jubilee, but Mr. GASKELL is much more than the minister of Cross-street Chapel. There are not many who can recall the hopeful feelings with which his congregation welcomed his settlement in Manchester, but none of them, we feel assured, could have anticipated the influence which he exerts at present, and which makes his position so exceptional amongst us. It is not only in Manchester that he is revered as the leader in all things which affect the well-being of the denomination to which he has devoted his many and rich gifts. In the counties of Lancashire and Cheshire he takes, as a matter of course, a place which shows how all the ministers of the district, and the best lay workers in it, look up to him as their natural head. And throughout Great Britain and Ireland we believe his long and faithful services have won for him a chosen place in the hearts of all who have, during the last half century, been active in promoting the diffusion of a pure and liberal religion. Wherever enlightened views of Christianity are honoured, there is Mr. GASKELL honoured also. He has never shrunk, even in days when Unitarianism was not recognised as a form of Christian doctrine, from identifying himself with an unpopular cause; and if the intolerant spirit of past times is to many at the present a tradition rather than an experience, they know that it is to the labours of Mr. GASKELL, and confessors like himself, that they owe their present position. But few among those who have been engaged in theological controversy have so successfully combined the clear enunciation of definite opinion with the grace of Christian courtesy and charity, and have succeeded in making converts while never making enemies.

But Mr. GASKELL has not been a lover of controversy, and though he has engaged in it, it has always been when his sense of justice and his love of truth have compelled him to leave for a season the more congenial duty of striving to build up the souls of those to whom he ministered in purity and holiness of life as true followers of JESUS CHRIST. And his work has practically exemplified the lessons which with graceful eloquence his preaching gave. No man has been more earnest and active in promoting every plan by which the intellectual and moral wellbeing of society could be advanced; and now, when with lengthened years and widening duties he may no longer take so active a part as he once did in the work of teaching and visiting, his wise counsels with the acquired weight of long experience are perhaps even more widely fruitful of good. The numerous societies which united with the congregation of Cross-street Chapel to do honour to the veteran worker in the LORD'S vineyard bear witness to the extent of his labours and the richness of his sympathies. Education from its beginning in the elementary school to its high development in an institution like Manchester New College, has ever engaged the best of his powers. A large proportion of his time has been given for many years to his duties as Literary Tutor, and more recently as Principal also, of the Home Missionary Board, in the foundation of which he took a prominent part. At the same time Christian care for the poorest and most neglected has been very dear to his heart, and the Domestic Mission Society bears testimony to the zeal he has displayed for it from its very foundation. But there are many institutions in Manchester which prove that Mr. GASKELL'S Christianity does not confine itself to any one class in society, but that it is interested in the progress of all without distinction of sect or rank or station. And therefore, too, the gathering on Tuesday went beyond the limits of a merely Unitarian meeting, and proved the exceptional character of the man whom so many delight to honour. We know that these lines will not improbably fall under Mr. GASKELL'S own eyes, and we cannot therefore speak of the place he holds in many hearts, outside as well as within the Unitarian fold. Generous and kind to all, conciliatory and peace-loving, yet, when put to the test, firm to principle at every hazard, full of rich stores of exact knowledge, but not disdaining the lighter graces of literary elegance and anecdote, he has a social position which few can rival; and all who know him confess that his whole career has only added to their reverence for the man who with such gifts has consecrated them all for half a century, not to any worldly end, but to the unobtrusive and blessed work of a true Christian minister.

THE LITURGY QUESTION.

THE Liturgical Question has just been revived in an interesting manner by the appearance of Mr. DEAN'S Prayers and Ministries. Our ears have lately heard a good deal on the subject, and both sides have ably represented the cause they plead. The propositions brought into conflict appear to be—first, that prayer ought to be free and spontaneous; second, that public prayers should be uniform and general. We remember the conciliation-policy adopted by a famous theological professor, who, in all such discussions, used to say: "Gentlemen, I have no doubt the truth lies somewhere between your arguments." As to Liturgies versus Free Prayers the same thing might be said; or, rather, it must be owned that the truth is big enough to be found on both sides. There is much mistaken notion about so-called free prayer. To the minister such a phrase is often somewhat of a mockery. He writes and reads the "spontaneous" supplications. He is driven to that course by the truest of all his feelings. He holds it "half a sin" to come to God without having prepared his lips, and trust to the words that may, or may not, flow from him at the moment. He provides against the failure that may beset him through want of health or depression of mood, by preparing his language in his study, and while he can command his most devotional thoughts into the mould of fit expression. It may be more pleasant to his hearers to have prayer, as it were, fresh from the minister; but may we not question whether, in thus listening, they can as really, as spiritually, pray to the Father as if the plea were taken from the book and verbally in all their hands? To be waiting for the finish of a sentence and expecting the turn of a half-spoken phrase, may keep the brain from going to sleep; but does it follow that the spiritual, aspiring nature of the worshippers is equally alive and intent? The writer confesses to his youthful habit of putting in imaginary commas and semicolons while his spirit was supposed to be borne up on the wings of the minister's voice into communion with the Highest. Liturgies, it may be said, mean repetitions; and may, and do undoubtedly with some people, tend to become vain; but we must be superior to the form of either one or the other mode of praying before we can realise blessing in using it; and of the two, we incline to think a reverent use of the liturgy the more helpful to real devotion.

Some other advantages of the liturgy, we think, cannot be denied—notably this, that it gives the congregation something more to do. The shortness of their participation in the service is a conspicuous Nonconformist error, and alien to the congregational principles on which we set our first boast. We are disposed to think that, in churches that do not see the way to adopt any entirely liturgical form, there would be wisdom in the double plan. Let each prayer be closed with a collect, and the congregation render a short response; then suppose a semi-benediction from the minister, such as—"The Lord bless and keep us," &c., supported by a congregational "Amen"—a word by the way, which a minister, in the propriety of his place, ought never to be asked to repeat. A few collects and responses at intervals during our common worship would do much to keep ministers and people in the bond of sympathy, and would happily illustrate the truth which belongs to both sides of the question.

J. T. M.

ORTHODOX ALARM.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Scotsman, who seems to be well informed on the matter on which he writes, says: "It is not generally known that a movement of deep significance is about to be made in the Free Church, and this time it is the lay element which takes the lead. It appears that the proceedings of the Aberdeen Presbytery in the matter of Professor Smith's libel have caused a feeling of combined dissatisfaction and uneasiness, and coming after the very unsatisfactory (to the parties now moving) procedure of the last General Assembly, both in Professor Smith's case and in that of the Rev. Dr. Marcus Dods, of Glasgow, alarm is felt lest the Free Church should be taken as ratifying the action of the Glasgow General Assembly and the Aberdeen Presbytery. The sympathy openly avowed by Principal Rainy and by many of the Professors and younger clergymen with the so-called "heretics" is also looked upon as endangering the church, while the supposed rupture in the Rainy party on the Smith case, illustrated as it has been by Sir Henry Moncrieff's action at the late General Assembly, and the published opinions by himself, Dr. Wilson, and others of his friends since then, encourage the parties now moving to get up a protest and petition to be signed throughout the church and presented to the next General Assembly. What the upshot may be no one can certainly say, but that it will be a very momentous one for the Free Church, the character and standing of those getting up the protest and petition fully warrant the belief."

THE GASKELL COMMEMORATION SOIREE.

NEVER has it been our pleasure to witness such a brilliant assembly of members of our household of faith as that which, on Tuesday evening last, filled the New Town Hall, Manchester, to testify their appreciation of the long, varied, and valuable services, extending over a period of fifty years, of the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., and their regard for his high personal character. There were 1,200 ladies and gentlemen present in a Hall that, as far as we know, stands unrivalled for magnificence in the country. Coffee and tea were served at half-past five in the Sculpture Gallery, and afterwards the meeting was held in the large public room. Exactly at half-past six the Rev. Wm. Gaskell and Mr. R. N. Phillips, M.P., the chairman, came upon the platform, and their entrance was greeted with prolonged applause, the whole audience rising to their feet. The organ struck up the air, "Auld Lang Syne," and amid renewed cheering and waving of handkerchiefs the venerated guest of the evening took his seat on the right of the chair. The front of the platform was profusely decorated with flowers, and on a table before it was placed the presentation service of plate. Amongst those on the platform were Alderman C. S. Grundy (the Mayor of Manchester), Professor H. E. Roscoe (Owens College), Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., Rev. Chas. Beard, B.A., Harry Rawson, Rev. Henry Ierson, M.A. (representing the British and Foreign Unitarian Association), W. E. Nanson, Dr. Marcus, W. Mason, Rev. J. T. Marriott, Rev. S. A. Steinthal, H. J. Leppoc, G. S. Darbishire, E. C. Harding, Benjamin Heape, R. D. Darbishire, Richard Wade, Alderman Richard Harwood, James Oliver, Charles Rowley, R. H. Kay, Thomas Walkden, J. Bellhouse, J. H. Reynolds, Edward Golland, C. J. Herford, John Peacock, W. R. Wood, G. W. R. Wood, Oliver Heywood, Thos. Ashton, Rev. Jas. Black, M.A., Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A., Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., Joseph Broome, Richard Peacock, Sam. Fielden (Tadmorden), Alderman Abel Heywood, G. Gottschalk, Joseph Lupton (Leeds), I. M. Wade (London), H. M. Steinthal, James Worthington, Sir Joseph Heron (Town Clerk), W. H. Talbot (Deputy Town Clerk), Alderman Duckworth (Mayor of Bury), John Armstrong, and John McFarlan. Among those in the front of the platform were Miss Gaskell, Miss Julia Gaskell, Mr. and Mrs. Holland, Mr. and Mrs. Crompton, Mrs. Trevelyan, and Miss Phillips. Amongst those in the body of the Hall were Revs. D. Agate, B.A., W. M. Ainsworth, M.A., E. Allen, R. Ashworth, W. Binns, J. Bevan, W. G. Cadman, C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S., T. R. Elliott, Silas Farrington, H. Fogg, J. Fox, M. C. Frankland, J. Freeston, M. E. Gabriel, B. Glover, N. Green, W. Harrison, J. Harrop, J. Harwood, B.A., H. W. Hawkes, P. M. Higginson, M.A., Wm. S. Heywood (U.S.A.), W. W. Robinson, H. Hill, T. Holland, B.A., F. H. Jones, B.A., T. Lloyd Jones, T. Jones, A. Lazenby, J. B. Lloyd, James McConnochie, W. Matthews, J. H. Matthews, W. Mellor, Iden Payne, C. Perry, B.A., R. Pilcher, B.A., C. T. Poynting, B.A., George Ride, A. Rushton, H. Rylett, J. Russell, J. G. Slater, J. K. Smith, H. S. Solly, M.A., W. C. Squier, H. Thomas, E. C. Towne, B.A., E. Turland, G. H. Vance, B.D., B. Walker, D. Walmsley, B.A., S. Fletcher Williams; Alderman R. T. Heape (Rochdale), Alderman J. Briggs (Crewe), J. Benson, Dr. Watts, Robert Nicholson, Henry Leigh, George Leigh, John Standring, John Phillips, Jesse Pilcher, Richard Wade, John Hadfield, Thomas Diggles, John Thomas, Thos. Thornely, Royston Oliver, C. W. Jones (Liverpool), Smith Golland, Geo. Smith, J. H. Reynolds, jun., W. Hough, E. Winsor, W. Chorlton, Thos. Barlow, Edmund Clegg, Samuel Ogden, Thos. Worthington, T. R. Wilkinson, Francis Nicholson, E. J. Broadfield, Peter Allen, A. Bromley, Frank Taylor, P. Robinson, T. Harwood, G. B. Dalby, C. P. Scott, &c., &c.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

The CHAIRMAN on rising was greeted with loud applause. He said: Ladies and gentlemen, we have met together this evening to perform a very pleasing and interesting duty, viz., to celebrate the jubilee of our friend Mr. Gaskell's ministry at the Cross-street Chapel—(applause)—to cheer him by the expression of our affectionate regard, and to ask his kind acceptance of testimonials by which we desire to express in a more substantial and enduring form our high estimation of the faithful and efficient services of a long and useful life. (Applause.) I regret that the office of president on this occasion has not been placed in other hands, and that this chair should not have been filled by one of the members of the Cross-street Chapel congregation. If, however, my duty on the present occasion is merely to ask our friend's acceptance of the gifts we have provided, and to assure him of the high esteem in which we hold him, and of the heartiness with which we unite in giving it this tangible expression, my task this evening would be a simple one and I should have undertaken it with pleasure; but it devolves upon me to do something more, and to give expression to sentiments of which these testimonials are but the outward symbols. I must endeavour to give some very brief notice of the excellences of character which it is this evening our delight and privilege to recognise and to honour, and to do that I have very great need for your kind indulgence. (Applause.) The present is no ordinary occasion for this very simple reason, that our friend Mr. Gaskell is no ordinary man. (Applause.) He has been associated with this city by honourable and by useful public service for upwards of 50 years. He began his work among us long before it became a city, and previous to its attaining the dignity of a Parliamentary Borough. When first he took the post, which he still so ably occupies, of minister of Cross-street Chapel, the busy multitudes in our streets were building up the trade, prosperity, and influence of this northern metropolis; and though the grey hairs show upon his head, the freshness of his youth remains—(applause)—and he moves among us still as a Nestor in our councils, and as a Patriarch of our Faith. (Applause.) The proceedings of this evening, therefore, possess more than passing interest, and will constitute a memorable event in our local history. Our friend's influence here has been by no means confined to denominational limits—(hear, hear)—the members of other churches admire his high character, the genial spirit he has manifested, and the true catholicity of his aims, and avail themselves of this opportunity of testifying their regard for him as an esteemed and honoured public man. I see on this platform a very old and valued friend of mine, and a very valued citizen of this city, my friend Mr. Oliver Heywood—(applause)—and I have also in my pocket letters from gentlemen who would wish to have attended, differing much in their political and religious opinions, and I have one expressing deep regret from Mr. Maclure that he could not be present this evening to do honour to our esteemed friend. (Hear, hear.) The Cross-street Chapel stands, I think—in the large and healthy influence which its members have exerted—second to none in the locality. Small in numbers, yet it has given to Manchester public men of high character and influential position; therefore its minister must have been, in the moral and spiritual concerns of life, the guide and friend of these influential citizens. (Hear, hear.) Few bishops of the Established Church, with all the aids and advantages of their high position, have been able to do in this respect a larger share of work than that which our friend, as a simple Nonconformist minister, has been privileged to accomplish. He has done much towards keeping the public life of Manchester pure, noble, and healthy—(applause)—living himself a simple and blameless life, he has by his teachings and by the force of his example won a rightful place among those who have helped to lift our city to the front position it now occupies. Fifty years, estimated by the changes it witnesses, is often a long period in a nation's life. When our friend entered upon his office it was at a time when religious persecution still existed. When Mr. Gaskell came to Manchester, as a young man, he came to preach a faith whose very profession during his boyhood was a felony. He commenced his ministry at a time when neither Jews nor Catholics nor Dissenters had their full share of civil rights. The House of Commons was closed to the Jew and the Catholic, and Dissenters were forbidden to hold municipal office under heavy penalties. No provision was made in those days for the education of the poor. In those days the right of public meeting had often to be asserted against military force. Our friend has held his responsible office through all the turmoil and agitation which was necessary to redress these grievances. During his ministry the Test and Corporation Acts were abolished, and Catholic emancipation achieved, and national education has been extended through the length and breadth of our country. In all these struggles our friend has directly or indirectly borne his part—(applause)—and now he is enabled in a serene and peaceable old age to enjoy the splendid victories which all these struggles have achieved. And now, sir, it becomes my pleasing duty to tender to you the congratulations of this assembly on your reaching to so advanced a stage of your life's journey as that which is marked by the fifty years of your public ministry in this place; and I beg to assure you, sir, of the high esteem in which they hold your long and varied services, and of the affectionate regard they cherish towards yourself. Allow me, jointly with every human being in this vast assembly, to wish that health and strength may long be spared to you—(applause)—and that for years to come you may continue with us to aid us by your counsels and to cheer us by your presence. (Loud applause.)

ADDRESS OF THE CONGREGATION.

Mr. H. J. LEPPOC, in presenting the address of the Cross-street Chapel congregation, said: Mr. Chairman, it is a great satisfaction to us that you are this evening in the chair on this interesting occasion. I am quite sure no one of the Cross-street Chapel congregation could have discharged the duty better than you have done. We asked you to take the chair because we looked upon you as the head of the Unitarian body in the North of England, and as such we recognise and welcome your presence here to-night. (Hear, hear.) I have now to say a few words to the hero of the evening, Mr. Gaskell. We have long desired to show you, sir, our gratitude in some way or other, and we have waited for this occasion to show you the regard we feel for you and the esteem in which we have always held you. (Hear, hear.) There is not one member of the congregation—not one who has been in it—who does not have the same esteem for you that we have. We desire at all times to hear your words of wisdom and to sit at your feet and to hear from you what we ought to do. You have now been a good many years with us, and there are few of those here who saw you entering the ministry of Cross-street Chapel. It must be a sad reflection at times, but at times pleasant to think, that those who are gone before, as well as the present generation, have had the benefit of your valuable services. May you long be spared to be among us. I have no need to prolong my remarks. The committee has entrusted me with presenting you this address, which I venture to say fully expresses their sentiments. Mr. Leppoc then read the address, as follows:—

(To the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A.)

Reverend and Dear Sir,—As members of the congregation worshipping in Cross-street Chapel, we desire to tender you our congratulations on the completion of the fiftieth year of your ministry.

We do so with a feeling of deep gratitude, and sincerely rejoice that you are still able to perform duties upon which you entered more than half a century ago, and which you have always most faithfully and effectively fulfilled.

A few members of your congregation still survive who can cherish the recollection of your being called to occupy the pulpit which for generations had been successively filled by men of high reputation for learning, eloquence, and Christian piety.

You have had at once the privilege and the power to uphold and increase the respect with which the principles of our body are regarded; your ministry began in times when intolerance was strong and active; your moral courage always enabled you to defend that which conscience and an enlightened interpretation of the Gospel approved as the truth.

You have ever been careful to avoid all bitterness in word or deed, and have thus softened the asperities of former theological controversies; and have largely helped to promote a wider and more generous spirit of charity.

Your faithful work in the cause of education, your devotion to the principles of civil and religious freedom, your kind and genial spirit of courtesy and charity, have won for you a high position in public estimation, and have beneficially influenced all who have been associated with you.

Amongst the members of your congregation, and your wide circle of friends, your ministrations have long had, and still have, an inexpressible value; you have strengthened and comforted many in the hours of sorrow and trial, and you have evinced a hearty interest in those who happily have had cause for rejoicing. In the pulpit and through the press, your generous sympathies, your high attainments in scholarship and literature, your long and cultivated experience, have all been devoted to the promotion of the welfare and happiness of those amongst whom you have so long laboured.

Accept then, dear sir, the heartfelt congratulations of a loving people, who rejoice that they are privileged to greet you in your year of jubilee. May the blessing of God enable you long to enjoy the consciousness that you are loved and revered by all those amongst whom you have, even more by your deeds than by your words of wisdom, approved yourself a leader in Christian life and work.

Mr. GEORGE STANLEY DARBISHIRE, in presenting the gold plate described in our leader last week, the personal gift of the Cross-street Chapel congregation, said: Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, It was a kind and graceful act on the part of the committee to entrust to my care the presentation of the personal gift of the Cross-street congregation to their respected minister, and although vividly realising my inability to perform that pleasant duty worthily, and feeling the difficulty of expressing in words of sufficient eloquence and meaning the kindly feelings which have prompted the gift, I nevertheless at once gratefully accepted the position, feeling sure no one could rejoice more than myself at seeing Mr. Gaskell among us. I therefore offer these memorials of a grateful congregation, and beg you to accept the same with the best wishes for your continued health, and at the same time our profound hope that it may be our privilege to receive from you that goodly aid, that pure and holy counsel which help us to bear life's conflict, and which assisted and sustained our forefathers in the olden days. May you regard our offering, sir, through a long and peaceful eventide, and during the golden sunset of your days may you diffuse around you and among us that sweet and holy radiance which cannot fail to have a lasting and beneficial influence upon all who know you. (Applause.)

THE GASKELL SCHOLARSHIP.

Mr. E. C. HARDING then presented a memorandum of the Scholarship to be founded in Mr. Gaskell's name, and said: Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, on a recent occasion the Town Clerk, Sir Joseph, Heron, in addressing an audience in this hall, said that he did so for the first time, and expressed a doubt whether his voice would carry. Now, if the Town Clerk had his doubts about being heard by a comparatively small audience, and after forty years of practice or experience in the old Town Hall in King-street, I feel that I may with much more reason ask your indulgence in the remarks I am about to make. (Applause.) A short time ago my attention was directed to a notice in the Manchester Guardian of April 27th, 1833, giving an account of a meeting held on April 20th, in the old Town Hall of that day, to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rev. Wm. Gaskell's ministry in Cross-street Chapel. It is a somewhat singular fact that out of eleven spoken of as being present on that occasion, eight are living now, and five are in this room with us to-night. (Hear, hear.) I don't know whether we should be quite justified in claiming longevity as amongst the blessings of Unitarianism—(laughter)—but I confess that I should rather put it down to one of the accidents which will happen to the best regulated of congregations. (Laughter.) On the occasion I refer to the Rev. J. G. Robberds, the senior minister at that time, is reported to have said: "He (Mr. Robberds) did not know whether the idea of this testimonial had originated with any of their German friends, but it reminded him of a beautiful German custom—that of celebrating a marriage day under the name of a silver wedding. And as they went further and distinguished the fiftieth like anniversary as a golden one, so, though he himself and others present might not see it, yet he could not but hope that there would be occasion for a similar extension of the present proceedings." (Loud applause.) To the exceeding joy of a great many in this district that day has arrived—(applause)—and we are here to-night in large numbers to celebrate the happy event. I may say, in passing, that great as the number present this evening, it would have been much greater but for the comparatively limited space of this magnificent hall. It is no ordinary event that has brought us together to-night. (Hear, hear.) It does not often happen that a minister occupies the same pulpit for fifty years, much less that for so long a period he performs the duties of his office with that singleness of purpose and unvarying earnestness that have characterised Mr. Gaskell's services to the Cross-street congregation. The fact of Mr. Gaskell having come direct from college to take that pulpit, and continuing to occupy it over this long period, is testimony of a high character not only to Mr. Gaskell himself, but also to the congregation in which he has ministered—(hear, hear)—particularly when we consider that at no time during Mr. Gaskell's ministry has there been more union amongst the people and a more intense love for their pastor than exists at the present moment. (Hear, hear.) I may also add that at no time has he preached with more vigour and effect, nor have his ministrations been more acceptable, than in this the fifty-first year of his ministry. (Applause.) I need not speak of the active sympathy he has always given to our various institutions, such as the Lower Mosley-street schools, with their wonderful influence upon a large section of this community, and the broad Catholic spirit upon which they have always been based—so broad, indeed, that they solved the religious difficulty years before the religious difficulty was heard of. These, and our domestic missions, and Unitarian association, and the various other bodies, will tell their own story in language better than I can employ, at a later part of these proceedings. It is sufficient for me now to say that Mr. Gaskell has ever been the broadest of broad Unitarians. No institution of ours has been too denominational for him to withhold his support from it, nor too unsectarian for him to refuse his sympathy and encouragement. (Applause.) But great as have been Mr. Gaskell's labours in the cause of Unitarianism, I value even more his exertions on behalf of freedom of worship and religious equality; and I feel the chief glory of our position in the religious world lies in this, that we do not ask rights or privileges for ourselves that we do not willingly concede to others. (Applause.) We all know, and many of us have a feeling akin to love for, that dingy-looking and time-worn building, Cross-street Chapel, standing as it does in striking contrast to the noble piles of buildings of modern Manchester. In that plain but venerable building many a good work has been initiated and carried on, and I hesitate not to say that the Manchester of to-day would have been different but for the men and women who from time to time have met for work and worship there. From it have come some of Manchester's members of Parliament, and some of the foremost leaders in her philanthropic and educational movements, also some of her chief magistrates. At the present time the civic chair is filled by one from our sister church in Bridge-street—(applause)—and right heartily do we congratulate the members of that church—(hear)—for having sent one who commands the esteem and confidence of the council, and of a large mass of his fellow-citizens, and one, too, who never subordinates the religion he professes to place or power or popularity. But better, and above all these, do I place the saintly men and women who in their day have gone forth into the school, and the mission, and the homes of the poor, to train the young, raise the fallen, and to bring to a knowledge of all within their influence the simple and sublime truths taught by the Master. I think we are right in considering Mr. Gaskell more, very much more, than the minister of Cross-street congregation—(hear, hear)—and that he occupies the position of a bishop in this our northern diocese, being looked up to for counsel and guidance by a great many of our ministers and congregations. (Hear, hear.) As a member of Cross-street Chapel I rejoice in the feeling that others share the privileges that we esteem so highly. Then, too, as principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, or College, he occupies a position going even beyond this district, extending, indeed, to the Unitarian body throughout the country; and as I said with regard to Manchester that it would be different to-day but for Cross-street Chapel and its influences, so I verily believe the Unitarianism of England would have been different from what it is now but for the many able, earnest, and devoted men who have been sent out from that College. (Hear, hear.) You would not be surprised then when, in thinking of the best way of commemorating Mr. Gaskell's fifty years' ministry, we did not overlook the fact that he occupies these various positions or offices, and that we came to the conclusion that no suitable commemoration could take place without you, the Unitarians of this district, having an opportunity of taking part. The hearty manner in which you have adopted our view, the warm expression of approval in the numerous letters I have been privileged to receive, as treasurer, and the generous contributions, all prove that we were justified in our anticipation. And now, on the part of the congregational committee, I thank you for the emphatic endorsement you have given to our decision. (Loud applause.) An address of the congregation has been presented, a personal present has been given, and it now only remains for me on your behalf, and of those who are unable to be present, to ask Mr. Gaskell to accept the foundation of a Scholarship in favour of a deserving student in an Institution that Mr. Gaskell took a large share in founding; in which he has been the Literary Tutor for a period of 24 years—(applause)—and of which he is now the Principal. I mean the Unitarian Home Missionary Board. (Hear, hear.) Most of you present know the great interest Mr. Gaskell has ever taken in this Institution, and I feel sure that he will derive great satisfaction from the help which will be afforded it, and the greater efficiency which will result, not only to those gentlemen who may succeed in obtaining the Scholarship, but also that in the competition to which it will give rise the learning and the application of the whole body of the students will be increased. And, ladies and gentlemen, to us the satisfaction will be afforded that Mr. Gaskell's name will be worthily perpetuated, and the good work he has been engaged in be continued long after we have passed away. (Hear, hear.) I have now the pleasure to hand you this Memorandum—

THE GASKELL SCHOLARSHIP.

[MEMORANDUM.]

It has been agreed that out of the sum of £2,190, 2s. 9d. which has been raised to provide a suitable memorial of the completion, by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., of the fiftieth year of his ministry at Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, so much as may be necessary shall be appropriated towards founding a scholarship of the annual value of £70, or thereabouts, to be tenable by deserving students of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board at Owens College, Manchester. The legal arrangements will be submitted to Mr. Gaskell for his approval, and the appointment of the first trustees will be placed in his hands.

Manchester, 15th October, 1878.

And I have to express the hope, which will be shared in by all present, that you may live to see many a "Gaskell" Scholar. (Loud applause.)

THE LITERARY AND PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Professor H. E. ROSCOE presented the following Resolution of the Literary and Philosophical Society:—

The Council of the Literary and Philosophical Society feel that they ought not to separate without offering their cordial congratulations to the Rev. Wm. Gaskell on the celebration which falls upon this day. They seize the occasion to testify their warm sense of the unwavering interest which their friend and co-adjutor has taken in the prosperity of the Society during a membership extending over more than 38 years, during the latter 21 of which long period Mr. Gaskell has been uniformly elected as one of those entrusted by the Society to superintend its business. They desire to express their hearty wishes that so useful and valued an associate may be spared to them in health and happiness for many years.

(Signed) J. P. JOULE, President.

Professor Roscoe observed that if he might be allowed to make one other remark, he would desire to express his great sense of the honour which had been done to those connected with Owens College in the statement made by Mr. Harding that the holder of the Gaskell Scholarship was to receive instructions within the College walls. (Applause.) He felt sure that when that announcement was made known to the council and governing body of the College it would be received with great satisfaction. (Hear, hear.)

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY.

The Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., supported by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., and Mr. Harry Rawson, presented the following address:—

(To the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., President of the Provincial Assembly of Presbyterian and Unitarian Ministers and Congregations of Lancashire and Cheshire.)

Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned ministers on the roll of the Provincial Assembly, and representatives of Presbyterian and Unitarian Congregations of Lancashire and Cheshire, desire, on the part of the Assembly, to congratulate you upon the completion of the fiftieth year of your ministry at Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, and of your public labours in the Province.

As President of the Assembly since June 16th, 1864, you have, for fourteen years, filled its chair with an ability that has rendered your annual address the central point in the interest of the meetings, and with an impartiality that has won for your genially-exercised authority universal respect.

But the services, great as they have been, which you have thus rendered to the Assembly, constitute a small part of the debt under which you have laid us. You have been the Minister-at-large for the Province. Your face and your voice are known throughout its length and breadth; and you are regarded by all our congregations with an affection and esteem which words cannot express. Many are the thriving churches and schools which owe no little of their vitality to your assistance and your encouragement; and by your ever-ready kindness in preaching anniversary sermons and in the delivery of evening lectures, you have done a work which will be for ever gratefully associated with your name.

As minister of Cross-street Chapel, you have taken a position in the City of Manchester, and in the surrounding district, which has conferred high honour on the church of which you are so distinguished an ornament. In the services which you have freely rendered to every liberal and enlightened cause, you have stood forth as a representative of whom we have all been proud; whilst your high character and your richly-cultivated mind have given you an influence far beyond the limits of our own religious communion.

That you may long be spared, not only to preside over the Assembly, but to fill the important place which you occupy in the whole life of the Province, and to enjoy the affection which is felt for you by countless grateful hearts, is the desire with which we subscribe ourselves.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.

The Rev. C. Beard, B.A., supported by Mr. R. D. Darbishire, B.A. (joint secretaries), presented the following address:—

Reverend and Dear Mr. Gaskell,—It is now 53 years since your entrance at York as a student for the ministry in the year 1825. You have yourself been wont to remark that since that time you have served the College in more capacities than probably any one of your own generation, and a reference to our records duly bears out the statement. We find that you were secretary from 1840 to 1846, and from 1846 to 1853, professor of English history, literature, and composition. Since 1854 you have presided over the deliberations of the committee as chairman, and since 1859 you have also discharged the duties of a visitor.

If the memory of hardly any who are now concerned with the active management of the College goes back to the time of your secretaryship, we can well believe, from our long subsequent knowledge of your admirable temper, tact, and business ability in the chair of the committee, that your occupancy of the former office left nothing to be desired.

Those of us who were your pupils at Manchester still retain a grateful recollection both of the thoroughness of your instructions and the unvarying kindness with which they were conveyed, while the reminiscence is rendered still more pleasant by the fact that the relations between professor and student have long ago ripened into those of a firm and affectionate friendship. Nor can we doubt that the younger men, who for the last 19 years have often had the opportunity of listening to your wise and fatherly counsels as a visitor, look up to you with a true filial respect, and in heart associate themselves with us in their expression of thankful and joyful sympathy.

We are persuaded that no institution lies nearer to your heart than that in which you were yourself trained for the Christian ministry, and which has received so large a part of your time and energy, that the principles and objects, for the support of which it is maintained, have your fullest assent and warmest approval, and that this connection of a lifetime can only be dissolved by the all-powerful hand of death.

That you may still be able for many years to spend yourself for the Kingdom of God, and to employ an unabated energy and a still living enthusiasm in the service of humanity, is our heartfelt wish, while for ourselves we make a claim which we know that you will not reject, for a continuance of your wise and kindly help in the management of the College, and in private, of that genial and faithful friendship which we accept as one of the most precious possessions of our lives.

HOME MISSIONARY BOARD.

Mr. Harry Rawson, supported by The Mayor (Alderman C. S. Grundy), Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., and Mr. Francis Nicholson, presented the following address:—

(To the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., Principal and Literary Tutor of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board.)

Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned officers and committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, desire, on the part of the Institution, to congratulate you upon the completion of the fiftieth year of your ministry at Cross-street Chapel, and of your public labours in the province.

As one of the founders of the Institution; its literary tutor since its opening in 1854; and its principal since the retirement of the Rev. Dr. Beard, in 1874, you have placed the Board under obligations to yourself to which we can give only feeble expression. You have been largely instrumental in the success which has attended the Institution. Not only have you conferred upon the Board the benefit of services such as few could render in the literary culture of its students; but, by your high character, and your noble example of Christian zeal, you have exerted upon them an influence which will inspire them to a ministerial fidelity like your own. In this you have fulfilled the highest function of a teacher in a "school of the prophets."

The ardent affection in which you are held by your alumni in the ministry (now numbering sixty-nine), and by your present students, must be to you the most acceptable testimony to the value of your labours in the Board; but we cannot permit the opportunity to pass of paying to you the tribute of our most grateful thanks for the time and the work which you have so freely given to the Institution under our care.

We pray that you may long be spared, not only to the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, but also to the Church for which you have done so much, and which holds your name in such merited and affectionate esteem.

MINISTRY TO THE POOR.

The Rev. S. A. Steinthal (secretary), supported by Mr. R. D. Darbishire (treasurer) and Mr. E. C. Harding, presented the following address:—

(To the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A.)

Reverend and Dear Sir,—Among the many societies which will join in the congratulations which the congregation of Cross-street Chapel offer you this day, we believe that none have deeper grounds for grateful recognition of your many and prolonged services than has the Ministry to the Poor. You were among its founders, when, under the influence of Dr. Tuckerman, it began its benevolent labours in the year 1833, now more than 45 years ago. Since then, whether acting as secretary or as chairman of the committee, or as a frequent preacher in its chapels, your kindly interest in it has never flagged. By judicious counsel, by earnest advocacy of its claims, by truly generous contributions to its funds, and by never failing sympathy with its ministers in their self-denying activity, you have taken and filled the first place amongst its most zealous supporters.

It is natural that the committee representing the society should desire to add its congratulations to day, to those of the many whom grateful memories of 50 years of disinterested service gather round you now. They know that words cannot express all they would gladly say, and theirs, therefore, are few; but they pray that our Heavenly Father may still prolong your days to the joy of your family and friends, and to the benefit of all among whom you so faithfully labour, and that He may make the evening of your life blessed in faith and rich in Christian hope.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

In addition to the foregoing, addresses were presented by the Rev. H. Ierson, M.A., from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association; by the Rev. C. T. Poynting, B.A., supported by the Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., from the Manchester District Unitarian Association Committee; by the Mayor (Alderman C. S. Grundy), supported by Mr. Robert Nicholson and Mr. Harry Rawson, from the Trustees of the Memorial Hall; by Mr. W. E. Nanson, supported by Rev. S. A. Steinthal and Mr. Richard Wade, from the Lower Mosley-street Schools Committee; by Dr. H. J. Marcus and Mr. John H. Reynolds, Jun., from the Lower Mosley-street Sunday School Teachers; by Mr. William Mason, supported by Mr. Joseph Harrison and Mr. W. C. Bowie, from the present Students of the Home Missionary Board; and by the Rev. J. T. Marriott (president), supported by Mr. Edwin Winsor (vice-president) and Mr. W. H. Mellor (secretary), from the Manchester Unitarian Sunday School Union.

MR. GASKELL'S REPLY.

Th Rev. WM. GASKELL, on rising, was received with long and continued applause. He said: Mr. Philips and friends, it would take a man with far stronger nerves than I can boast of not to be overpowered by all the many tokens of esteem and regard, and I may say affection, which have been heaped upon me to-night. I think you will readily understand me when I say that often as I have had to speak on public occasions, I never felt so much embarrassed as I do on this, and so little capable of expressing my feelings of gratitude for all the kindness which I have received at your hands. Knowing that this would be the case I have jotted down one or two heads in order that I may not fail altogether in saying what I wish to say. I should indeed have reason to be proud if I could bring myself to believe that I at all merited the praises which have been lavished upon me. (Applause.) But I cannot; I know myself too well for that; and I therefore accept the generous appreciation which has been made of my services as a proof of the kindness of my friends and not of my own deserts. I feel inexpressibly grateful to you all who have joined in the testimonials which have been presented to me, and from the bottom of my heart sincerely do thank them. Valuable as are the beautiful pieces of plate before me, they are far more valuable as the manifestations of regard from such a large number of friends. I can safely promise that they will not only be most carefully preserved by me, but will be handed down to my children as pleasing memorials of the respect in which their father was held. (Applause.) At the close of 50 years of ministerial labour it cannot but be a source of the purest and deepest satisfaction to me that it should have been deemed at all deserving of such approval as that given to it in the addresses which were read by my friends Mr. Leppoc and Mr. Stanley Darbishire. Sad indeed would it be on behalf of the Cross-street congregation, if, in looking back through that long period, I could not hope that I had done something to promote their highest interests. My heart's desire, I can truly say, has been to do so; but much of the success which has attended my efforts has been due to the confidence which they have reposed in me, and the sympathy and encouragement which they have given me. (Hear, hear.) Most of those from whom I received kind welcome at my entrance on my duties as a young and untried man are gone hence. Not seldom when alone, and meditating on the days that are past, the forms and faces of many of those whom "I have loved long since and lost a while" rise up before me, and I sometimes almost wish that I could recall them again to earth. I am sure that could they be present with us now, they would be among the first to offer me such expressions of regard as you have offered. Some few are still left—naturally peculiarly dear to me—who have journeyed on together with me, and whose friendship, I am happy to think, has known neither interruption nor decline through all the 50 years that have since flown over us, but has, I believe, gone on increasing to this day. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Harding referred to what my dear friend and colleague Mr. Robberds said might be termed my "silver wedding" with the congregation; and it is no small addition to my pleasure to-night that some who took part in that are here to join in celebrating what I may call my "golden wedding." The descendants of others have grown up from childhood under my ministry, and are worthily following in their fathers' steps, and they too are among my dearest and most cherished friends; and some who are at a distance have not forgotten me; but this morning I received from several of them their kindest congratulations and their warmest wishes for my welfare. But I may say that I feel, and shall always feel, a deep interest in every member of the Cross-street congregation, and shall be glad at any time to do them whatever service I can. Few pastorsates on the whole, I believe, have been more happy than mine has been—happy in my colleagues, happy in my people. (Hear, hear.) It would have been too much to expect that through a ministry of such length I have made no mistakes, but if I have, they have been so tenderly treated that I have scarcely been made aware of them, and they have never caused me any painful disquiet. And one thing which I am peculiarly grateful for is that during the 50 years in which I have been connected with the congregation there has never been anything like serious disagreement amongst us, but our communion has been a practical illustration of the words—"Behold how good and pleasant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity"—(applause)—and I trust that this will always continue to be the case whether I am with you or absent. I must not linger, however, on this subject, though it lies most near my heart; but must turn to notice the various addresses in which my services have been so kindly over-rated. You will hardly expect me to do more than just to glance at each of these. Indeed, I am not sure whether my best course would not be to follow the example of Mr. Bryant, the American poet, who once at a dinner at which I was present in Cambridge, after Professor Sedgwick had most eloquently enlarged upon his excellences, got up and simply said, "Gentlemen, I thank you." (Applause.) But this perhaps, would hardly be respectful. I feel under a great obligation to my friend Dr. Roscoe for coming this evening—(applause)—to present to me the congratulations of the Council of the Literary and Philosophical Society. I have been connected, as therein stated, for a long period with that Society, and have for a considerable number of years had the honour of being on its council, but I cannot say that I have ever rendered to it any very important service. I have not conferred honour on it, but it has conferred honour on me. Then as regards the Provincial Assembly, I need only say that I cannot but esteem it an honour that I should have been elected, though against my strong advice, to preside over it for at least a dozen years in succession. It is the most venerable of our Associations, I believe, and I therefore cannot but feel it an honour, as I say, to preside over it; but the only thing which entitles me to the address that has been read by my old friend and fellow-townsmen, Mr. Wells, is that I have annually to prepare something like a Concio ad clerum, and that I naturally find it grow more difficult from year to year to say something which I have not said before; and though it appears from the address that in this respect I satisfy others, I cannot say that I satisfy myself. I cannot but highly value the address (in which was shown the delicate skill of a practised pen to which our churches are not a little indebted) that was presented on behalf of Manchester New College by my friend Mr. Beard. (Applause.) As was stated by him, I have been connected with the Institution in a greater variety of ways, I believe, not only than any one of this generation, but than any one of any generation. (Laughter.) I might well take shame to myself if I did not take a deep interest in it, and were not found at all times ready to give such help as I am able in promoting its objects. I am under the deepest obligations to it—obligations which I can never thoroughly repay. If I have been of any service in the world, it has been in large measure owing to the training which I received in the College while at York, and especially to the instructions of one of the most finished scholars that I ever met with—the late Mr. Kenrick. (Applause.) To that training I am largely indebted for having become at all prepared to fill the responsible position (once so worthily filled by my dear friend Dr. Beard) of Principal of the Home Missionary Board. Laudari a laudatis has always been esteemed a special honour, and it adds to the pleasure which the address from the Board gave me that it should have been presented to me by one who, for a second time, has been judged by his fellow citizens worthy of the highest honour which it is in their power to confer. (Applause.) Among the various letters of congratulation which I have received on this occasion, none have touched me more than those which have come from former students under me, assuring me of the benefits which they have derived from the instruction which I gave them; one of them going even so far as to say that he esteems it the most fortunate event of his life that he came under my care. (Applause.) If any of the present race of students should hereafter have reason to think of me in the same kindly manner, I shall be amply repaid for all the care and trouble which I am taking with them. I daresay now and then they may feel that I am somewhat severe and exacting in my demands upon them, but they know, I am sure, that this arises solely from my anxiety that they should acquit themselves well, and prove "workmen that need not to be ashamed." And I verily believe that they would all of them say, in the spirit of the boy when his father was beating him hard, "Lay on father, it is all for my own good." (Laughter.) I have always felt desirous of raising the standard of study at the Board, and I am glad to know that this is gradually being done. I may just mention, as one proof of this, that one of our students took the Cobden Prize at Owens College last session, and that five of them stood first in the Class Examination in Political Economy. (Applause.) And, therefore, with the view which I have mentioned, when asked how I would wish the sum so generously subscribed by my friends to be disposed of, I suggested that a scholarship should be founded, such as has been already described by my friend Mr. Harding. As showing the interest which I take in the Board, I may just state that I now give more than double the time which I promised to give when I first joined in founding it; and as our number of students is now larger than it has ever been—nineteen—of course I have to give a greater amount of labour, but I can say that it is most willingly and cheerfully given. (Applause.) I will not refuse to admit that I have been of some service in the working of our District Society, and in carrying out its objects. As confirmatory of what was stated in the address (I hope you will not set it down to vanity on my part) I cannot help reading a note which I received this morning. "At a special meeting of the Miles Platting Congregation, held on the 6th inst., it was resolved: That we, the members of the Miles Platting Unitarian Free Church, hereby desire to commemorate the completion of the 50 years' ministry of the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., of Cross-street Chapel—That while we join with the Manchester District Unitarian Association in offering a tribute of honour and esteem, we feel and record that the church at Miles Platting owes a peculiar debt of gratitude to Mr. Gaskell, as its existence and prosperity are in no small degree due to the sympathy, advice, and the great help unceasingly rendered from its foundation to the present time by one so much—" I cannot finish it. One way in which I know I have been of some service to congregations like that from which this kind recognition came, has earned for me a somewhat unenviable character. The nature of this you may guess from what once took place when I went to preach charity sermons at Bolton. That excellent man Robert Heywood, so much respected amongst us—(applause)—told me that he had been that morning considering whether, being a magistrate, it was not his duty to order the police, as I entered the town, to apprehend me and lock me up as a sturdy beggar. (Laughter.) All I can say is, I have never begged for myself. (Applause.) I am afraid you will set me down as a hardened offender when I say that I could not help feeling pleased to be reminded that, in the same character, I had taken a leading part in founding the Memorial Hall. I had some time before felt the need which there was of some such building for our denominational work, and proposed to place it on the plot of ground at the back of Cross-street Chapel. I am glad that the project fell through, because we have now got so much better a building than we should have had then. As the Mayor has stated, it is now used for such a variety of purposes that I cannot stop to specify them; but I feel that I am personally repaid for what I did in its erection by the accommodation which it gives to the Home Missionary Board, because if this had not withdrawn from those wretched attics in Marsden-street, I verily believe I should not have been here. (Applause.) I cannot but find some pleasure in remembering that I gave help, which has been referred to in one of the addresses, in providing the building for our schools in Lower Mosley-street. It may well be a satisfaction to those who have supported them, and those who have been engaged in working them, to think how many thousands of children have passed through them, not a few of whom have been mainly indebted to the training received in them for all their success in after life. I often regret that I am no longer able to take that active part in the working of them which I formerly did, and I am obliged to leave it to my younger colleague, who does it more effectively than I could do. But the address does but say truly that I am always ready and willing to give such help as I can. The same might be said of the Sunday-school Union. I could only just like to say to my younger friends that I wish more of them would take part in the teaching of the schools. (Hear.) I can assure them from my own experience that if they do there is no part of their lives which they will hereafter look back upon with greater pleasure and satisfaction than the time they have spent in giving help in the Sunday school. Another of our institutions which I joined with my dear friend and colleague Mr. Robberds in introducing amongst us is our Domestic Mission. The address from this, which my friend and colleague read, only did me justice in giving me credit for taking a deep interest in it. Indeed, there is none of our institutions in which I take a deeper interest, none with which I have a more thorough sympathy, none which I believe is doing a more Christian, a more blessed work; I should be glad indeed if that work were more widely extended. (Hear, hear.) And now, having, I think, referred to all the various addresses, before I sit down I must just briefly advert to one circumstance which has given me peculiar pleasure, and that is, as has been said by one who has preceded me, that I have conciliated the esteem of not a few beyond our own "household of faith." (Hear, hear.) A letter from one of these was sent to one of the secretaries, which I highly value. It was from a prominent and well-known citizen of Manchester, asking to be allowed to contribute to the testimonial to be presented to me. In it he mentions, what was very gratifying to me, that nearly half a century ago he was introduced to efforts for the public good by being the honorary secretary of an association of which I was one of the chairmen—I mean the Sanitary Association, in founding which I took an active part. He goes on in this letter to credit me with having done "enormous good to the community." Now, I cannot take to myself any such credit as that; but I may say this, I have always been glad, when I could, to render assistance to objects of practical utility, and some of those which I took part in originating are now doing no small amount of good. Occasionally when I realise, which sometimes I find it difficult to do, how long I have been in service, the thought will come across me whether some may not be inclined to say—

Superfluous lags the veteran on the stage.

(Cries of "No, no.") But then I am encouraged to go on by finding that my services never were in greater request than they are now—(applause); and sometimes some of my good people complain that I rather run away from them more than they quite like. (Hear, hear.) As an instance of what I mean, three Sundays ago I was preaching school sermons at a little distance, and the collection was the largest they had ever had, and the managers of the school wanted to engage me for the service at the same time next year. (Laughter.) This may be taken as some little proof that there is still a little work left in me—(loud applause)—and so long as I can work effectively, I have now got to feel so much the importance of the work in which I am engaged, that as long as my friends are satisfied with me I shall go on cheerfully with it. I have been unable to make any adequate acknowledgment of the presents made to me, or to express how deeply I feel the expressions of regard and esteem and attachment which I have received this evening; in fact, as you must have seen, I have been too much overcome by them, and never felt such difficulty in putting my thoughts into words. It has been a peculiar pleasure to me that my friend Mr. Philips has presided over us on this occasion. (Applause.) There is no name more honoured amongst the Unitarian body in the north than that of Philips. It has been said that a Dissenting carriage never goes for three generations to chapel, but that of the Philipses has been an honourable exception. (Applause.) I remember the brother of the chairman once going on a deputation to Lord Liverpool, who was then Prime Minister, and his lordship was asking the members of the deputation to what denomination they belonged. When he came to Mr. Philips he said, "What persuasion are you of?" Mr. Philips at once replied, "Oh, I'm a Unitarian, and I don't care who knows it." (Applause.) His lordship said, "And I don't think a bit the worse of you for it, Mr. Philips." I cannot sit down without likewise tendering my heartfelt thanks not only to those who have contributed to the testimonials which I have received, but especially to those who have taken so much pains and trouble in preparing them. I thank you all most sincerely and heartily. I have many precious memories in the past, but none will be more precious to me than those of to-night. (Continued applause.)

VOTES OF THANKS.

The chair having been vacated by Mr. Philips, on the motion of Mr. H. J. Leppoc, Mr. Samuel Fielden took it, when

The MAYOR OF MANCHESTER (Alderman C.

S. Grundy), in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Philips for his conduct in the chair, said we were frequently asked what there was in a name. He replied, a good deal. (Hear, hear.) If he were a follower of a name, he should elect the name of Philips. Every member of Mr. Philips's family was doing good work, and for generations in the Manchester district the Philipses had been staunch supporters of every progressive movement. In their name, therefore, he tendered to the Chairman thanks for the able manner in which he had discharged the duties of the office that night. (Applause.)

Mr. BENJ. HEAPE, in seconding the motion, observed that the Chairman had been the right man in the right place, and he was sure that night's proceedings would be a pleasant remembrance to him. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. FIELDEN said he remembered Mr. Gaskell coming to Stand when, as a boy, he was there at school, and ever since he had watched his career, which had been so successful. Well had he done his work.

The vote of thanks to Mr. Philips having been carried with acclamation,

Mr. PHILIPS, in response, thanked the meeting for their kind expressions of respect towards himself. Thanks, he thought, were more specially due to those who had got up the meeting. He believed that if they had had a room double the size of the Free Trade Hall they could have filled it. (Applause.) To him it was pleasant to live in a community where a good man had done a good work well, and to see his fellow-men thank him for his services. Though Mr. Gaskell was a Warringtonian, Manchester was his adopted home, and he hoped he might yet do more good work in it. He thought they were all rejoiced that they had had such a pleasant meeting. (Applause.)

An organ recital from 6 to 6.30 was given by Mr. Thomas Rawson, who also accompanied throughout the programme on the great organ.

Among the pieces of music given during the evening we may mention Mr. Dumville's solo, "Be thou faithful unto death," and the accompanying chorus, "He that shall endure to the end." Mrs. Warren did good service in leading the various choruses, and in the trio in Bishop's chorus, "Bright Orb." The chorus consisted of members of the Cross-street, Upper Brook-street, and Strangeways Chapel choirs, whose services, together with those of the organist, were gratuitously given.

The room was beautifully decorated with articles of vertu, flowers, plants, and pictures contributed by Miss Holding and Messrs. John and George Holding, Mr. Wignall, and also Messrs. Elkington and Co., who supplied the presentation plate, which was valued at £250, on which was inscribed—"Presented to the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., in affectionate commemoration of the fiftieth year of his ministry at Cross-street Chapel, Manchester. October 15th, 1878."

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE GIRLS IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

[A PAPER read by Mrs. FREESTON before the Manchester District Sunday School Union.]

PART I.

Not unfrequently may earnest teachers on the girls' side of a Sunday school be heard to say—"I would rather have a class of boys than girls; I much prefer teaching boys." And to the question why, the answer will probably be—"Boys seem brighter; they will answer my questions readily; and, more than this, will question me; hence I feel to have been of use to them. While girls, on the other hand, are so listless and indifferent, that I am constantly discouraged. Many of them only attend half the day, thus seriously interfering with all attempts at systematic teaching, and when they do come what interest they manifest is rather bestowed upon each other's frocks and jackets than the lesson I am taking." These complaints, it should be said, are not made of the very little girls, but refer more to those who are, say, upwards of ten or twelve years old; and of these it must be confessed that such complaints are not without foundation.

Naturally the question arises, How comes this difference? Why is it less easy to interest girls in their lessons—to rouse them to think and inquire, to excite in them a love for knowledge—than boys? The reply which first suggests itself, because prompted by general belief, is that girls are differently gifted from boys; that to them has not been given, with boys, the same earnest grasp of what is intellectual. Without staying either to argue this point or to quote authorities on the subject, I will only say that the ablest and most experienced writers on the education of the young affirm emphatically that, whenever girls and boys have been educated under precisely the same conditions, it has been found impossible to strike an average of inferiority on either side.

For brevity's sake, then, I shall venture to assume that, if there be any difference in the mental capability of boys and girls, it is not sufficient to form any impediment to the work of the Sunday school teacher. Given a fair start and favourable circumstances, and our girls are equal to the best teaching we can give them; and the cause for this lack of earnestness is not to be regarded as inherent, for it is not difficult to trace it to what is altogether external. Contrast the ordinary life of two average Sunday-school scholars—a boy and a girl. I am not thinking of the waifs and strays (those whose attendance at school is limited to three or four months out of the twelve), but say two from families connected more or less with the chapel. First the boy: He goes to day school full time; in the evening he has his home tasks, and they are regularly performed, for he has nothing else to do, and he is urged forward both by assistance from his father at home, and also by the hope of gaining prizes at school; on Sunday morning he has nothing to do but make himself ready, and so he can get to school fresh and bright, and plenty in time. Now take the girl: Through the week, if she has gone to school at all, it has probably been half the day only, and a part of that half-day has been spent in needlework. Thus, while the boy has from five to seven hours per day of mental culture, the girl has only two to three; and when lessons are done, and he is brightening his wits and increasing his knowledge by reading, she is nursing, sewing, dusting, and so forth. When she comes to school on Sunday she is already tired, for she has been up early—has washed and dressed little ones, and performed many other household duties. What wonder, then, that while the boy falls naturally and heartily to his lessons, the girl, having been kept most of her time in quite a different groove, finds it impossible by a mere effort of will to wrench herself out of that groove, and meet her teacher with that receptive and responsive attitude of mind, in the absence of which the best of lessons will be ineffective. Let us trace the probable future of this girl. She is passed on from class to class in the school in order to make room for younger girls, but yielding on her way but scant satisfaction to her teachers, for very little of real progress have they dared to chronicle concerning her. She has ceased to attend a day school, and has gone to work in the mill, and the effect of this change has been unfavourable rather than otherwise. A feeling of independence has been created within her, which has made her both somewhat impatient of control and also less willing to receive instruction from her teacher; her manners have become less gentle, and her mind more obtuse. In passing, I am very happy to say that many pleasant exceptions to this state of things have fallen within my own experience, but still they have been exceptions: and to return to our sketch. This girl drifts on in a purposeless sort of way, performing her daily portion of work, and extracting something that she calls amusement from her leisure, but having only the dimmest possible conception of any higher claims. She hears something about the duty of self-culture, of indebtedness to our nature within and to the world without, but this is not for her; these things belong to boys and men, she is only a girl; and thus, with faculties undeveloped and soul unawakened, she reaches womanhood.

Whether the effects to the woman of this mis-education of the girl will be more positive or negative in their character, will depend much upon the sphere of life in which she finds herself. If she remain unmarried they will be more confined to herself; she will be the greatest sufferer, for her existence will be the poorest, narrowest thing that can be conceived. Her dwelling will be on the bleak and barren side of the mountain, where the sun never shines, and the birds do not visit, for there is no tall tree to woo them; where the hum of the bee is not heard, for the flowers are without fragrance; where no soft carpet of grass tempts the onward step, but all before and all around is a dreary waste, beset with sharp stones and stunted shrubs, which hurt her feet as she stumbles along, till, utterly weary, she asks to be freed from the burden called life. And all the time, had she but been shown the way to it, there lies just over the hill-top that world of beauty, and wonder, and happiness—of all that tends to make this life of ours, not a burden, but a glorious gift.

Let it, however, be taken for granted that this girl will marry—perhaps to a young man in the Sunday school. If so, we shall continue to see them on a Sunday for a time. Then, as children gather round them, the wife will be withdrawn, and only to be found in her home. Let us visit that home ten years after the marriage of these young people. We know that the husband has been steady and industrious, and glad to avail himself of any opportunities for self-improvement; and we know, too, that the wife has seemed constantly devoted to her home and family; we therefore find the home as we expect—substantial, and outwardly comfortable. Thrift, cleanliness, and order are everywhere apparent. Why, then, that look of weary discontent on the face of the wife? Why that lack of deference, that ill-concealed contempt for her opinions on the part of both husband and children? There is but one answer—it is to her own shortcomings that this is traceable. She is beating the air in blind protest against this neglect by husband and children, but sees not that the cause lies in herself. She is ignorant, and, worst of all, passively so, going through life in the belief that such is the right and proper condition for her; and of this ignorance have come inevitably weakness, prejudice, cramped and distorted views of life with its manifold claims and problems and possibilities, and hence, though at the outset of life there seemed a sufficiently broad basis of sympathy between husband and wife to justify a prospect of domestic happiness for them, that basis of sympathy has narrowed with years until now it can scarcely be said to exist. The husband has of necessity been in contact with the outer world, and as a consequence his nature has expanded, his character has strengthened, and his manners have improved. He has had opportunities of studying higher types of manhood than himself and has gained thereby.

The wife meanwhile has been retrograding. As the mother of a young family it was simply impossible for her to keep pace with her husband in his intellectual pursuits, or his practical interest in the great world without. But she could have followed at such a distance as to have kept him in sight. She could have manifested an interest in what interested him, and given him sympathy and companionship over a part of the way, and a cheerful "God speed" for the rest. But she has neglected to do this; she has permitted her best impulses of nature to wither; she has closed up her mind against instruction, and her heart to the reception of holy influences from without, narrowing herself down instead to a mere lever in the domestic machinery, ignoring entirely the vital fact that her husband and children have other needs than those which are merely physical. She has failed to understand that the performance of what are called menial duties will dignify or degrade as they are regarded as means to an end or an end in themselves. Instead of household arrangements being made solely with a view to family needs and comfort, the latter are expected to be subservient to the former. Probably husband and children are kept huddled in a small back room, while a pleasant room is only kept to be looked at. Toys, books, and newspapers are classed as litter, and find therefore no abiding place. A wet wash-day or a sad baking is a calamity for which every one must put on the deepest mourning. The father may come home in the evening full of some new invention or discovery that has just startled the world, and in which he desires to interest his children while sitting round the tea table; but should some petty and unlooked for disarrangement of the domestic programme have occurred—the visit uninvited of a neighbour's cat or fowls—the event has to be circumstantially detailed and commented upon, fittingly bewailed, until the opportunity for anything higher in the way of conversation has passed away for ever. Husband and wife go their different way, mutually dissatisfied with the scant sympathy received at the hands of the other, and the children lose a valuable season for instruction.

That there are many homes of which a still more unsatisfactory description would have to be given, there can, unfortunately, be little doubt; but to these no reference need now be made, as it is an average not an extreme case I am thinking of.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

BURGLARY AT THE HOUSE OF THE REV. P. H. WICKSTEED.

THE numerous friends of Mr. Wickstead will read with much regret the following account of a burglary at his house, and of the serious personal attack upon him.

At the Marylebone Police Court, on Monday, Charles Coaffer, 27, of 1, Ann-street, Stepney, a ticket-writer; Findley Wentworth Burt, 22, of the Red House, Lower Keate-street, Spitalfields, optician; John Shaen, 20, of 28, Castle-street, Leicester Square, tailor; and Agnes Ralph, 27, of the Red House, Lower Keate-street, Spitalfields, a bread-basket maker, were placed in the dock before Mr. de Rutzen on the charge of being concerned together in burglariously entering the dwelling-house of Mr. Philip Henry Wickstead, No 7, Regent's Park Villas, Oval Road, Regent's Park, and stealing therefrom a silk purse containing 30 foreign coins, a silver fork, a silver spoon, an overcoat, and a dagger—value £5. 10s.; they were further charged with feloniously cutting and wounding the said Mr. Wickstead, with intent to do grievous bodily harm.—Emily R. Wickstead, wife of the prosecutor, stated that about twenty minutes past twelve on Saturday morning she heard a noise, as of a window being opened, she being in bed at the time, and soon afterwards there was a heavy fall. She got out of bed and went on to the landing, and saw that there was a light in the study, and directly afterwards some men came out into the passage, and she believed two of the prisoners were the men. She awoke her husband, and he ran downstairs, whereupon the men extinguished the light. They had missed from the house a purse containing foreign coins, and a small knife or dagger (which articles were now produced), an overcoat, a spoon, and a fork, their total value being nearly £6.—Detective-inspector Frederick Abberline said that on the previous morning he went with Police-sergeants Foster and Thicke and Police-constable Marriott to the Red House, Lower Keate-street, Spitalfields, where, in a tap-room, they found all the prisoners. When told that they would be charged with a burglary at Regent's Park, Coaffer became very violent, but he was taken charge of, and was told that he would be also charged with being concerned in a burglary at Islington. Witness asked the woman to turn out her pockets, when she took out the purse produced. On the mantelpiece he found the coins and a quantity of pawn-tickets relating to property. The house of Coaffer was afterwards searched, when a large number of articles were found, together with the Norwegian dagger stolen from the prosecutor. Witness asked for a remand, as the prosecutor was too ill to attend, he having been stabbed in the abdomen. Several other charges of burglary in different parts of London would be preferred against the prisoners, which the police hoped to be able to prove at the next hearing. Mr. de Rutzen remanded the prisoners till the 15th inst.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

BELFAST: MOUNTPOTTINGER.—A soirée in connection with the Band of Hope was held in the schoolroom on Tuesday evening, the 8th inst., and about 180 children, with other friends, were present. After tea, R. M'Calmont, Esq., being called to the chair, a varied programme was gone through, consisting of speeches from the Chairman, Revs. A. Gordon, R. J. Orr, J. Pollard, D. Thompson, and W. Spackman, Esq. The choir, led by Mr. J. Scott, jun., sang some glees. Messrs. W. Bullick and Gallashan kindly gave some songs, and the Misses M'Calmont and Miss Rankin performed two duets on the piano. At the close all were highly entertained by Messrs. S. Courtney and W. M'Calmont with limelight views of our native land, concluding with a humorous set of views of "Brown's adventures with the bear." Votes of thanks to all who contributed were proposed by Mr. Thompson and seconded by Mr. J. M'Williams, and carried.

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD.—On Wednesday evening week a soirée to open the session of the Social Union was held, and was attended by about seventy of the members and friends of the church. After tea, the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams took the chair, and readings were given by Messrs. Ernest Jones, J. Birkett, J. Chorlton, J. Ogden, H. Wilde, and J. H. Tait, interspersed with music under the leadership of Mr. J. Harrison.

MANCHESTER: THE LOWER MOSLEY-STREET NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.—The annual soirée of this Society was held on Saturday evening, and proved more than usually attractive and successful. Many objects were exhibited of great interest to students of natural history, and a large part of the evening was spent in the examination of these and in intercourse between the members and visitors. The report presented by the honorary secretary (Mr. Hyde) stated that the Society maintained its reputation as a working society. Many of the members are known to be hard working naturalists, some, at least, being given to original research; and whilst they would be pleased to see an increase in the number of members, the committee did not wish any to join who lacked the determination to do practical work.—Mr. R. H. Alcock president, delivered an interesting address on "The aims of the modern botanical student," and at the close a hearty and unanimous vote of thanks was given to him, on the motion of Mr. Ashton, seconded by Mr. W. Horsfall.

SOUTHAMPTON: KELL MEMORIAL SCHOOLS.—The weekly lecture in connection with the Philosophical and Musical Society was given by Mr. B. K. Spencer, of Highfield. There was a large attendance of members and friends, the chair being taken by the Rev. D. Amos. Mr. Spencer, who was heartily received, said that the object of his remarks would be to demonstrate the possibility of arriving at absolute truth; albeit, he need hardly remind them, that to that desired goal there was no royal road; the ascent was by no means easy, but, though laborious, it was safe, and replete with the happiest results. Many a century had slipped away which, like the scroll of the old prophet, was written upon "within and without, with mourning, lamentation, and woe." Its philosophy, "falsely so-called," was the result of a most fallacious method, adopted by those who did not relish the mental labour required for the discovery of truth. It formed a theory, or supposition, independently of all known facts; and then explained the appearance of nature on the blind assumption that the theory was true. But the intellectual world was now dominated by a very different and better spirit; and inasmuch as the best interests of the human race were indissolubly connected with the progress of scientific research, it was of the highest importance that the students' pathway should be as the shining light, "shining more and more unto the perfect day." Placed, as we were, in a universe teeming with wonders, all appealing in turn to the noblest faculties of the mind, the multifarious phenomena would (without method) involve it in incessant perplexity, leaving it tormented by base and superstitious fears, by gloomy retrospect, and by horrible forebodings. But when the celestial radiance of simple truth dawned upon the soul, "lo, the winter was over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth, and the time of singing of birds has come." The lecturer then, in a logical and self-evident series of propositions, explained the modus operandi of his system, embracing observation, hypotheses, induction, and theory. The required mental work was traced from inception to triumphant demonstration. Notable cases were adduced of wonderful results in scientific research, consequent on the adoption of the process—as in the grand discovery of the planet Neptune by Adams and Leverrier, in September, 1846—of Ceres, in 1801, followed by 179 of the Asteroids; the discovery by Senefelder, of lithography; and the further results of chromo-lithography, of zincography, and anastatic printing. He earnestly exhorted his hearers to spare no pains in emulating such bright examples of the world's benefactors; and when the inevitable hour of their departure drew nigh, the excellent glory would be theirs of having contributed, to some extent at least, to leave the place of their sojourn better than they found it.

DERBY: FRIARGATE.—The annual opening meeting of the Literary Class was held on Saturday week. After tea the members and friends adjourned to the lower school-room, when the chairman (the Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A.), made a few remarks, and said that a desire having been expressed by the members of the class, it had been decided to continue the study of English literature, as in the preceding year, and invited those friends present, who are not members of the class, to join them. At the close of the meeting of the class on Monday evening, Mr. Jno. Green presented to the Rev. C. D. Badland, on behalf of the members of the class, a copy of "Browning's Poems," as a small token of their appreciation of his services as chairman of the class during last year.

GLOSSOP.—The annual meeting of this congregation was recently held, when the roll of members numbered 66. The average offertory for 50 Sundays had been 17s. 3d.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—On Monday evening week the Social Union and Literary class held their first meeting for the winter. The literary class is formed for the study of standard English authors; and is open to anyone who may wish to join. The subject of study this winter is Thomas Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus."

MOSSLEY.—The annual sermons in aid of the funds of the church were preached in the Free Christian Church, on Sunday last, October 13th, in the morning by the Rev. Chas. T. Poynting, B.A., of Platt Chapel, Rusholme, Manchester, and in the evening by the Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., of Gorton. The collection amounted to £33. 4s. 8d.

WALSALL.—On Tuesday night week a soirée was held in the Unitarian School to celebrate the inauguration of a new society, to be called "The Stafford-street Improvement and Recreation Society." The President for the first term (the Rev. P. Dean) presided, and, in speaking of the new institution, said though it would hold its meetings in that school, it would be entirely unsectarian; for its objects (improvement and recreation) belonged exclusively to neither Unitarianism nor Trinitarianism. It would be open to all adults of both sexes, of any theological or political views; and in their lectures and discussions there would be no tabooed subjects, except such as decency and common sense rejected. Several pieces of music were given by the chapel choir, and readings by Messrs. Anderson, Blinkhorn, jun., and the Chairman.—There was a fair attendance, considering that so little announcement had been made.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

Several paragraphs, many to hand very late, must stand over a week.

A MINISTER FOR NEW ZEALAND.

To the Editors.—Some weeks since, I wrote you from Birkenhead relative to a hope expressed by a gentleman who is living at Wellin, a New Zealand, that some clergyman of Unitarian or liberal views could be induced to settle there.

I see now that my name should have been appended to the letter for publication, and will be obliged by your inserting it with the name as required.—Regretting the mistake and delay, I am, sir, faithfully yours,

JOHN KENNEDY.

Ballasloe, 9th October, 1878.

THE VALUE OF DOCTRINAL TEACHING.

To the Editors.—Your correspondent "S. F. W." having passed through painful religious experiences in exchanging an orthodox for an heterodox form of faith, asks whether we are doing all we can to save others from suffering from a similar experience; but curiously enough he recommends as a remedy what appears to be the primary cause of his own trouble, viz., doctrinal teaching. It is evident from his own confession that he received from others doctrines which his own mind at any rate in its maturer development, rejected as false, and in rejecting these doctrines he passed through painful experiences. It is obvious that if he never had had doctrinal teaching he never would have had the pain of rejecting the doctrines taught, and that in recommending doctrinal teaching, he is recommending the false system which inflicted injury upon himself.

He will of course reply, I was taught false doctrine and I want you to teach the true doctrine. Good; but if we teach our own doctrines, how can we be confident they are perfectly true; and if they are imperfect they are so far delusive and liable to be rejected with pain and suffering as soon as they are discovered to be false.

The fact is "S. F. W." is still too orthodox, and has not yet discovered the primary error of insisting on a theology as a basis of a stable religious life instead of insisting on a pure faith as the foundation of a true theology.

I may, however, be doing your correspondent an injustice as to this; and by doctrinal teaching he may mean not any creed—Unitarian or otherwise—which he or I may hold, but that the teacher must express his own highest convictions if he is to teach to any purpose. But if this is his meaning, probably no one would dispute his statement; neither would anyone question the wisdom of comparing differing opinions, and deciding which were relatively the truer views. The error lies in supposing that, because you take a certain position your pupils will take the same one. "S. F. W." himself, having been taught one doctrine, believes another; and so it is with all. We learn many things from mental and moral experiences through which we pass that a teacher's words cannot convey to us. Your correspondent laments defections from the Unitarian ranks, and attributes them to want of clear doctrinal teaching. I, on the contrary, see little to regret if some can find a better religious home outside our church, except that our church, like other churches, is still imperfect, and I suspect doctrinal teaching will often rather than not be found to be a chief cause of defection from our body. What a religious nature needs is a religious life, not a correct theology; and if you insist upon a correct theology, the religious nature seeks elsewhere, if not always successfully, a religious life. I believe it is a great mistake to suppose that, because a man disconnects himself with a Unitarian church, he has radically changed his views. In nine cases out of ten he takes the greater part of his Unitarianism with him, or else, having been taught from childhood to pin his faith on a correct creed, he discovers this faith to be inconsistent with the mental and spiritual freedom of our churches, and essentially orthodox in spirit; and, therefore, leaves a church without standards for one that has them.

The Christian church is divided into two great sections—those who believe in authoritative doctrines (and, therefore, in doctrinal teaching), and those who do not. Those who believe that Christ came to correct men's theology, and those who believe that he came to redeem men from spiritual darkness and death by calling them to a more perfect and ideal life. All those who neglect or ignore the divine call to a more perfect life, naturally lapse into the opposite school, and expect a safe theological position to secure them from the evil consequences of a morally unsound one. Orthodoxy clings to doctrines as a means of grace felt to be much needed by the individual conscience. Heterodoxy trusts in Divine Goodness, and prays for a more perfect life.

It is very encouraging to us to find orthodox churches casting off the grosser forms of orthodoxy, but it is to be regretted that amongst ourselves, born to a better heritage, the evil genius of doctrinal teaching still finds utterance.

Converts from orthodoxy chiefly teach us what a bad thing orthodoxy is, and their teaching should be taken as a warning to us, to imitate nothing orthodox in form or spirit, and especially not doctrinal teaching.—I am, yours truly,

JOHN W. CROMPTON.

THE NOTTINGHAM DEBATE.

To the Editors.—In reference to the debate between Messrs. Armstrong and Bradlaugh, it appeared to me that Mr. Armstrong based all his arguments in favour of the reasonableness of prayer on his own personal experience in secret prayer, whereas Mr. Bradlaugh's arguments were addressed to the metaphysics of public prayer, a distinction so important that there is more than one religious denomination that I know of that includes the views of both speakers, and who profess to be specially supported by Christ's teaching, in shutting the door upon the world when invoking the help of Almighty power. Had this vital distinction been made at this discussion, I imagine the difference in their views would not have seemed important enough to invite public discussion.—I am, sir, yours truly, Tunbridge Wells.

A. SLATTER.

COMING WEEK.

BIRMINGHAM: OLD MEETING.—On Sunday, at 11 and 6 30, the Rev. Dr. R. Laird Collier will preach.

BLACKPOOL.—On Sunday, at 10 45 and 6 30, the Rev. A. B. Cann will preach.

DERBY.—On Sunday, at 10 45 and 6 30, sermons in aid of the chapel funds, by the Rev. W. H. Channing, B.A.

LONDON.—Lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, on "What has Unitarian Christianity done for the People?" on Wednesday, in the Luxembourg Hall. On Thursday, at the Town Hall, Hammersmith. On Friday at the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms, Southampton-street, Peckham.

MANCHESTER: STRANGWAYS.—On Saturday, at 5 30, Band of Hope meeting, and address by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams.

MANCHESTER.—On Sunday, at 4, teachers' meeting at Embury-street, when Mr. John H. Jones will read a paper on "The Future of Sunday Schools."

NORWICH: EASTERN UNITARIAN MISSION.—On Sunday morning, at 11, sermon by the Rev. A. Chalmers, at Norwich; on Monday, annual meeting.

SCARBOROUGH.—On Sunday morning, at 10 45, and in the evening at 7, the Rev. Dendy Agate will preach.

SHEFFIELD.—North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association Conference at Upper Chapel, on Monday, at 7 30. On Tuesday, delegates' meeting at 10, and sermon by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A.

TAMWORTH.—On Sunday, re-opening of the chapel, at 11 and 6 30. Preacher, Rev. D. Maginnis.

THE CAUSES OF Life, Structure, and Species.

By the Rev. Edward C. Towne, B.A. 70 pp.; 1s., post free. An Announcement of New Biological Discoveries. Tubbs and Brook, Manchester; Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., London.

THE UNITARIAN MAGAZINE:

24pp. Monthly. Price Twopence. Single copies post-free for Twopence-halfpenny in stamps. Orders to be sent to Rev FRANK WALTERS, 10, Corunna-street, Glasgow.

Just Published, Price 1s.

IS IT REASONABLE TO WORSHIP GOD?

The only authorised and verbatim report of two nights' debate at Nottingham between the Rev. R. A. Armstrong and Charles Bradlaugh, with a Preface by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG. Freethought Publishing Company, 28, Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Just published.

JOHN SEARCHMAN'S LANTERN; or, a

Guide to the Bible, Testament, and Al Koran, being an impartial attempt to investigate the Trinity and Unity of God, with passages referring to the legal, moral, and Scriptural sanction of Polygamy. Price 1s., post free, from A. B. Lownds, Victoria-street, Tunstall, Staffordshire.

Just Published, Price One Penny.

THE BASIS OF RELIGION AND MORALS

By WM. WHITWORTH,

Author of the "Book of Natural Laws."

Published by Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London House Yard, Paternoster Row, London. Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate, Manchester.

Now Ready, Price 4d., No. V. of

TEACHERS' NOTES: containing Hints for the Elder Boys; Lessons on the Title Page and Table of Contents of an English Bible; Moral Lessons from Common Things; A Piece of Chalk; A Piece of White Coral; The Hand; Sleep; A Leaf, &c.

Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

THE TRUTHSEEKER, Edited by the Rev.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS, and published on the first of every month, is a free and unsectarian Review of all books and events relating to the development of religious life and liberty in the Christian Church. Every number contains original lectures and essays, together with reviews of present and permanent interest. Price Threepence.—London: Williams and Norgate, Covent Garden. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!"

And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Pretty bindings. Price 9d.

Publishers: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., London.

Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—

25 BOOKS for 12s. 6d.

If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News," for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

Tenth edition, with six new chapters.

THE DESTINY OF THE SOUL: A CRITICAL HISTORY OF THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

By WILLIAM R. ALGER.

And a complete Bibliography of the subject, by EZRA ABBOT, Librarian of Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass.

Price Ten Shillings.

This work will be forwarded to any address at the price above named carriage free, or the usual discount will be allowed to purchasers in the Bookroom of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.—Address Mr. Henry V. Brace, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

NOTE.—In the Press, and will shortly be issued by the Association, The Prophets and their Interpreters. By Dr. G. Vance Smith. Price Sixpence.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION FUND LIBRARY.

Volumes for 1878. Three Volumes for 21s.

Just Published.

1. BAUR'S (F. C.) CHURCH HISTORY OF THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. Translated from the third German edition. Edited by the Rev. Allan Menzies. Volume I.

2. HAUSRATH'S HISTORY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT TIMES. Translated by the Rev. C. T. Poynting. Volume I. shortly.

3. EWALD'S COMMENTARY ON THE PROPHETS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. Translated by the Rev. J. Frederick Smith. Volume III. shortly.

New Subscribers may have the previous Volumes at subscribers' price, viz., 7s., instead of 10s. 6d. per volume.

KEIM'S LIFE OF JESUS OF NAZARA. Volume IV. is in the press, and will form the first volume for 1879.

* A list of the contents of the first five years may be had on application. 15 vols., 8vo, published at £7. 17s. 6d. to Subscribers for £5. 5s.

WILLIAMS and NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale.

We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to

24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester.

H. OGDEN & SON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION

AT

MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

MANUFACTORY—CORNBROOK, MANCHESTER.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccle. New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street, aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester. London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, October 18, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—913.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doing and Saying	384
Our Sunday Schools	384
Scottish Notes	385
Revision of the Authorised Version	385
Midland Christian Union Sunday School Association	385
Earth's Brighter Day	386
A Religion for the People	386
The Late Mrs. Mason, of Hull	386
The Late Benjamin Workman	386
Nottingham Congregational Soirée	387
North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association	387
Blackpool Recognition Tea Party	388
News of our Churches	389
Correspondence	389

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANACK, 1879.

CORRECTIONS AND ADVERTISEMENTS should be sent at once to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-st., Manchester.

UPPER BROOK-STREET FREE CHURCH.—The Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds, will preach the ANNIVERSARY SUNDAY SCHOOL SERMONS, on Sunday next, morning at 10.45, subject, "The Perfect Life;" evening, at 6.30, subject, "Religious Emotion." All seats free. Offertory.

BLACKPOOL: BANKS STREET.—On Sunday next, October 27th, the Rev. A. B. CAMM will preach, Morning (10.45), "The Strength of Quietness in Troubled Times;" Evening (6.30), "Second Chapter of Mental Autobiography."

SCARBOROUGH: WESTBOROUGH CHURCH.—On Sunday next, October 27, Rev. DENDY AGATE, B.A. Morning (10.45), "Religion in Relation to Pleasure and Pain;" Evening (7), Theological Lectures.—No. I., Introductory: "Doctrines and Principles."

UNITY CHURCH, SOUTH SHIELDS.—On Sunday next, HARVEST FESTIVAL. Morning subject, "Pure Religion;" evening, "Florence Nightingale." Special Sunday School Services in afternoon. Preacher, Rev. R. C. SMITH. Collections for Infirmary.

CHELTHENHAM: BAYSHILL CHAPEL.—The Rev. WM. HENRY CHANNING will preach on Sunday, October 27th. Subjects: morning, "The All-Giver and Forgiver;" evening, "Christian Optimism versus Agnostic Pessimism." Service at 11 and 7.

BIRMINGHAM: OLD MEETING HOUSE. HOSPITAL SUNDAY.—Collections will be made on Sunday next, October 27th, in aid of the funds of the Queen's Hospital, when Dr. R. LAIRD COLLIER, of Boston, U.S., will preach. Morning service at 11, subject, "The Meaning of Life's Misery;" evening service at 6.30, subject, "How each Man makes his own World." Friends and strangers are cordially invited.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

A COURSE OF FOUR LECTURES will be delivered under the auspices of the above Society as follows:—
At the Luxembourg Hall, Dalston (opposite the railway station), on the following Wednesday evenings:—

October 23rd, 1878, "What has Unitarian Christianity done for the People?" By the Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS, of Liverpool.

October 30th, "The Religious Value of the Unitarian Faith." By the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS, of Leicester.

November 6th, "Religion for to-day." By the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., of Nottingham.

November 13th, "The Catholicity of Unitarianism." By the Rev. A. WORTHINGTON, B.A., of Mansfield.

On Thursday evenings, October 24th and 31st, November 7th and 14th, they will be delivered at the Town Hall, Hammersmith.

On Friday evenings, October 25th, November 1st, 8th, and 15th, they will be delivered at the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms, Southampton-street, Peckham.

To commence at eight o'clock.

SCOTTISH UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETINGS of the above Society will be held in Edinburgh on Sunday, the 27th, and Monday, the 28th inst. The Rev. HENRY IERSON will preach the SERMONS on Sunday, in St. Mark's Chapel, Castle Terrace, and on Monday the Committee will meet at two o'clock, and the members of the Association at three o'clock, in the same place. A SOIREE will be held in the Church at 7 o'clock, Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND, president, in the chair.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines."

AN ADDRESS (in connection with the opening of the Session) will be delivered by the Rev. JAMES MARTINEAU, LL.D., D.D., at University Hall, Gordon Square, London, on Wednesday, October 30th, at 4 o'clock. The lecture is open to the public.

LONDON: STAMFORD STREET UNITARIAN CHAPEL, BLACKFRIARS ROAD.—ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.—On Sunday, November 3rd, Dr. R. LAIRD COLLIER, of Boston, U.S., will preach. Services commence at 11 and 6.30. The usual collections will be made, towards the Chapel Funds.

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

On Tuesday evening, 5th November, the Rev. CHARLES WICKSTEED, B.A., will read a Paper entitled "An Attempt to Define the Actual Historic Attitude of the Roman Catholic Church towards the Translation and Circulation of the Scriptures." The chair will be taken at seven o'clock.

W. C. BOWIE, Hon. Sec.

Memorial Hall, 23rd October, 1878.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION FOR MISSIONARY PURPOSES.

A MISSION SERVICE will be held in CROSS STREET CHAPEL, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 6th, 1878, when addresses will be given by Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., Rev. CHAS. WICKSTEED, B.A., and Rev. Dr. SADLER. The CHOIRS of the District are requested to meet in Cross-street Chapel on Wednesday evening, October 30th, at 7.30, to rehearse the Hymns and Canticles.

CHAS. T. POYNTING, } Hon.
JOHN DENDY, } Junr., } Secs.

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

On Friday evening, November 8th, at eight o'clock in the evening, a LECTURE (the first of a course of six) will be delivered by the Rev. JOHN PAGE HOPPS, subject, "An Appeal to Jesus against the Belief of Eternal Punishment." All seats free. Offertory.

DOB LANE NEW CHAPEL.

The Building Committee earnestly appeal for further Subscriptions, to enable them to complete the building, protect the graveyard, and procure an organ. To accomplish this, they will require about £300.

This appeal is urgently presented by Halliwell Thomas, Newton Heath, minister; Harry Rawson, 89, Market-street, Manchester, trustee; Luke Pollitt, London House, Newton Heath, treasurer; John F. Allen, Hulme Hall Lane, Miles Patting, secretary.

The Committee thankfully acknowledge the following gifts and donations:—

	£	s.	d.
Stained glass window (from the daughters of the late Rev. James Taylor, a former minister), value	70	0	0
A bell for the church (the gift of James Hopgood, Esq., London), value	20	0	0
Mrs. Cookson, Salford	10	0	0
James Schofield, Newton Heath	2	0	0
B. Ogden, Newton Heath	1	0	0
Wm. Hall, Pendlebury	0	10	0
William Branton, Newton Heath	0	10	0
Mrs. Etchells, Chester	1	0	0
George Wadsworth	2	0	0
John Smith, Failsword	0	10	0

THE Rev. A. BUCKLEY, Elland, is open to SUPPLY VACANT and other PULPITS.

SHEPION MALLET.—The PULPIT of Cowsl-street Chapel, Shepion Mallet, will be VACANT after the 29th of the present month.—Applications to be addressed to F. Showering, Secretary and Treasurer.

STANNINGTON.—The PULPIT at Underbank Chapel will be VACANT at the end of the present year.—For particulars address M. Hunter, Junr., Greystones, Sheffield.

HAROLD VILLA SCHOOL, HORSHAM.—The Rev. T. W. Scott has VACANCIES for a Few Additional PUPILS.—Terms on application.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUITSFORD.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—For Prospectus apply to Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, Principal.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, between the ages of 7 and 15: careful attention is given to the education, health, comfort, and happiness of the pupils.—For prospectus, apply to Miss Curtis, Westbourne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the Instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Rev. Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Wellbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.

Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., of the Universities of London and Heidelberg, assisted by Mr. G. H. HENSON, University of London, thoroughly prepares Boys for college, the local examinations, or for business. The school possesses an unusually complete provision of apparatus and specimens for the teaching of science. No means is neglected which the experience of fourteen years has shown to conduce to the progress and interest of pupils in their studies. Good cricket ground and playground.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties' Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

SUPERIOR AMERICAN ORGAN TO BE SOLD, cheap, with 12 stops, two manuals and pedals, by Mason and Hamlin.—Address E, Herald Office, Manchester.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BOARD AND RESIDENCE FOR ONE OR TWO LADIES.—Address Y Z, care of Mr. Williams, Stationer, Union-street, Bath.

EDINBURGH.—Widow Lady wishes to RECEIVE as BOARDERS Children whose Parents are abroad, or Orphans, to whom every care and attention would be paid.—Address, with references, Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND, 29, Dublin-street.

THE UNITARIAN MAGAZINE:

24pp. Monthly. Price Twopenny. Single copies post-free for Twopenny-halfpenny in stamps. Orders to be sent to Rev FRANK WALTERS, 10, Colonna-street, Glasgow.

New Publication.

THE PROPHETS AND THEIR INTERPRETERS.

By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH. Price 6d. British and Foreign Unitarian Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Just Published, Price 1s.

IS IT REASONABLE TO WORSHIP GOD?

The only authorised and verbatim report of two nights' debate at Nottingham between the Rev. R. A. Armstrong and Charles Bradlaugh, with a Preface by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG. Freehought Publishing Company, 28, Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Now ready. In small 8vo, pp. xvi.—240. Cloth, red edges. Price 2s. 6d. (to Congregations, 1s. 8d.)

A BOOK OF PRAYER: IN THIRTY ORDERS OF WORSHIP.

With additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. Edited by R. CROMPTON JONES.

Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

Just Published, Price One Penny.

THE BASIS OF RELIGION AND MORALS.

By WM. WHITWORTH, Author of the "Book of Natural Laws."

Published by Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London House Yard, Paternoster Row, London. Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate, Manchester.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!"

And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Price 9d.

Publishers: S. W. PARRIDGE & Co., London.

* * Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—

25 BOOKS for 12s. 6d. If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News!" for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

YOUNG DAYS

ANNUAL VOLUME FOR 1878. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Nearly ready. Illustrated. Cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.; gilt edges, 2s.

IDA MAYHEW.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN.

Author of "Daisy Root," "Rosy's Three Homes," &c. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

YOUNG DAYS.

Contents: My Wee Lambie—Ida Mayhew—Nothing good shall perish—John Chinaman at work—A message—A dead hawk and a live one—The adventures of Whisky and Frisky—Pearls of thought—The generous cloud—Be kind, boys—Little Jack Frost—Puzzle Bag.

The Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET, SCHOOLS.

THE BRITANNIA BUILDING SOCIETY MEETS on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in every Month at Lower Mosley-street Schools from 7.30 to 8.30. FIVE PER CENT INTEREST ON LOANS.

Shares may be taken up and Loans Paid daily to HENRY PAULDEN, Secretary, 1, Cooper-street, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale. We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to 24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester.

H. OGDEN & SON, MANUFACTURERS OF USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION. AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

MANUFACTORY—CORNBROOK, MANCHESTER.

PAPERHANGINGS.

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE: 93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS, PAINTERS' VARNISHES, &c., &c.

DOING AND SAYING.

The Irish Sunday Closing Act came into operation on Sunday week, and its provisions were carried out without the slightest disturbance.

Holland is to have one more University with one faculty only—that of Orthodox Protestant Theology. It is to be established at Amsterdam.

Of Brooke Herford's sermon, at Saratoga, the Vermont Chronicle says: "We should like to have heard that discourse. We acknowledge real profit in reading the report of it."

The Rev. G. D. McKay, one of the missionaries of the Presbyterian Church, stationed in Formosa, China, has married a Chinese girl, Chang Mia Tsong by name.

Mr. Moody, according to the Chicago Advance, "is preparing a set of new sermons. After they are completed it is possible that he may go to England and join Mr. Sankey in another revival tour."

Hitherto the Government of Holland has not legalised burial by cremation; but the Dutch Cremation Society has a capital of over 10,000 florins, invested in the Two and a Half per Cents., for the purpose of constructing one permanent and another movable "corpse oven." On the general council of the Netherlands Cremation Society are Professor Tiele, of the Leiden University, Professor Oudemans, Past-Rector Magnificus of the Amsterdam University, and several distinguished theologians, chemists, and scholars.

The Evangelical Nonconformist ministers of Liverpool have responded with great readiness to the request that they would co-operate with the clergy of the Church of England in the arrangements for the mission which is to be held in the town in the first week in December. It seems that the desirability of a free interchange of pulpits among ministers of the different denominations during the mission week has been cordially recognised by the various Nonconformist bodies; and it is hoped that at least for seven days both conforming and nonconforming clergy will be ready to sink their differences in a common effort and join in a genuine co-operation.

Dr. Landels says he recently attended a meeting where the claims of missions were heard in a way which deeply impressed the audience. One speaker told them to ask the Lord whether the coin they were about to lay on the plate was what they ought to give to this cause, and, futher, to go home and ask Him whether their annual subscription was as large as it ought to be. The result, so far as it came to Dr. Landels' knowledge, was significant and encouraging. One man who came with two sixpences in his pocket intending to give one or perhaps both, gave half-a-sovereign instead. Another, who might have excused himself for giving nothing or only the smallest coin, was seen to put two sovereigns on the plate. A third was heard to say, "I call that a good speech which, when I came intending to give half-a-crown, made me give a sovereign." A fourth said on the following morning, "I doubled my subscription last year. I had become tired and ashamed of the mechanical guinea a year, and I made it two; but, after what I heard last night, I cannot be content with that. In future I mean to give five pounds."

The Western News says of the parish of Kensington that it swarms with converts and nunneries. One of the Sunday afternoon amusements of the musical young men of Kensington is to hear the monks of the Carmelite Order chant their service in Silver-street. The bass of the unwashed monks gets monotonous, but the organ playing is the best in London. Immediately opposite this chapel is a nunnery. About two hundred yards away is another nunnery, and close by it an Anglican sisterhood. Not far down the Hammersmith Road, on the confines of the parish, another "prison for religious souls" may be found. Nor is this all. Coming northward from the parish church, one lights upon another large conventual building in Portobello Road, and a little step due west brings one out upon still another at Notting Hill Station. For one single parish, even though the pro-Cathedral stands in it, this ought to suffice. But it does not. From the last-named nunnery in Ladbroke Road one can see the spires of the schools in St. Charles's Square, and here the other day Cardinal Manning opened still another nunnery. There will be sufficient houses of refuge presently for all the surplus female population of Kensington. This especial nunnery has in its midst Lady Minna Charlotte Howard, and she is accompanied by eleven sisters, who all take the vows of the Carmelites. It is strange for a Londoner, who remembers when such a thing as a monastery was unknown, to be able to hear no fewer than three convent bells from the same spot.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE GIRLS IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

[A PAPER read by Mrs. FREESTON before the Manchester District Sunday School Union.]

PART II.

It is superfluous to say that the description given before is an undesirable condition of things in the homes of our working men. The question is, how shall we bring about a change for the better? We cannot expect to make women of high principle, broad sympathies, and well-informed minds, out of middle-aged mothers who have barely learned to read. The remedy must be applied at an earlier period of life; and this brings us back to our starting point. Why is it that, in a family of children, the boys, as a rule, receive a larger share of education than the girls? Why, when sickness in the home, limited means, or any other cause, compels a curtailment of the time hitherto devoted to the education of the children, is it the girls who are the chief sufferers—is it their studies which have to be interrupted or cut off? "Oh," the reply comes, "boys have a greater need of a good education than girls. They will have to be put to work ere long, and the boy who has laid a good foundation as regards education has a much better chance of getting up in the world than one whose schooling has been stinted. Then, again, the boys of to-day will have to be the breadwinners for the next generation; while girls—well, they do not need much education either to fit them for going to the mill or for doing housework; and then, when the time comes, they will marry, and their future is secured—their husbands will maintain them."

The only true remark of all that is here stated is, that boys who have had a good educational training have a better chance of making their way in the world than the boys who have not enjoyed these advantages; in other words, a boy's education is of marketable value, and the same cannot with truth be said of a girl's. You desire to raise your daughter in the social scale, and to that end give her an expensive education in order to fit her for being a governess, and then you have to find that the supply of educated governesses is already greater than the demand for them. Or you cast about for a trade or occupation for her, by which she may support herself if necessary, and you find that the most remunerative of these are exclusively in the hands of men (irrespective of their fitness), women being debarred from engaging in them by special rules and regulations; and hence you are discouraged from spending money on either the education or special training of your daughter. But you say a girl will marry, and then her work in the home will be an equivalent for the cost of her maintenance. This is less certain than it seems, and from various causes becomes every year still less certain.

The last census gives an excess of females for England and Wales of considerably over half a million, and states that the disproportion is on the increase. We find, further, that one-third of the whole adult female population maintain themselves by independent work; and, more than this, a very large number of women have not only to maintain themselves, but also be bread-winners for others.

From these facts it will be seen that to content ourselves with giving our girls only such training as will fit them for the performance of household duties, in the belief that such only will be required of them, is a mistake, and a mistake, too, that involves a great amount of injustice. Unquestionably we must give them as complete and practical a knowledge of home duties as possible, but we must not end here. Many of them will be left orphans, and compelled to support themselves. Many of them, from no choice of their own, will have to compete with men for employment. Many of them, from having sickly or idle husbands, will have to maintain the whole family. Many of them will be left widows, with young children depending on them, and the having a "trade in their fingers" or not will just make the difference whether or not those children will have to become paupers. To make our girls independent of marriage is not to unfit them for it. With the exception of, perhaps, music and drawing, no employment need be too absorbing to allow of its being laid aside with ease if necessary, but to make them dependent on marriage for a means of subsistence is unseemly and degrading to the last degree. To say that home is the sphere which nature designed for woman; that to worthily sustain the holy relations of wife and mother must be the highest earthly happiness possible for her, is to adduce the strongest argument why those to whom such happiness is denied should have all the compensation possible; why, since they must walk life's journey alone, we should remove every unnecessary obstruction from their path; why masculine interests in the shape of monopolies should not be permitted to make more difficult their struggle for daily bread.

At first sight it may seem that this question, whether viewed rightly or wrongly, has no direct bearing on the work of the Sunday-school teacher. It may be asked, "What can Sunday-school teachers do to make parents see that they are not dealing fairly by their daughters when they fail to give them the best education in their power?" Or, harder still, "What can they do to make workmen less jealous of admitting their sisters to the great labour market?" These, it may be urged, are matters for school boards, for social economists, for trade unions. Granted: and they are also questions for Sunday-school teachers. Whatever has to do with education, with social reform, with the uplifting of any portion of the great human family, concerns Sunday-school teachers. If teachers have a clear ideal of the kind of character they wish to make of their scholars, it will give definiteness to their teaching; besides which, our interest in our scholars is not limited to the few hours when we meet them on a Sunday; other opportunities are open to us for influencing not only them, but their parents also, and when we see cases in which mistakes are being made, it becomes our duty to speak plainly.

We started with the complaint that our teaching seemed less successful with girls than boys, and ventured a line of argument to account for this. It remains now to bring the question to its practical issue. In order to do this it is not needful that we enter into the whole scheme designated by the comprehensive, but somewhat indefinite term, "The Higher Education of Women." It is not Dr. Jenner's childish terrors for the future of the College of Physicians if it should once open its doors to women that we have to consider, nor yet the danger which Mrs. Sutherland Orr discerns in the far-off distance—that if you place girls and boys on an equal footing as regards both education and the means to secure an independent maintenance, there will come about in time such a preference on the part of women for the larger unshackled sphere, such a renunciation of womanhood, such a remodelling of the Creator's designs, as to threaten the extinction of the human race. We simply now would try and ascertain what we can do in order to take a deeper hold of the girls in our Sunday schools.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

The Pulpit and the Stage: Four Lectures. By Rev. J. Panton Ham; with illustrative notes by Fred. Whymper. London: Charles Henry Clarke.

FROM his pulpit by the Strand, and in the very region of Theatres, Mr. Panton Ham is the right man in the right place to deal with the question of theatre, pulpit, and their mutual relations. Mr. Whymper, in his introduction, gives a pleasant account taken from the Era, and headed, "A Plucky Parson," of a visit made by the writer to Essex-street Chapel, where Mr. Ham was discussing "The Stage and the Moral and Religious Sentiments of Society." The visitor seems to have expected that the stage was to be denounced as it had been by the Church Congress at Croydon, and could hardly believe his ears when he found the preacher "as earnest for the welfare and well-being of the stage as its most ardent supporters." Perhaps Mr. Ham urges his points with less consideration of the other side of the question than is expedient; though when so much is said against the stage one may almost be excused for passing that over for once. There are very grave charges to be laid against the theatre as it is. The best conducted houses often present spectacles which the moralist must censure. Mr. Ham, of course, is not unaware of this, but we wish he had said a stronger word about it, and that he had not felt himself called upon to champion the cause of ballet-dress as against the Lord Chamberlain. Still the book, to our thinking, if it errs, errs on the right side. The theatre, for good or evil, exerts an immense influence. The pulpit must not ignore it, and should indeed feel encouraged in its efforts to urge the improvement of the theatre, by the fact that its influence has in many respects undoubtedly been for good. "The question," as Mr. Ham well puts it, "is, What is our duty towards an institution so inevitable and potential as the theatre?" He asks us to give all emphasis to these two words "inevitable" and "potential." "The theatre will come up and maintain its existence in civilisation." As Schlegel says: "The theatre, where the whole of the social and artistic enlightenment which a nation possesses, the fruit of many centuries of continued exertion, are brought into play within the representation of a few short hours, has an extraordinary charm for every age, sex and rank, and has been the favourite amusement of every cultivated people." Merely to abuse the stage will certainly do nothing to reform it. To give encouragement to any effort made by managers and actors towards raising its tone and making it what it might be, would seem the duty of all who would provide wholesome and elevating amusement for the people. If the clergy and those who wish to see such a state of things would patronise all good plays, their absence from bad ones would be noted, and their verdict would have a weight they would scarcely anticipate. Bad plays would come to be looked upon as low theatres are looked upon now. How much would be gained if that were gained? Mr. Ham's book will do much good in that direction. It is attractive reading, with its many notes full of anecdote and pungent criticism.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE CITY OF GLASGOW BANK FAILURE.

THE Rev. C. C. Macdonald, of Paisley, of whose heresy most have heard, speaking on the bank failure, said that the pulpit did not address itself to the crying wants and moral necessities of the men and women of the time, the circumstances in which they were placed, the temptations that every day assailed them. Its aim had been to show how all Scripture was given by the inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, but it had not shown the same earnestness in making manifest to them how all Scripture is profitable for reproof, and for correction, and for instruction in righteousness. In view, then, of this terrible catastrophe in a time when so to speak, the country in one sense was swimming for its life he did not know how it was possible to say that the pulpit was not to blame. Of all reforms that are needed—and there are many of them that are convulsing churchmen at the present moment that we could let lie past for a century, or two centuries at least—is this one that preachers and teachers of religion should cease to emphasise doctrines that may be described most truly as fossils, and to scourge errors and vices that exist only in men and women of straw. Why should we leave it to the Press, admirably no doubt as it does its work, or to such a lecturer as Miss Faithful to speak to living men and women of follies and vices that are blotting our lives? In our great commercial centres we need strong men, true men, men of force of mind and will in our pulpits, who, even although it should not pay, although it should not swell the church returns, although it should not tell, according to the modern standard, upon the number of communicants and the rate that is raised per head, yet would not fear in the name of Almighty God to denounce fraud and extortion and mad speculation, and that building of bigger and yet bigger bonds for the entombment of immortal souls.

Previous to the Aberdeen Free Presbytery taking up the Smith case on Thursday, they had a long private conference, at which, it has transpired, Mr. Bannatyne, of the Union Church, Aberdeen, a member of the "Constitutional party," was taken to task by Mr. Macdonald, of the Gaelic Church, for allowing into his pulpit on a recent occasion Mr. M'iver, of Uig, a seceder from the Free Church to the Establishment since the passing of the Patronage Abolition Act. A motion to "deal" with Mr. Bannatyne for this act was, it is said, carried by 33 to 13, but, as Mr. Bannatyne appealed to the Synod, further procedure was in the meantime stopped. One of the points put forward against such a promiscuous interchange of pulpits being allowed, was that it was calculated to "jumble the judgments" of the Highlanders as to the real value of Free Church principles.

REVISION OF THE AUTHORISED VERSION.

THE New Testament Company met for its monthly session—the first since the summer vacation—on Tuesday, the 15th inst., and sat for seven hours each day until Friday inclusive. The members present were the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol (in the chair), the Deans of Lichfield and Rochester, Archdeacons Lee and Palmer, Canons Kennedy, Lightfoot, and Westcott, Professors Milligan and Moulton, Dr. D. Brown, Dr. Hort, Dr. Scrivener, Dr. Vance Smith, Dr. Vaughan, and Mr. Humphry, with the secretary, Mr. Troutbeck. The Company was engaged upon the second revision of the Epistles to the Colossians and Thessalonians, which were completed to 1 Thess., iv. There remains, for the completion of the second revision, only 2 Thessalonians and the Book of Revelation, the General and other Epistles having been finished some time ago. A letter recently printed in the papers on behalf of the University presses, intimates that no part of the revised version has yet been published, although the work is far advanced towards completion. This letter has probably been called forth by the fact that another revised version of the Bible (a very good one, too) not long ago made its appearance.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE Autumnal Conference in connection with this Association was held on Saturday afternoon, the 19th inst., in the Hurst-street Schools, Birmingham. There was a large attendance of teachers, about 200 taking tea together. Among others we noticed the Revs. D. Maginnis (president), Stourbridge; J. Harrison, West Bromwich; H. Eachus, Coseley; B. Wright, Birmingham; H. McKean, Oldbury; W. Carey Walters, Whitchurch; T. B. Broadrick (secretary), Lye; Messrs. H. New, Junr., Titterton, Grew, Austin, Parker, Foxall, &c.

After tea the meeting was adjourned to the Chapel, where the PRESIDENT took the chair, and opened the proceedings by moving "That the best thanks of the teachers be given to the Rev. B. Wright, and Hurst-street friends, for their very hospitable reception." The whole expense of tea, &c., has been borne by them. This was seconded by the Rev. H. McKean, and the Rev. B. Wright briefly acknowledged the same.

The PRESIDENT then called upon the secretary (Rev. T. B. Broadrick) to read a paper on "Our Work as Sunday School Teachers, and Helps Therein."

Mr. BROADRICK began by referring to the first Conference of the Association, held just over three years ago, and to the resolution that was then adopted, viz.: "That it is desirable that the teaching in our Sunday schools should comprise a large portion of religious and moral instruction." He wanted, in any discussion which might follow his paper, to avoid that vexed and oft-discussed question as to the discontinuance of so-called secular instruction. He took for granted that our work was essentially and emphatically a religious one. The distrust as to the usefulness of Sunday schools which manifested itself some twelve years ago was passing away, and men were coming to see what a grand work the Sunday school could do—what a powerful instrument for good it might be made. Religion must be the basis of all sound education. The child must be started at the outset of life with its face towards purity, truth, and noble principles. All other things were as nothing compared with a righteous education. If teachers could only get the deep importance of their work rooted in their hearts, there would be no longer any indifference, neither would there be any lack of helpers. He took it that our work was twofold—inspiration and instruction. We have first to quicken in the hearts and souls of the children truth, reverence, sincerity, love.

These already existed in the nature of the child, but they needed to be drawn out, broadened, and deepened. The first help, then, which was required, was the right spirit. The true life manifested in the teacher would beget itself in the scholar. The tiny ones were mostly influenced by example. The religion of the teacher would reflect itself in the scholar. The life they lived to-day would perpetuate itself in their scholars. With regard to the second part of their work—instruction—he believed few could realise the lamentable lack of any definite instruction in our Sunday schools. We had not kept pace with the advance made in day schools; but the great hindrance was that we had no definite plan, no clear conception of what ought to be done and how to do it. There never was a time when theological subjects created so much interest; never a period when the Scriptures, and their literature, and Biblical criticism, were so widely and thoroughly studied. In our work the Bible was our great text-book, taking care of course to select that which was nutritious and instructive. To help us in this part of our work we required two things—carefully prepared schemes of instruction; lesson papers and preparation. He advocated, therefore, the adoption of the "One Lesson System, or the Uniform Topic Method." The publication of Sunday school records or diaries would, he believed, be also interesting and valuable. The adoption of this "One Lesson System" would require for its true efficiency the holding of weekly teachers' meetings. The lesson papers should contain hints for both scholars and teachers, and should be given out some time in advance of their use. They might be adapted to scholars from seven or eight up to fifteen or sixteen years of age, and worked out in the three grades. The lesson papers should be taken home by the scholars and studied there. Here would be a means, he thought, whereby we could get the interest and help of the parent. The teachers' meetings, too, would be for a definite object, and a new life and freshness would be given to what now were often dull and tedious. There must be frequent reviews and thorough examinations, and there must be men and women with warm hearts behind the machinery. There must be preparation, too, for this was necessary both for head work and heart work. Some might say he had asked too much, fixed the standard too high; but he entreated them not to be discouraged, but really strive to make their Sunday schools better, consecrate themselves afresh to their noble work, and victory would be theirs.

The Rev. W. CAREY WALTERS thought the first thing to be presented to the child was the happy side of life, the bright and tender side of Christianity. Christianity is love—and only love. He believed in the one teacher system. Your class ought to be your own class. We compared very unfavourably with orthodoxy in this respect. He had been a teacher from about eleven years: of age, and he had always had a class which he could really call his own.

Mr. TITTERTON, after some humorous remarks, spoke in reference to the question of Teachers' Notes, but was afraid the Birmingham schools would not adopt anything like a uniform plan of teaching.

The Rev. H. EACHUS thought we must look upon the bright side of Sunday school life. It was true the teaching was not so good as it ought to be, but still we must not get discouraged.

The Rev. H. McKean thought the Association had done good work, but he quite approved of the position taken in the paper, and believed that we must adopt some practical plan for greater efficiency in our work. He suggested the adoption of Mr. Herford's book, The Story of Religion in England.

Mr. DAVIES (Newhall Hill) thought the day for the discontinuance of secular instruction was not yet come.

The meeting was also addressed by the Rev. B. WRIGHT and Mr. DERRINGTON (Newhall Hill), both of whom expressed a desire for some system which would help the teachers in their work. The PRESIDENT summed up the discussion, advocating the circulation of Teachers' Notes.

The Rev. H. McKean then moved: "That the secretary send a copy of the last issue of Teachers' Notes to each school, accompanied by a circular requesting that the publication be brought under the notice of the teachers, with a view to promote its circulation."

SUNDERLAND.—On Sunday, October 13th, the Rev. Wm. Elliott delivered the third lecture of a course, in the Unitarian Church, subject, "Wesleyan-Methodism," with special reference to the case of the Rev. Mr. Impey." Mr. Elliott expressed his conviction that the action taken by the Wesleyans, in this case, was not in accordance with the principles of Christianity, but must do great mischief to the Wesleyan-Methodists. The lecture was listened to with very deep attention by a crowded congregation.

EARTH'S BRIGHTER DAY.

A BRIGHTER day for earth draws near,
In the fair East the clouds are breaking;
Old forms of darkness and of fear
Fore wisdom's light their leave are taking.

The cruel chains that held mind bound
Now severed truly are, and falling;
Man's wrongs to man a tongue have found,
And for redress are loudly calling.

A nobler Faith the age demands,
A future free from wrath and burning;
A Father in whose loving hands
E'en ill to good is kindly turning.

The stream of knowledge wider flows,
The sun of truth mounts high and higher;
On field and town its radiance glows,
Earth's glad, bright day draws nigh and nigher.
Paisley. WILLIAM BENNETT.

NOTICE.

Several friends have written to us saying they are anxious to get the HERALD, and cannot, especially last week's number, for which there was a large extra demand. We can still supply this number to anyone applying to us direct; to secure which an early application will be needed. If some friend in connection with each congregation would specially see that an opportunity is offered to members to take the HERALD, these disappointments would be avoided.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

A RELIGION FOR THE PEOPLE.
III.

THE first characteristic of religious services for the masses is that they should be bonâ fide public services, offering a frank welcome to all comers. The second, following from the first, is that they should be thoroughly popular in style, that the people may at once feel at home. Let it be remembered that we are working at the hard problem how to provide for the masses who do not go to church. Mr. SAMUEL MORLEY said, the other day, that "the great feature of the present time was the growing indisposition to attend public worship." It is this case which we have to meet, and to meet in the persons of those who have already acted upon their indisposition, and have lost all connection with the churches. To recall them it is necessary that we should make them understand that everything is being done to provide for their actual wants and wishes. Do we mean that ministers of religion, and church officers and committees, should pander to the popular taste; that the Gospel of Truth should appropriate to itself the aims and manners of the demagogue? Is it the business of the pulpit, we may be asked, to gratify, or is it to instruct? Is it to amuse people, or to save them? In reply we must consider for a moment what is the general aim and purpose of our public religious services. It may seem to be a dreadful heresy to venture upon the statement, but we believe it to be the truth, that this purpose is not such as is expressed in the word salvation, and not even what is usually meant by instruction. Woe to us, if we have not means of salvation! But these are to be found, as they were in Galilee and Judea, in the personal appeal and influence of one who seeks to save lost brothers and sisters, going down to them and bringing them away from their evil surroundings. Such a Divine Service is as much needed now as ever, and to organise labour of this kind may well be a first endeavour of the members of a Christian community. But this is not the direct aim of a meeting for religious worship. The pulpit may be used to address a world lying in wickedness. Some part of the ministers' public function will always be to denounce the evils of the day, and to point out the temptations and errors of our individual lives. Some part of prayer is the confession of sin. But primarily, we go to church to be inspired; to have our souls refreshed. The communion table is the true symbol after all. We go to eat spiritual food and to drink spiritual drink. The case with those who will not attend our services is that of persons who have no taste for them. They don't want spiritual meat and drink. The mischief to be dealt with is a loss of appetite. The remedy lies in tempting the appetite. The food offered must be wholesome first of all, but it must be of a kind that will not repel the recipient, but, on the contrary, will attract him. Now, there is much in our church services that would seem to repel the common people. All that should be removed. There may be presumed to be things which would attract them—these are to be adopted. This is not to be called pandering to the people. It is only courtesy to provide for the tastes of your guests, and it is only wisdom to coax the appetite that has become enfeebled.

But in putting our case thus, we are putting it at its worst. A serious effort on the part of the church to adapt itself to the ways and feelings of the people would be a beginning of better things for all. If the multitude has lost taste for religion, why is it? We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that a great deal of what is presented to the spiritual palate is either very raw or very much overdone. What the minister has found for himself shows too little action of the mental fire; while that which he takes from the ancestral cupboard is dried to a stick. The church could not possibly alter its ways in order to suit the people without the greatest advantage to itself.

Of the things which repel the people we have already spoken of exclusiveness, in pleading for an open service and a hearty welcome. Under our present head we should notice a cold formality such as characterises the ecclesiastical style generally; dull repetition like the reading of familiar chapters, without fervour or grace; and that mode of going through the business of a meeting which seems to mean that the attenders come to do nothing in particular, and having done it, go quietly home again. The public don't usually take an interest in meetings of that sort; why should we expect them to do so within the walls of a church?

But on our present subject, this week, what need we do more than refer our readers to the eloquent pleading of the Rev. ELI FAY at the meeting of the North Midland Association, in favour of an effective and truly popular appeal to the people? We cannot quite agree with Mr. FAY's negative criticism. Many of the subjects which he would banish from the pulpit are decidedly of the popular kind, and, as we think, require to be treated from a Sunday, as well as a Monday point of view. We have the highest authority for giving heed to the Signs of the Times. But while this should be done, we are fully persuaded that the other class of subjects, so ably advocated by Mr. FAY, should not be neglected, as they have too much been with us. On this we shall have more to say anon. Meanwhile, let Mr. FAY's earnest words be pondered and applied by all who are sincerely anxious to meet the religious wants of the people.

The late Mrs. Mason, of Hull.

YOUR obituary has recorded the departure from our midst of this venerable lady in her 92nd year. In the full possession of all her faculties, surrounded by her daughters, after an illness of hardly one week's duration, she calmly fell asleep in God. In the repose of that closing sleep her countenance retained all its marked characteristics, benignant, calm, intellectual, strong, dogmatic. She was an Arian, and retained to the end her theological proclivities and interests. The genius of the true woman lies in the heart; and in the affections of her large, genial, hospitable heart she treasured up the memories of the students of our College at York, youths ever welcome at her home, and who, if surviving now, are venerable men belonging to a type revered but almost extinct. We do not wish the past to be always the form of the future, for in all things there must be growth if they are divine; but with a pathetic interest and unconscious regret, we mourn over the forms of the past as they recede, and we wish those stately memories to be honoured and to abide with us. R. R. SUFFIELD.

The late Benjamin Workman, Esq., M.A.

THE Toronto papers tell of the death of this venerable and much respected member of the medical profession, at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. J. Bascom, M.B., at Uxbridge, Ontario, on the 26th of last month. Dr. Workman has been a subscriber to the Unitarian Herald from the first number, and for many years was a great help to our church at Montreal. He was born at Ballymacash, near Lisburn, in October, 1794, and after having received an English and mercantile education at the school of the late Mr. Charles Shields, of Lisburn, he commenced the study of classics under the Rev. Skeffington Thompson, LL.D., of Magheragall, a very distinguished scholar. Among the students connected with that "intermediate" seminary there were many young gentlemen who ultimately rose to eminence in the world beyond the Ganges. Of these we may note the late Colonel Garratt, and Sir J. M. Higginson, C.B., one of the ablest of Britain's colonial governors. But of all Mr. Thompson's pupils none made so broad a mark on the age or in after days as A. T. Stewart, the great millionaire of New York. Benjamin Workman and the embryo merchant sat at the same desk in the Magheragall seminary, and read as class-fellows "Caesar's Commentaries," the "Æneid," and other classics. Years rolled by, and the students had crossed the Atlantic. One settled in Canada, and the other in the commercial capital of the United States. In 1828 A. T. Stewart had made a great name for himself as a rapidly rising merchant in New York, and Benjamin Workman was wielding considerable power in Montreal as the proprietor and editor of the leading paper in that city. After many years of successful enterprise in the newspaper world, Mr. Workman sold out all his property connected with the Press, and when on the wrong side of forty set to work as a medical student, and in due time came out as a professor of the healing art. Having removed to Toronto, he commenced practice in that city, and in a few years was elected to a very important position on the medical staff of the Toronto Asylum for the Insane, which situation he held until he had reached the good old age of eighty years, when he retired from active duties. Dr. Workman was a thorough Liberal in politics and religion. During his long period of residence in Canada he delighted to encourage progress in every form. He educated his brother settlers on those questions of Christian amity and the rights of private judgment which seem to be so much neglected of late days in Montreal and Toronto. We have alluded to the school boy days of Benjamin Workman and A. T. Stewart, and we may add that the friendship then commenced was never interrupted, and that to his latest day the Broadway merchant kept up a regular correspondence with his early form-fellow, Dr. B. Workman.

NOTTINGHAM: CONGREGATIONAL SOIREE.

A SOIREE in connection with the High Pavement and Christ Church congregations was held in the Albert Hall, on Thursday, October 17, and in regard both to the numbers attending and the spirit which prevailed, was generally felt to be the most successful meeting of the kind ever held. The announcement being made by circular to the members of the two churches and by notice from the pulpit only, instead of by public placard and advertisement as in previous years, the attendance consisted entirely of those who have a real connection with and interest in our institutions. It was thought by some that this immense room would prove too spacious for the company; but by eight o'clock it was really crowded in every part.

The decorations were of a simple but very effective description; and, were formal votes of thanks in order on these occasions, they would certainly have been due both to those ladies and gentlemen who spent the day in setting out the materials at their disposal to the very best advantage and to those others who kindly lent handsome and valuable plants and other objects of interest or beauty. The musical programme was one of the most charming we have ever had, and the heartiest acknowledgments are due to all the performers. Soon after eight, Mr. JOSEPH WRIGHT, senior warden of the High Pavement Chapel, took the chair, and said: Now-a-days, in public and private schools, very little attention is given to religious training, and as that may be termed the crowning part of education, it is desirable that all who can should avail themselves of Mr. Armstrong's kind offer to give religious instruction. I might say that some time since he was very successful in one of his classes in connection with the Manchester New College scheme, the examinations of the students being conducted in a similar manner to the Cambridge and Oxford local examinations. The more advanced class, he tells me, he will take after Christmas; that for those adults not so highly educated he intends taking up to Christmas, in addition to the children's class, which he has already begun. There is one other matter on which I wish to say a word before sitting down, and that is the late controversy that Mr. Armstrong engaged in against Mr. Bradlaugh. It appears, as most of you know, that Mr. Armstrong attended a lecture by Mr. Bradlaugh, and at the close of that lecture he made some remarks which were well received. The consequence of this was that a sort of challenge was sent by the Nottingham secretary to Mr. Armstrong to meet Mr. Bradlaugh. Mr. Armstrong consulted his friends, some of whom at first thought it better not to engage in it, but afterwards Mr. Armstrong himself came to the conclusion that it would be as well to undertake the matter. The rest I believe you all know.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG said: Mr. Chairman and friends, first of all, I wish to say how heartily I rejoice in every social occasion which draws us of the two free churches of Nottingham nearer together. I wish, if you will bear with me, to make two or three remarks in reference to the discussion which I was recently led to hold. Mr. Wright has told you that I consulted with him and others before I accepted the challenge which came to me from Mr. Bradlaugh through the local secular society, and I understood that he and they had, previously to the debate, come round to the view that it was right that I should engage in it. Now, I am fully aware that my conduct in doing so appeared to many persons whose opinions I esteem, unwise and ill considered. I know that there were those who thought that by meeting him I was giving him an opportunity of disseminating injurious opinions, and moreover, that I was countenancing a man whom God-fearing, honourable, and pure-minded men ought not to countenance. Now, I shall not profess to you any admiration of Mr. Bradlaugh. I shall express no opinion whatever concerning his public or his private character, save this, which I am bound to say: that throughout this affair, from first to last, he has behaved towards me in the most courteous and handsome manner. I believe that his views on social morals are even more pernicious and destructive than his atheism. But grant for the moment that he is as bad as his greatest enemy can paint him: is that a reason for leaving him alone to influence unchecked tens of thousands of our countrymen and countrywomen? or is it a reason for using every weapon which God has given us to foil him in his mournful propaganda? They say you cannot touch mud but it sticks. I do not know, I am sure, whether any mud has stuck to me; but I know this, that when I saw score upon score of Mr. Bradlaugh's followers in our beautiful church on the Sunday after the debate, hearkening to the sweet voices of our choir as they hymned the praise of God, and paying respectful attention to our solemn prayers, I thanked God that I had dared to face Mr.

Bradlaugh on the platform, and to pour out my whole heart to these people, who had never known what simple and pure religion was. That task was to me the most difficult, the most anxious, the most taxing, and in some respects the most painful, that I ever undertook; but I rejoice I did not shrink it, not merely because of the warm and generous testimonies of appreciation that have since come to me from many of my own brother ministers, from Mr. Voysey, from Mr. Moncure Conway, and from others who are fighting atheism and Bradlaughism in their own various spheres, but most of all because I do believe it was given to me to soften a few, perhaps a very few, souls that were compassed with much darkness.

The Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS said: I can only say how glad I am to see so many High Pavement and Christ Church friends met together with the feeling that we are one, really one. I hope that we may go on walking in that direction, till we are known all over the town as a body who are truly members one of another, and as working in the true church of Christ.

Mr. W. M. HURCOMB, one of the wardens of Christ Church, addressed the meeting, and at ten o'clock the last verse of the Evening Hymn was sung, and in conclusion Mr. Armstrong pronounced a benediction.

NORTH MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held in Upper Chapel, Sheffield, on Tuesday last, and there were present Revs. R. Shenton (Bradwell), J. Williams (Nottingham), A. N. Blatchford (Bristol), R. A. Armstrong (Nottingham), J. Fraser (Doncaster), P. W. Claydon, and S. S. Taylor, Esq., representing the British and Foreign Unitarian Association; Revs. J. J. Wright (Leicester), J. F. Smith (Chesterfield), C. D. Badland (Derby); Messrs. Hobson, Bramley, M. Hunter, W. E. Laycock, C. Woollen, and others.

MONDAY'S MEETING.

The meeting opened with a brief religious service, and then the Rev. ELI FAY presided, when

The Rev. G. KNIGHT, of Uppertorpe, read a paper on "Church Extension in Large Towns." After defining the title of the essay, he said he would not seek to extend churches by rivalry with other bodies as to which could produce the greatest numbers, but by that rivalry which should exist for dear truth's sake. He asked whether there was a demand for increased work, or whether they should create such demand not by jubilee lectures or spasmodic work, but by organisation in Sunday schools and in social gatherings. They should be missionaries in the real sense of the word. Mr. Knight urged that the large towns should take under their spiritual care the districts by which they were surrounded. We shall give an abstract of this paper in a future number.

The Rev. ELI FAY, in the course of a brief address, said he was convinced there was not the opposition to Unitarianism some of them believed to exist. After Sheffield had been incorporated he found that eight of its early mayors were Unitarians. Recently a meeting of working men in their school had been held for the purpose of joining a society for the promotion of intellectual freedom; and a more striking fact was that a young lady had canvassed a district to see if there was more need for Sunday school work, and in two afternoons she found 70 children, the parents of only one of whom objected to the term Unitarian.

An interesting discussion followed upon Mr. Knight's paper, and he having replied the meeting was adjourned until to-day.

TUESDAY'S MEETING.

On Tuesday morning the ministers and delegates assembled in the school room for the transaction of routine business, and at twelve o'clock service was held in the chapel, conducted by the Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A., (Derby), and the sermon preached by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A., (Bristol).

THE ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING

Was held at half-past two o'clock, in the Chapel, under the presidency of the Rev. ELI FAY.

The CHAIRMAN said he wished to draw attention to the true spirit and work of the ministry and the Church. The minister was not a man of all work, nor everybody's good fellow. The pulpit was not a rostrum, the Church was not a mere social organisation, nor a reform club, nor a revolving figure for displaying the latest fashions, nor an invention for killing Sunday. To every great calling or distinctive purpose there must be specific, constant, all-absorbing devotion; and especially to every one in which much depended upon an acquired delicacy of thought and feeling, a peculiar, almost a divine, sensibility. A sermon written hurriedly on Saturday afternoon, written because Sunday was close at hand, and something must be said, might be faultless as a composition, and its delivery acceptable as a performance, but it was very, very different from one begotten of the Spirit of God, and born of the soul's deepest and truest and holiest feelings. Beyond a question we reaped as we sowed, and he could conceive of no motive to toil for the improvement of human beings so strong or so intelligible as that suggested by the obvious continuity of life. It was the special work of the minister of religion to broaden the base, clear the vision, change the direction, elevate the aims, improve the character, and enrich the experience of immortal souls. Let them only see the responsibility of their calling, and this spirit would do tenfold more in the way of strengthening and multiplying their congregations than all the gilt-edged and perfumed theological bulletins ever issued by dainty and thin-blooded critics, or all the anti-Christian lecturing, semi-Christian preaching, extra-Christian genuflection, sentimentality, consecrated ribbon and needle-work, and sanctimonious nonsense of the day. In the strife for souls, in the enlightenment of the ignorant, the elevation of the degraded, the salvation of the lost, the most important work of the ministry or the Church, their way was as open as that of any other religious body, and to an immense and rapidly increasing class more widely open; and if, instead of giving so much attention to the various aspects of scientific research, the attitude and utterances of the Congregational Union, the condition and prospects of Presbyterianism in Scotland, the reaction against Liberalism in Germany, every shade of orthodoxy and every motion in its ranks; if, instead of watching these things, they were on the high level of their own theory, and earnestly trying to suppress evil and to direct the wayward, they would not then complain of forsaken chapels, or of small congregations, or of popular prejudices, or of unconquerable difficulties. With the true key to the human heart, they could certainly unlock it. But that key was not church architecture, or fine music, or perfunctory preaching, or incisive criticism, or naked dogma, or a gorgeous ritual, or all external decency, however important that might be. Those and whatever else belonged to the externals of a congregation were only the body needing the animation and propulsion of the living soul. The real key to the human heart was kindness, sympathy, love, the spirit of brotherhood, of genuine Christian helpfulness, and a reverent and devout recognition of the fact that sacred and unspeakable verities lie between God and the individual soul; and that such was its character that no deep, rich, peaceful, satisfactory life was possible to a man until he acknowledged his own divine sonship. If the nature, greatness, grandeur, and necessity of their work thrilled every fibre of their being; if the members of their congregations earnestly co-operated with them; if strangers were cordially welcomed to their chapels, and made to feel at home there; if all class distinctions, however necessary they might be thought elsewhere, were utterly forgotten as they should be; if the laity realised that it was quite as much their duty to labour personally, directly, earnestly, and regularly, not precisely as ministers, but still to labour for the intellectual and moral improvement, and the salvation of the people at large; if their Sunday schools were what they ought to be, if their services were so grandly keyed and so highly appreciated that their congregations left their chapels, not to enter at once into a discussion of the condition of Cyprus or the intentions of the Government, the prospects of business or of the next election, but on one day in seven banished such matters from their minds, they would be in the way of realising fairly the grand ideal of the Christian ministry and the Christian Church—an ideal which was eminently rational and practicable, and towards which their efforts should constantly tend. If they strove to realise this ideal, he had no doubt whatever that, in five years, this spirit would change the whole aspect and prospect of liberal Christianity in England. They were not doing what they ought to do, but they would do more in the future. They ought to have a club of 100 working men who, lacking early culture had nevertheless heard the words, sniffed the air, seen the light, and felt the life of this new age, and who had both intellectual and spiritual cravings; but they only saw "men as trees, walking," and needed greatly guidance and assistance. They ought to have a class of 100 young men and women growing in knowledge and virtue, and assimilating to the congregation. Instead of a Sunday school of 100 scholars they ought to have one of 500. They only needed an increased number of efficient workers and additional appliances. The raw material was at their hands, and he wished that the congregation were keenly alive to the importance of the work, and that the school were three times as large as it was. They ought to be carrying on a mission school in some neglected part of the town. Numerically and financially they were strong enough to enter upon the work at once, and he for one should not blame their orthodox brethren for doubting their sincerity and withholding their fellowship if they neglected or declined to do this work. Their right to the Christian name would not be vindicated even by unanswerable argument, but by hard work. Finally, he said that the minister and people of the Upper Chapel were anxious to unite with the ministers and congregations of the North Midland Association in a pledge of renewed consecration to God and man.

The annual report was read by the Rev. C. D. BADLAND.

It gave particulars of the condition of the Association in Bedford, Stannington, Derby, Northampton, Newark, Leicester, Kettering, Retford, and other places, rejoicing that the reports received from the various congregations were generally favourable. The committee had much pleasure in congratulating the congregation of Upper Chapel, Sheffield, upon the great increase of their numbers under the devoted labours of their present minister. The system of advertising Sunday evening lectures on religious subjects had been adopted for a year or two past not only at Sheffield but also at Nottingham and Leicester, where the result had been equally satisfactory in attracting large audiences, and in winning additional members for the congregations. It was very inconsistent on the part of a decaying cause, as Unitarianism was said to be, to manifest these signs of vitality. But, in spite of all ill-report, such signs might act as an encouragement not to be content in repose but to increase in hopeful activity. It was pleasant to report that the ministerial changes in the district had been remarkably few during the past year. The only removal to be recorded was one that naturally excited considerable regret. They referred to the removal of the Rev. F. H. Jones to Oldham. His successor, the Rev. J. C. Lunn, had won respect by faithful service at Lancaster and elsewhere, and would receive a hearty welcome into this district.

The Rev. A. W. WORTHINGTON, B.A., Mansfield, also an honorary secretary, read a detailed report of the various Congregations and one by the trustees of Upper Chapel, in which it was stated that the increase in the number of sittings for the past two years was 46, and 10 holders of entire pews. The institutions of the chapel generally were flourishing. He also read the treasurer's statement in connection with the association, which gave the balance in hand from last year's account at £33. 4s. 5d., and the total receipts for the year at £256. 15s. 3d. The expenditure had been £199. 7s. 4d., leaving a balance in hand of £56. 7s. 11d.

On the motion of the CHAIRMAN, seconded by the Rev. J. F. SMITH (Chesterfield), it was resolved that the committee's report and the treasurer's balance sheet be adopted and printed, together with the detailed reports, for circulation among the congregations of the district.

The CHAIRMAN moved that the thanks of the meeting should be given to the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A., for his sermon; and to the Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A., for conducting the devotional services. The motion was seconded by Mr. JOHN HOBSON and carried, after which the rev. gentlemen acknowledged the compliment.

The CHAIRMAN moved a resolution offering a hearty welcome to the representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the Rev. P. W. Clayden and Mr. S. S. Tayler. Mr. H. BRAMLEY seconded the motion, which was adopted.

The Rev. P. W. CLAYDEN, in returning thanks for the cordial reception of himself and Mr. Tayler, said they had been appointed a deputation by the council of their Association to express their sympathy with the work of the North Midland District Association. One object of the Association he represented was to defend the civil rights of Unitarians, and another was the stimulation of the controversial work of their denomination. The Unitarian congregations at the present day were protests in favour of honesty and sincerity. (Hear, hear.) The great standard they had to raise was the [standard of honesty and sincerity. (Hear, hear.) How many men there were who went to worship God and knew they were not honest in their worship of Him; who used prayers, the words of which were not expressive of their thoughts; who went through a service, constituted, formed, and based upon a certain idea of God, and yet when the minister entered the pulpit he contradicted and denied that idea. This sort of thing was going on in various parts of the country, and there were congregations which did not believe in a hell, yet they professed to believe in one; and, not believing in the divine glory of Jesus Christ, but professing to believe in it, they exclaimed "Save us, good Lord." There seemed to be something very nearly approaching blasphemy in such expressions as that. (Cheers.) The British and Foreign Unitarian Association and their local Association were endeavouring to raise up congregations to protest in favour of honesty and sincerity before Almighty God. (Cheers.)

Mr. S. S. TAYLER also briefly addressed the meeting, and congratulated them on the success of their Association.

It was decided, on the motion of the CHAIRMAN, seconded by Mr. GILL, that the next annual meeting of the Association should be held at the High Pavement, Nottingham.

The following resolution was then carried: "That this association, while heartily regretting the removal of the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., from the district, tenders its cordial welcome and good wishes to the Rev. J. C. Lunn, who has succeeded to his ministry at Loughborough."

Officers of the Association were next appointed, and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman and his congregation for their hospitable reception of the delegates.

BLACKPOOL: RECOGNITION TEA PARTY.

ON Wednesday our friends held a recognition tea party in the Borough Theatre; for the purpose of publicly introducing their new minister, the Rev. A. B. Camm. The handsome hall, says the Fleetwood Gazette, experienced at the hands of those to whom the task of preparation was entrusted the effective ornamentation which the Unitarians, like their antipodes the Ritualists, know so well how to impart even to dull cold walls. The whole of the management of the affair was ably carried out by Mrs. Marsden and Mrs. J. W. Holt. The ladies who presided at the tables were Mrs. Heys, Miss Grundy, Mrs. Butterfield, Mrs. Wrigley, Mrs. A. B. Camm, Miss Wrigley, Miss Chew, and Miss Helm. The chair was taken by J. Duckworth, Esq., Mayor of Bury, and among the gentlemen on the platform were the Rev. C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S., Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A., Rev. W. M. Ainsworth, Rev. J. S. Evans, Rev. Noah Green, and Messrs. O. E. Heys, J. Wrigley, and G. B. Dalby.

The CHAIRMAN said he had not always been a Unitarian himself, but no one had ever been better pleased at a change than he was at the change he had made, and he thought few had more thoroughly thought out Unitarian doctrines than he had. Referring to the Gaskell Jubilee at Manchester on the previous evening, he hoped their new minister, the Rev. A. B. Camm, would take encouragement as to his future connection with Blackpool, from that grand gathering. He would not have to encounter what Mr. Gaskell had had to fight against. Still, he did not promise him he would have all his own way, nor that he would have no uphill work. He might even have occasionally to endure obloquy and snubbing. In society it had happened that people had shown themselves afraid to come near Unitarians as if afraid of contamination. They were not always understood even yet. As to those who differed from them in opinion they did not wish to be at enmity with them, but to co-operate in all good works, and in every attempt to ameliorate human sorrow or suffering, and in short Unitarians would always be found foremost in every effort towards working out necessary social, political, or religious reforms.

The Rev. NOAH GREEN (Mottam) related the history of Unitarian missionary efforts at Blackpool. Nine or ten years ago the minister of Lydgate was the first to break ground in Blackpool, after the missionary conference had decided that the town was a very suitable place in which to attempt their work. From that gentleman's humble labours had arisen the present comparatively large congregation. After three or four years he relinquished it, and at the request of the Conference he (the speaker) undertook to arrange services. At that time they used to worship during three or four months of the year in a room forming part of the Aquarium, and as they would suppose their congregations were very variable. It went on thus for some years, and then it was found that for the ensuing summer they would have to seek a room elsewhere, and that proved so much a difficulty that it caused a break in their services, till at last they found the present building, which was purchased and renovated. They were but a handful then, but the handful had grown, it was gratifying to see, to this meeting. In conclusion he paid a warm tribute to the steadfastness, the zeal, the diligent industry, and the helpfulness of Mr. Hulme, who from the introduction of the cause into Blackpool had never wavered in his attachment, nor ever ceased to work on its behalf to the limits of his ability.

Mr. O. E. HEYS read a telegram in which the Rev. James Black said that at the last moment he had to forego the pleasure of being present, and assured the meeting of the interest Mr. Black took in the progress of their church. For himself Mr. Heys said that some time ago he went to the Unitarian Church to see what kind of a minister had been appointed, and was so much pleased with Mr. Camm that he had attended the services for eight Sundays, and "still would go." He had been with them in their Harvest Festival, and had conveyed from the Stockport friends flowers and fruit for the service. He spoke of the good that might be done by the presents of flowers from one congregation to another. He was also in Blackpool when the Unitarians came to the front in resenting the spirit of bigotry which would have prevented the sacred concert at the Winter Gardens taking place. He quoted from the pulpit utterances of dissenting ministers in the town, and rejoiced in the liberal spirit that prevailed.

Mr. J. WRIGLEY was of opinion that good congregations would be raised in Blackpool in future. Mr. Camm had made a very good start, and he trusted that the little cathedral in which he preached would soon have to be increased. The Unitarians of Blackpool would, however, still require a helping hand, and he, for one, would do what he could. The Unitarian tree might be of slow growth, but it seldom withered. At present they were a small congregation, but they must learn to labour and to wait. Before long, he hoped Blackpool would possess a Unitarian school, for to his mind that was the way in which to establish themselves root and branch.

The Rev. W. M. AINSWORTH dwelt on the advantages the Blackpool Unitarians had in being so much within the influence of Lancaster and Padiham centres of Unitarian life and organisation.

The Rev. H. S. SOLLY advised them to take as their motto the words, "Watch, wait, and work." They must show those about them that they had their hearts in the cause, and if they really had any respect for the Padiham heaven, which was said to be at work amongst them, he did not mind telling them the two secrets of Unitarian success at Padiham. The first was they relied on fustian rather than broadcloth, and the next was they worked well through the Sunday School, and he strongly commended them to follow the same courses.

Mr. CHEW, as chairman of the committee, said it fell to his lot, in the name of the congregation of the church and their friends, to wish the Rev. A. B. Camm success in the ministry he had undertaken at Blackpool. He had come to regard Mr. Camm as a very clear thinker and plain speaker, and as one who thinks well over what he is going to say before he says it. With a compliment to Mrs. Camm, he concluded by anticipating that they would find in Mr. Camm a wise guide and a kind friend.

Mr. COE said he would take up the history of the church at the point where Mr. Green had left it. He was sorry there was the missing link in the absence of Mr. Black, and humourously referred to the anomaly of placing Blackpool in East Lancashire. The mission of which he was secretary had taken it up as a denominational Cyprus, though he was glad to admit it was a contrast to that island in regard to its healthiness, and he would not like to push the analogy too far with respect to the policy by which it was secured and worked. He proceeded to speak in eulogistic terms of the qualities of Mr. and Mrs. Camm, and though he (Mr. Camm) had only promised for the present to stay in Blackpool a year, he hoped he would be induced to renew his engagement, and then we could look forward to the time when there would be a handsome Unitarian Church in Blackpool, and a numerous and influential congregation. The speaker said if in 25 years the various churches under the auspices of the East Lancashire Mission had become flourishing centres of spiritual life, and Mr. Camm at Blackpool could celebrate his silver wedding, he (Mr. Coe) as a grey-haired old man would say, "Lord now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace." Mr. Camm came from the Independents, and he would be glad to see Mr. Baldwin Brown (whose autumnal address he criticised in a kindly spirit) take a bolder and freer position. After using an apt illustration from Wallace's "Tropical Nature" to show how people of different tastes and characters could work in harmony, he concluded by wishing Mr. Camm and the church great success.

The Rev. A. B. CAMM, after thanking them for the very hearty reception they had given to his wife and himself, acknowledged the kindness of Mr. Coe, who, as the secretary of the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, and as a friend, had taken great interest in his welfare, and spoke as follows:—It is perhaps an advantage to have had three months worship and work before the recognition meeting. Our "honeymoon" has not waned, but its freshness and warmth have deepened and matured into a stronger love. It may be asked by those outside, why have the Unitarians come to Blackpool? I answer, not to increase sectarian bitterness or enter into any denominational warfare. I recognise the raison d'être of the different organisations in Christendom. For a long time to come denominations will go on in their old lines. Inherited tendency and temperament have much to do in the formation of sects. Some will seek repose from doubt in Romanism. Aestheticism, with its tinge of mystery, will express itself in the High Church. Political freedom, with its adherence to creeds, will lead to Congregationalism. The severely logical mind (after premises have been assumed which we deem fallacious), will be Calvinistic. The more humane disposition will prefer Armenianism. Emotionalism, allied to the melodramatic, will express itself in Methodism. But is there not room for another church, one with a broader basis, where conduct and not creed is regarded as essential—one with a more elastic organisation, and a more progressive tendency? Such a church we wish ours to be. It may seem cold and unenthusiastic to those who look on it from outside, but its worship has in it a glow of warmth, and its work the inspiration of God. We must have faith in minorities—I had almost said faith in small salaries. I only ask from you bread and butter and books. We know if we are not judged comprehensively we shall be misunderstood. We appear always going through phases of doubt. Sometimes we seem to be too destructive, but we wish to emphasise the grand positive elements of our faith. Tennyson says:—

Leave thou thy sister when she prays
Her early heaven, her happy views,
Now with thy shadowed hint confuse
A life that leads melodious days.

But as we believe the truest melody is the outcome of truth, we seek to destroy the error that "our sister" may possess a faith no shadowed hint can confuse. I wish to acknowledge here the kind way in which the Press has reported our proceedings, and spoken of myself. It has printed no line I would wish to erase. Perhaps if we had called ourselves Free Christians we might have been more popular. I sympathise with those, who, being free born, do not wish to take down the flag under which the forefathers of free religious thought fought and won the battles of freedom, and we may be glad, as they welcome so heartily seekers after truth to be identified with them, and co-operate for the spread of the liberal faith. Nay, we may be able to give a new meaning to the word "Unitarian," and with the rich influences that are streaming in on us from science, comparative religion, from the decay of dogma, and the growth of faith, from the revolt of common sense against the doctrines of hell and blood, we may feel that Unitarianism means the oneness of that divine Being from whom all things flow, and in whom all things consist, the unity there is underlying all manifestations of life and order and beauty in all realms.

During the evening the Rev. A. B. Camm and Mrs. Camm, Mr. J. W. Holt, Mr. O. E. Heys, and Mr. Ainsworth gave vocal and instrumental selections of music, and the proceeding terminated with a violin solo by Mr. Tomlinson.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

BRADFORD.

LETTER OF REV. W. J. KNAPTON.

At a meeting of the chapel wardens and committee of Chapel-lane Chapel, held on Wednesday evening week, the following letter from the Rev. W. J. Knapton was read:—

21, Welbury Drive, Bradford, Oct. 14, 1878.

Gentlemen,—I write to place in your hands my resignation of the office of minister of Chapel-lane Chapel, my convictions about religious truth having undergone so vital a change that I feel I can no longer conscientiously occupy your pulpit. I came to you a Unitarian. I am no longer a Unitarian. I have been brought, in the good providence of God, to see the truth of the principles of Evangelical Christianity, which have been borne in upon my mind with convincing force and saving power. This being the case, as there was a tacit understanding about my theological position when I came to you, I feel bound in honour to retire at once. I purpose, therefore, on the last Sunday evening in this month, October 27th, to terminate my ministry (I do not purpose occupying the pulpit in the meantime) by giving the congregation some brief account of the way by which I have been led, and the truth to which I have been compelled. Would you accept for yourselves, and kindly convey to the congregation, my thanks for many kindnesses? And my prayer to Almighty God is that you and they may be led by the Holy Spirit into all truth.—I am, yours very faithfully,

W. J. KNAPTON.

To the Chapel Wardens and Committee of Chapel-lane Chapel.

LYDGATE.

WELCOME TO REV. B. GLOVER.

ON Saturday week there was held an interesting meeting to welcome the Rev. Benjamin Glover. After tea in the schoolroom, to which a good number sat down, the chair was occupied by Dr. MOORHOUSE, F.S.A., who is the representative of one of the oldest families of the place, and whose published history of the chapel and other literary works of local antiquarian interest are very highly and widely estimated. He spoke of his heartfelt interest in the cause at Lydgate, which he should cling to as long as he lived. He congratulated the congregation on obtaining Mr. Glover, and argued that even a better future would dawn on their religious society. In the name of the congregation he gave a hearty and united welcome to their new minister.

The Rev. F. E. MILLSON, of Halifax, being called upon to give Mr. Glover a welcome on behalf of the ministers of the district, explained how he had known Mr. Glover when the latter was instrumental in founding the Southport congregation, and proceeded to point out how Mr. Glover's services would be invaluable at Lydgate in the pulpit, Sunday school, and various institutions.

The next speaker was the Rev. WM. BLAZEY, B.A., of Rotherham, who, as secretary, represented the West Riding Unitarian Mission. He explained how the Mission was instrumental in sustaining that old cause, and he felt persuaded that the good work carried on by the late minister, the Rev. E. Allen, would be well taken up and promoted by Mr. Glover. In some further remarks he urged upon all members of the chapel of all ages to make it their conscientious concern to attend every Sunday the services of their venerable sanctuary. He laid particular stress on this point, believing as he did that the success of our body depended mainly on Unitarians regularly attending their places of worship.

The Rev. BENJ. GLOVER made a suitable response to the addresses of welcome accorded to him, and he assured his people that so far as his health permitted he was prepared to do his utmost on their behalf, but would at the same time look to them to fulfil their part of the contract. He enlarged on the excellencies and claims of Unitarian Christianity to which he was devoted with his whole soul, and went on to say that he would instruct the young in those religious views which he prized so dearly himself. It was his wish to hold a children's service every month, as he had done at Middleton with such good results.

Mr. Glover's remarks were well calculated to impress his people with a deep sense of the responsible work they were mutually engaging in for the glory of God and the best welfare of themselves and all around them.

The meeting at intervals was favoured with several songs and glees, admirably rendered by the choir. Altogether the gathering was a most successful one, and all the more so because Saturday evening is not the most convenient of the week. All old friends of Mr. Glover may rest assured that not only will he find congenial work at Lydgate and Holmfirth, and in the mission district generally, but that he has also come to the very place to recruit his strength and lengthen his important services to the Unitarian cause for many a year to come.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL REMOVALS.—The Rev. H. M. Dare, Colyton, has resigned the pulpit of the Unitarian congregation at that place, and is about to take up his residence at Seaton.—The Rev. Wm. Birks will remove from Stannington, at the close of the year, to Wolverhampton.

ABERDARE: OLD MEETING.—The Bible class, which was founded in 1877, met again last Tuesday night under the conduct of the minister, the Rev. W. James. Upwards of 30 members have already enrolled themselves, of whom 22 were present at the first meeting. The subject of study is a portion of the first Gospel. A course of Sunday evening lectures, to commence in November, and a week evening class for children, kindly undertaken by the Rev. J. Williams, of Blaengwrach, who at present resides at Aberdare, will complete the arrangements made for the winter months.

BIRMINGHAM: HURST-STREET DOMESTIC MISSION. The annual congregational meeting was held on Monday week, when many of the members and a few friends took tea together, after which they assembled in the chapel, when their number was considerably increased by those who were not able to be present at the tea. The Rev. B. Wright presided, and interesting addresses bearing upon "The Indifference of the Working Classes to Religious Worship," "Nottingham Debate," and other topics, were delivered by the Revs. H. W. Crosskey, Peter Dean, of Walsall; Messrs. G. St. Clair, F. Grew, F. Hewins, G. Bassett, and several members of the congregation. The choir gave a selection from "Judas Maccabeus," and other pieces at intervals during the evening, which were well rendered. The anniversary services on behalf of the Sunday schools took place a short time since, and were conducted by the Rev. P. Dean, and B. Wright. The congregations were good, although the weather was very unfavourable, and the collections (including a few sums since received) amounted to £16. 5s. 8½d.

BRADFORD: RETIREMENT OF THE REV. W. J. KNAPTON.—On Saturday, October 12th, an inauguration tea party took place in connection with the Laisterdyke Unitarian branch Sunday school. Since the time of its opening on the 28th of July the school has been making steady progress; it now numbers upwards of 70 scholars in actual attendance; the average attendance for the first ten weeks being, morning 26, afternoon 40. About 130 scholars, parents, and friends sat down to tea, after which a meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Brewer, the president of the school, and addresses were delivered by the chairman, Mr. Joseph Lupton, of Leeds, Mr. John Pickles, Mr. Slater, and Mr. Kiddle. During the evening, Mr. Hallas gave some humorous dialect readings. The proceedings terminated with the singing of a hymn.

BILLINGSHURST.—The 124th anniversary of the General Baptist Chapel, and the second of the settlement of the present minister, the Rev. R. Blackburn, was celebrated on Sunday and Monday, the 13th and 14th inst. On the Sunday two sermons were preached by the Rev. John Marten, of Peckham, one of the venerable messengers of the General Baptist Connexion. On the following day there was a social public tea meeting, and in the evening divine service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Scott, LL.B., of Horsham, and an elaborate, impressive, and eloquent sermon was preached by the Rev. Thomas Briggs, of Dover, who, at the autumnal General Baptist Assembly, was solemnly ordained as a messenger by the primitive custom of the imposition of hands. There was an excellent attendance at the services.

BLACKLEY.—The weather on Sunday, October 13th, was most favourable for the harvest services at this ancient chapel, which were conducted, morning and evening by the Rev. Jas. McConnochie, of Sale, and in the afternoon, by the Rev. Joseph Freeston. Those who came for the sermon or "the music there," could not be otherwise than much gratified, whilst the eye was attracted and pleased by the manner in which the productions of Ceres, Flora, and Pomona were arranged in most tasteful and elegant profusion. The afternoon service, intended more particularly for the children, was most successful. At each service the chapel was crowded, and the amount of the offertory was highly satisfactory.

BRIGHTON.—Through the untiring exertions of our excellent pastor, the Rev. T. R. Dobson, heartily assisted by the churchwardens, and generally supported by the community, a long desired fact has at last become a reality, that is, a fine, large, and well-proportioned schoolroom has been erected at a cost of over £500, two fifths of which amount have been generously contributed by two lady-sisters of the congregation, one of whom has now gone from us in order to take her place amongst the good and generous in the brighter realms above. Through the quiet, unobtrusive activity of Mrs. and Miss Dobson, funds had been collected for the furniture of the room, which is large enough to hold about 250 people, and to which is attached a room for the vestry and ladies' room. On Sunday the 13th inst., a harvest thanksgiving was held in the church, which was beautifully decorated with flowers, fruits, and devices. An anthem was sung morning and evening in really artistic style, and the sermons were preached by the Rev. W. H. Channing. The collections, made in aid of the building, amounted to about £15. On Monday, at six in the evening, a social gathering took place in the new schoolroom, which was chastely decorated, and presented a most pleasing aspect. At half-past six the Rev. T. R. Dobson took the chair, and called on the Rev. W. H. Channing, who in a short address declared the rooms open. After about an hour's interval for refreshments, a meeting was held under the presidency of the Rev. T. R. Dobson, and short addresses were delivered by the Revs. W. H. Channing and F. Macdonald (Lewes); Messrs. Bartholomew, Slater, Warren, Wilmshurst, and others. An excellent programme of duets, songs, and recitations was gone through, and the choir and singing-class, with their excellent leaders, deserved richly the thanks which were proposed for them. For all years to come, the harvest thanksgiving will also be the anniversary of the opening of the schoolrooms.

BALLYCLARE.—On the 7th inst. a deputation from the above congregation waited on their minister, the Rev. English Crooks, and presented him with a handsome sum of money to defray the expense entailed by the furnishing of his manse, which has recently been repaired and beautified by the congregation.

CONGLETON.—The annual sermons were preached on Sunday week by the Rev. W. Carey Walters, of Whitchurch. The congregations were good, particularly in the evening. The sermons were marked by a breadth and catholicity of spirit, and by a freshness and pathos which made them particularly attractive and effective. In the afternoon of the same day the scholars, in a most pleasing manner, gave a service of song illustrative of the story of Joseph. Mr. Statham conducted the service, and Mr. Pickford gave the reading.—On Monday there was a tea meeting, at which nearly 200 persons sat down; afterwards a public meeting was held, when the scholars' attendance prizes were distributed, and addresses given by the Rev. W. C. Walters, Rev. J. Russell, of Macclesfield, and Rev. J. H. Matthews, of Nantwich. The choir gave several glees. The proceedings closed with singing and the benediction. The Rev. Iden Payne was in the chair, and the collections and donations amounted to nearly £15.

DOB LANE, FAILSWORTH.—The new chapel has advanced so far that our energetic friends are now preparing the interior fittings, and are contemplating the purchase of an organ. To do this they require, however, as explained in the advertisement, some additional funds, which we hope they may obtain.

DERBY.—The anniversary services were held in the Friargate Chapel on Sunday last, October 20th, and were conducted by the Rev. W. H. Channing. His subject in the morning was, "The First-born among many Brethren;" and in the evening, "The Revival of Real Christian Life." He spoke of the progressive declension of faith through loss of belief in the well-beloved Son, and consequently in the Father (as a personal God) and then on the life to come, and finally on the obligation of duty. He insisted that the lost faith could only be recovered by again learning to see the Father in the man Christ, and so in all humanity. In the evening he denounced the terrible hypocrisy of Christendom, as shown especially in war between nations, and the war of classes and society within nations, pointing to the small army of 10,000 policemen that are required for the protection of London alone; and he appealed for a real trial of Christianity that Christendom might be made for the first time Christian. There was a large and deeply interested congregation at both services. The collections were better than usual, amounting to nearly £16. The chapel was beautifully decorated with flowers, ferns, and evergreens, arranged with very great taste. They were displayed in greatest abundance about the pulpit, and a vase of delicate autumnal flowers was placed on the communion table in front of it, surrounded by a band of green, and flowers of richer colours. Garlands were placed upon the foot of the pillars; plants in the recesses of the windows; and wreaths of evergreens were suspended from the wall at the end of the chapel. The gas pendants and communion rails had also their share in the adornment, and lent their graceful curves to vary and diversify the general beauty.

HULME: DOMESTIC MISSION, EMBDEN-STREET.—The third session of the Mutual Improvement and Recreation Class, in connection with this Society, was opened on Wednesday evening, the 9th inst., when the president, the Rev. James Harrop, read a paper on "Amusements for the People," showing the absolute necessity that existed for wholesome amusements, and the great benefit—physical, intellectual, and moral—which they were calculated to afford, especially to the young. Having sketched the history of amusements as engaged in by both rich and poor from as early a period as the third or fourth century, and pointed out the marked improvement that has taken place of late years in both our indoor and outdoor amusements, he concluded by the expression of very deep regret that the different religious bodies, with but rare exceptions, should still persist in opposing the legitimate gratification of this deep instinct in the minds of the young, and so leave them to seek it amid circumstances and influences that year by year prove ruinous to the bodies, minds, and souls of so many who otherwise might constitute our hope, strength, and joy.—On Saturday evening, the 9th inst., the inaugural tea party in connection with the above society was held. The evening was most pleasantly spent in reading, reciting, singing, dancing, and various interesting games. Mr. Harrop again presided.

KEIGHLEY.—On Saturday, October 19th, a tea meeting was held, when about sixty were present. Mr. Emmot, a secularist, presided after tea, and expressed his desire to see Unitarianism spread. Mr. Simpson spoke of the increased attendance during the last few weeks, and hoped the cause would continue and obtain a firm footing in Keighley. The Rev. Geo. Wooler noticed the Rev. J. Baldwin Brown's reference to Unitarianism in his great speech at Liverpool, and thought that instead of Evangelical churches re-absorbing Unitarianism they were absorbing Unitarian sentiment. At the Queen-street Unitarian Meeting Room, on Sunday evening, the Rev. George Wooler, of Thorne, reviewed the debate on Worship between Mr. C. Bradlaugh, and the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., at Nottingham. The attendance was good. He continued his discourse in the same place on Tuesday evening.

KIDDERMINSTER.—On Sunday, the 20th inst., two sermons were preached in the New Meeting House, morning and evening, by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., on behalf of a fund to form a library. There is at present no lending library in Kidderminster, and the free library is not open to women. The building to be used for this purpose is a grammar school founded by Nicholas Kearsall, and closed since King Charles school was opened to Dissenters, now called the Kearsall Room. The collections amounted to £16. 10s. In the afternoon Mr. Gaskell held a confirmation service, when thirty young people were confirmed. Mr. Gaskell's beautiful address to them, and his eloquent, earnest discourses, were highly appreciated by three large congregations.

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—The Sunday school anniversary services were held in Stamford-street Chapel, on Sunday the 20th inst. The sermons were preached by the Rev. T. Dunkerley, B.A. As on former occasions, a few hymns were sung by the school children alone, while the congregation listened. As many of the parents of the scholars were present at the evening service, the minister addressed himself especially to parents, the congregation numbering upwards of 130, and about 70 scholars. The usual collections were made at the services, and amounted to £7. 11s. 9d. There was a social meeting of the teachers in the afternoon.

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD.—On Monday evening last the annual business meeting of members of the Church was held, under the presidency of Mr. John Hunt, chairman of the church committee. The report, read by Mr. William Yates, showed a nett increase of 13 enrolled members, and of 22 sittings let. Financial affairs were in a healthy and satisfactory condition, owing mainly to the energy of the indefatigable treasurer, Mr. J. A. Green. The Social Union had been carried on with favourable results, both with regard to the numbers and the quality of the papers read by the members. The experiment of the bowl in the vestibule of the church (to receive the free-will offerings of the worshippers) had proved a success, and had enabled the committee to make a slight reduction in the grant received from the Liverpool District Association. Reference was made to the courses of lectures delivered early in the year at Walton, Kirkdale, and Bootle, by the minister, the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, from which much good had accrued to the church; and it was announced that Mr. Williams had obtained from generous friends the necessary funds for the delivery of another course of four lectures, in the Bootle Town Hall, in November and December. The condition of the Sunday school was reported as satisfactory. The report and statement of accounts were unanimously adopted; the usual votes of thanks to retiring committee, choir, and minister warmly accorded; and a number of matters relating to the church discussed in a very kindly spirit.

MANCHESTER: MILES PLATTING.—The annual business meeting of the members of this church was held on Monday last, the warden (Mr. Thos. Howard) presiding. The secretary's and treasurer's reports, and also the report of the Ladies' Congregational Society, were presented, and showed that satisfactory progress had been made during the year. In the number of enrolled members there was an increase of 9, the number this year being 122 against 113 last year, and the Sunday evening congregations were also larger than in former years. The total offertory reached £79. 15s. 9d., and the average (excluding special collections) showed an increase of 1s. 7d. per Sunday. By means of a bazaar held in April last, and which realised £166. 9s. 9d., the various debts—for building classrooms, paving, &c.—were cleared off, and a surplus of £60 invested as a nucleus for a fund for building a new church more suited to the requirements of a growing congregation than the present building. A thoroughly united and harmonious spirit prevails in the congregation—pastor and people working heartily for the same end; and this may be taken as an earnest of further vigorous efforts in the future.—On Sunday last the full offertories were devoted to the Abercane Colliery Explosion Fund. The amount collected was £4. 8s. 1d.

MANCHESTER SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—On Sunday last the second meeting this session was held in the Domestic schoolroom, Embden-street, Hulme, Rev. J. T. Marriott, president in the chair. A letter was read by the Secretary, Mr. Wm. H. Mellor, from Mr. David Thompson resigning his office in connection with the Union, when Mr. Edwin Winsor moved, and the Rev. J. Harrop seconded, the following resolution which was carried unanimously:—"That the members of the Manchester Unitarian Sunday School Union having received Mr. David Thompson's resignation of office among them on his appointment as Missionary to the Belfast Unitarian Missionary Association, Ireland, desire to express to him their gratitude for his past services to this Union, their warm esteem for his personal character, and their earnest good wishes for himself and Mrs. Thompson in their new sphere of increased usefulness, and pray that God's blessing may rest upon their work; also that a copy of this resolution be engrossed and handed to Mr. Thompson." Mr. Thompson having replied, Mr. J. H. Jones read a paper on the "Sunday Schools of the Future." He briefly sketched the history of Sunday schools in Manchester, and said in future they must remain open longer hours, and that they should partake more of the form of a club. Mr. J. Wigley, Rev. J. Harrop, Mr. Lord, Mr. Heywood, and the president, took part in the discussion. Mr. Jones having replied, the meeting closed with prayer by the Rev. J. T. Marriott. Over 70 persons being present.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On Wednesday evening, the 17th inst., the second of a series of concerts in aid of the Sunday School New Harmonium Fund, was given in the schoolrooms of the Church of the Divine Unity, and took the form of a Harvest Home Festival. The boys' schoolroom was beautifully decorated with flowers, fruit, and sheafs of wheat. The concert, which was under the entire arrangement of Mr. Thompson, one of the members of the church choir, reflected the highest credit upon his judgment and skill, the pieces being principally upon harvest time. On the motion of Mr. Glover, the thanks of the meeting was given to the Rev. A. Payne for presiding, after which "Rule Britannia" (solo by Miss Harrison) brought a most successful meeting to a close.

PADIHAM: WINTER LECTURES.—On Monday evening, October 14th, the first of a course of political and literary lectures for the winter of 1878-79, promoted by a committee of Padiham friends, was given in the schoolroom connected with the Unitarian Chapel. The lecturer was the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, of Liverpool, and the subject was, "The House of Lords." The Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A., was in the chair, and there was a very good audience. The lecturer received a hearty vote of thanks, and to the chairman, who offered some interesting remarks on the subject of the lecture, a similar compliment was paid.

PAISLEY.—On Sunday evening week the winter evening lectures were commenced in the Church here by the Rev. W. Bennett. The subject chosen by Mr. Bennett was "The City of Glasgow Bank Failure, and Business Morals Generally." There was a large attendance, the chapel being quite filled, and the greatest possible attention was given throughout to the remarks of the lecturer. Mr. Bennett drew attention to the influence exerted by the theological beliefs of a people on their moral character and conduct, and in conclusion asserted that nothing very good in this direction was rationally to be expected so long as such a bad God was so generally believed in and worshipped. The lecturer announced a short course of lectures on "The Immoral Teachings and Tendencies of Calvinism."

STAND.—The annual choir sermons were preached on Sunday, October 13th, by the Rev. D. Walsley, B.A., and the Rev. W. Harrison. The collections amounted to £27. 8s. 1d.

SOUTHAMPTON.—On Thursday the 19th inst., the third lecture was delivered before the Philosophical and Musical Society, in the Kell Memorial Schools, by the Rev. D. Amos, the subject being "An Evening with the Philosopher and the Philosophy of Bacon." The chair was taken by Mr. Froude. A large audience greeted the lecturer, who tersely reviewed the life and teachings of the great father of inductive philosophy. Under a powerful description the career of the philosopher was passed in review, a career so grand, so little, so mighty, so weak. Then followed an able analysis of his philosophy, with an epitome of results. It had benefited every department of human life and labour; its law was progress; a point which yesterday was invisible is its goal to-day, and its starting point to-morrow. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer and to the chairman closed the proceedings.

THE NORTH CHESHIRE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—This society held its annual meeting at Mottram last Saturday. About eighty sat down to tea, a good number being teachers. After tea the business meeting was held, when the whole of the retiring officers were re-elected for the ensuing year—The Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., president; the Rev. N. Green, vice president; Mr. John Jackson, treasurer; and Mr. T. B. Broadrick, secretary. At the evening meeting the Rev. J. K. Smith presided, and called on the Rev. N. Green to deliver an address on the work in the Sunday school. Speeches were also delivered by the following gentlemen: Rev. J. G. Slater, Messrs. Cotterell, H. M. Green, Kerfoot, Barlow, and Sidebottom. A most pleasant and profitable evening was brought to a close by the company singing the evening hymn, and prayer by the chairman.

WIGAN: PARK LANE CHAPEL.—The annual distribution of medals and certificates to deserving scholars took place on Sunday last. The children of the Sunday school assembled in the chapel at three o'clock, where a suitable service was held. The distinctions were given by the Rev. Geo. Fox. A medal and certificate were given to each of 17 boys and girls who had never missed attending the Sunday school during the year, and a certificate was given to each of 26 boys and girls who had nearly made full attendance, but had not fulfilled the conditions required for the medal. The distinctions appear to be valued by the scholars, and have undoubtedly a tendency to ensure regularity of attendance.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

The report of the Eastern Unitarian Mission and other matter must stand over till next week.

THE LITURGY QUESTION.

To the Editors,—I have been much interested in what has appeared in the Unitarian Herald on the subject of a liturgy or free prayer, and would suggest that the truth may perhaps be found in a combination of the two forms. Of course a great deal will depend upon the character of the congregation, and upon matters incident to peculiar localities; but our churches are for the most part made up of those who have been connected with the Establishment or with Nonconformity, and it seems to me that one service liturgical and one free would meet, to a large extent, the wants of our people. At Taunton we have in the morning a liturgical service (the morning prayer of the Church of England revised for Unitarian worship), and in the evening a free service, somewhat after the order of Nonconformist places of worship. This method is found to be very generally acceptable and helpful to the varied thought and life of the members composing the congregation, and I offer the result of our experience as a contribution towards the consideration of a very important subject.

But I may say, what we all feel more or less, that no form will be very effective, or powerful for good, without the spirit of regular and full attendance, warm and generous support, suitable and inspiring music, and hearty and thorough participation in worship and work. Let us have these and our cause will prosper not thirty only, but sixty or a hundred fold.—Faithfully yours,
4, Park Terrace,
Taunton, Oct. 21, 1878.
JOHN BIRKS.

To the Editors.—The various reasons given for and against a liturgy leave little to be said either in favour or against the use of a liturgy in public worship. Not being near a Unitarian chapel, I have lately gone to church, and regret to say that the liturgy has been read in such a careless manner as to make no impression upon me, and seemed to be read more as a task than an act of worship. That is also what I have felt at every church where I have been present. A liturgy has a tendency to lead to a formal manner of reading, leaving little or no impression upon the worshippers. This may be said of a written prayer by the minister; but there is more variety in written prayers, and the minister will be apt to deliver more slowly and solemnly a prayer composed by himself than one written for him. It is said in favour of a liturgy that it gives the hearers, and especially young persons, something to do, and hence more attractive. But worship is not speaking, or doing something, but listening and thinking. A good listener is the best worshipper. Listening and resolving are the essence of worship. A long liturgy, as in the Established Church, is to me wearisome in the extreme, from its length, repetitions, and mode of delivery. I can only speak for myself, and that is its effect upon me whenever I happen to attend church.

The best form of worship to my mind is, when the hymns and chants are well given by a good choir, and the congregation joining; the Scriptures carefully selected and well read; and the prayer applicable to the general feeling and wants of the congregation, delivered sincerely and solemnly by the minister. Such a form of worship leads to deep and sincere thought, and that is true and beneficial worship. These are the ideas, I believe, of a large number of Unitarian worshippers.—I am, yours truly,
J. COOPER.

COMING WEEK.

BIRMINGHAM: OLD MEETING.—On Sunday, at 11 and 6.30, the Rev. Dr. R. Laird Collier will preach in aid of the Queen's Hospital.

BLACKPOOL.—On Sunday, at 10.45 and 6.30, the Rev. A. B. Camm will preach.

CHELTEMHAM.—On Sunday, at [11 and 7, the Rev. H. W. Channing will preach.

EDINBURGH.—On Sunday, annual sermons by the Rev. H. Ierson, M.A., in aid of the Scottish Unitarian Christian Association. On Monday, at 3, meeting of the committee; solrée at 7.

LONDON.—Lecture by the Rev. J. Page Hopps, on "The Religious Value of the Unitarian Faith," on Wednesday, in the Luxemburg Hall. On Thursday, at the Town Hall, Hammersmith. On Friday at the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms, Southampton-street, Peckham.

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—On Sunday, at 10.45 and 6.30, annual school sermons, by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A.

STOCKPORT.—On Sunday, at 10.45 and 6.30, the Rev. Eli Fay will preach school sermons.

SCARBOROUGH.—On Sunday morning, at 10.45, and in the evening at 7, the Rev. Dendy Agate will preach.

Birth.

CHAMBERLAIN.—On the 16th inst., at Moor Green Hall, near Birmingham, the wife of Arthur Chamberlain, of a daughter.

Marriages.

COX-HEAP.—On the 19th inst., at the Unitarian Chapel, Blackwater-street, Rochdale, by the Rev. Thomas Carter, Spencer Murch Cox, of Honiton, solicitor, to Susan, daughter of the late Benjamin Heape, Esq., of Rochdale.

KERRIAL-TAYLOR.—On the 17th inst., at the Unitarian Chapel, New Bridge-street, by the Rev. J. T. Marriott, Henry Cecil, second son of Wm. Handley Croxton Kerrial, Grantham, to Isabel Josephine, third daughter of the late Joseph and Isabel Taylor, of Broughton.

Deaths.

HOLMES.—On 15th inst., Jane, widow of the late William Holmes, of Hull, aged 81.

LLOYD.—On the 24th inst., at his residence, near Bridgend, Glamorgan, suddenly, the Rev. T. Lloyd.

BLACKPOOL-CHANNING HOUSE,
39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.
Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEYS TEMPERANCE
HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Just Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, October 25, 1878.

DOING AND SAYING.

We are glad to learn that Mr. John Henry Poynting, B.A., has been elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Dr. Von Döllinger has ceased to give lectures in the University of Munich, because the academical youth will no longer resort to them.

There are five millions of Roman Catholics in the United States, and every traveller finds evidence that Romanism is a great and formidable power.

Recent statistics show that there are over 15,000,000 Dissenters in Russia, many of whom, like the Stundists, are liable to imprisonment and exile for professing Nonconformist opinions.

A munificent gift of £1,000 has been forwarded to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, through the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, to whom it was handed at the recent Church Congress by a gentleman whom he did not know.

While Dean Stanley was in Boston a great effort was made, in which Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson participated, to induce him to preach in the Unitarian Church at Concord, but he declined. There are limits to the liberalism of the most liberal Churchmen.

The tables of the earth's population have recently been collected by Mr. Keith Johnson. The total population amounts to 1,424,046,600, and out of that aggregate the non-Christians are 1,033,505,000, leaving the total of Christians 390,541,600. Of these latter 77,958,000 are of the Greek Church, and 190,315,000 Roman Catholics. The remainder are Protestants, and amount to 115,218,000.

The committee appointed by the Synod of the Presbyterian Church in England to consider the question of lapsed Presbyterians, will shortly have the matter under their consideration. Some one suggests that it would be well to commence at the top of the social tree, and look after such lapsed Presbyterians as the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Lichfield, and the Duchess of Sutherland.

The Rev. George Drury, rector of Claydon, Suffolk, intends to reply, in a court of law, to the criticisms that were made upon his conduct in the recent "burial scandal" case at Akenham, a writ for libel having been served upon the publisher of the East Anglian Daily Times, in which journal the graphic report of the affair first appeared, and was transferred from its columns to nearly every newspaper in the kingdom. Such a trial cannot fail to be of much public interest, and help to put an end to these continually-occurring outrages upon our common humanity.

The Times announces that "it is proposed to erect a new cathedral at Colombo, on the old Rifle Parade Ground, at a cost of £25,000. It is arranged that the present edifice, known as St. Peter's Church, formerly a Dutch official building, shall be taken over by the authorities, the amount of the valuation going towards the construction fund of a new cathedral." In other words, as we gather from the Ceylon Observer, a building belonging to the British Crown, standing on land lent by it to the Church, is now to be bought by the Crown, and the proceeds devoted to Church purposes.

The Bishop of Peterborough, in the third and by far the most important part of his charge, delivered at Northampton, dwelt on the question of the obedience or not of the clergy to the law, as finally interpreted by the Supreme Court of Appeal in matters ecclesiastical. He said, when finally and definitively raised free from all technicalities, the question admitted of only two results, viz., a general submission on the part of the great body of the clergy, and secession on the part of a minority, or else a general resistance, followed by a separation of Church and State. A state of open war was, he said, not to be tolerated by either party.

Mr. R. W. Dale, speaking at the Congregational Union, at Liverpool, said that in the county of Derby the Established Church provided 41 per cent of the whole religious accommodation existing in the county, and the Free Churches provided 59 per cent of that accommodation. The population was most sparse and scattered in the northern part of the county, and there the Established Church provided 36.91 per cent of the whole accommodation, while the Free Churches, under conditions which looked most adverse and most difficult, provided 63.09 per cent of the accommodation. These figures were a proof that Free Churches could live in rural districts.

The Sanitary Record says: "The London clergy seem by no means so much interested in the health and physical welfare of their people and their instruction in the laws of health as they are apt to tell us, and probably to think that they are. The following advertisement has appeared in many leading clerical papers for some months, and without eliciting, we hear, more than a solitary application from the whole of the metropolitan clergy: 'Lectures on the Laws of Health and Domestic Economy are delivered under the auspices of the National Health Society, by competent teachers of either sex, at mothers' meetings and working men's clubs, at reduced fees, and in some cases gratuitously. Applications to be made by letter to the Secretary, 44, Berners Street, W.'"

At Winchester Diocesan Conference the separation of Church and State was considered, and a paper from Lord Selborne was read, to which the Times devotes a eulogistic article. His lordship warns the High Church advocates of disestablishment that they will not by this means throw off the control of secular courts. This is no new discovery. Ritualists and others who want spiritual independence are perfectly aware that all disputed questions relating to ecclesiastical doctrine and property must, in a final resort, be settled by a court of appeal. The same rule applies to all Nonconformist bodies, to whose freedom of organisation and action the Ritualists aspire. We do not find that Dissenters complain of this as a hardship. They rarely have to go to a court of law, and Lord Selborne's argument is nothing more than a bogey to frighten restive churchmen out of their anti-State Church views.

If anybody wants to read a history the mere facts of which will make him proud of English womanhood, we recommend to him the little history of Miss Weston's work among the sailors, which Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton have just published. It is a record of pure love and devotion. Miss Weston wrote a letter to a ship, and the recipient read it to a mate. The mate wanted one like it also. Presently others demanded it. The letter became popular; at last it had to be printed; and now the "Blue Jack" is received regularly by every sailor in the fleet, wherever it may be stationed. It was carried to the Arctic regions, monthly packets being laid in when the ship sailed, and served out at the proper date where no post could reach. This was the beginning; and now Miss Weston has her mission on nearly all the vessels, and her Sailor's Rest at Devonport. The story of this is told with great pathos, and the gratitude of the sailors for what has been done is said to be remarkable, though it cannot be excessive.

Our able evening contemporary, the Echo, continues its scathing exposure of the system of trafficking in church livings, and in its seventh article tells a story from the life of James Hinton upon whose remarkable memoir Professor Upton contributes a most interesting essay to the current number of the Theological Review. Mr. Hinton was once called into the country to see a clergyman whose life was despaired of unless an exceedingly delicate and difficult operation could be successfully performed. On the strength of the report that the rector was dying, an agent gained an additional £500 on the then market price of the living. The notion of two men daring to gamble over his patient's life, and that such a transaction should be possible in a Christian Church, made Mr. Hinton most righteously indignant, especially as he held that if the knowledge of £500 being staked on his death had come to his patient's ears the shock would have proved fatal. Mr. Hinton had the satisfaction of cheating one of the parties to this State Church bargain by saving the life of his patient; but, as his biographer relates, he "for some years maintained a resolute protest by refusing to enter a church."

In connection with the retirement from the ministry of Rev. Brooke Lambert, vicar of Tamworth, a London churchwarden of twenty years' standing points out the fact that "religious doctrine in England is, after all, very much a matter of supply and demand," and adds, "I do not hesitate to say that his (Mr. Lambert's) enforced retirement is creditable neither to the laity nor to the Church authorities. Had he been a mere repeater of well-worn phrases and traditional evangelical theology, he would have been regarded as a great light. The secret of success in the pulpit, so far as the British Philistine is concerned, is simply a plausible manner, a fluent but shallow speech, and the judicious employment of a number of pious phrases culled from the popular theology. To me, having lived 'behind the scenes' so long, the success of some preachers seems quite unaccountable. It seems to be just in inverse ratio to their knowledge, common sense, and depth of character." One writer gives a description of the sort of thing that is popular. He attended a "religious service" in a tent at Maidstone. After singing, an apparatus for exhibiting the oxy-hydrogen light was brought forward. It burned very unsteadily. An amiable-looking individual mounted the platform, and, pointing to the light, announced his text, "He dwelleth in light unapproachable." But the flame flared up and manifested a tendency to go out, and the writer felt that this union of Christianity and chemistry was unique, but preferred to retire.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A LIBERAL GIFT.

THE Free Church has lately come into possession of a bequest of £27,000 for missionary purposes. It has not yet been decided what should be done with it. But it will probably be decided to devote it to India. In all the Scottish churches there is a want of men for the foreign fields.

PROFESSOR SMITH.

THE Aberdeen Free Presbytery, after a long and stormy debate, referred the case of Professor Smith, simpliciter, to the General Assembly, the professor being granted leave of absence for three months to undertake a tour in the East, which will include a visit to some of the principal scenes of biblical interest in Egypt and Syria. Professor Smith evoked great laughter and applause in the Presbytery, when he announced that his object in going was to fit himself better for the duties of his chair. The joke consisted in his assuming so confidently that he would be restored; the current belief, on the other hand, being that whatever happens the Free Church will hardly have confidence enough in him to recommit to him the oversight of her students.

The Scotsman, remarking on the article of Principal Tulloch on Disestablishment, in the Contemporary, says the Principal makes a somewhat touching protest against being "supposed to be a fanatic for the existing Establishments, or the apologist of these churches as they stand and have stood for generations. On the contrary, he thinks both churches greatly in need of new reformation, and he has not a word to say for such exclusive features as characterise either the one or the other." Nobody doubts it. But then what do we see? Principal Tulloch rowing as hard as ever he can in the same boat where Principal Pirie is look-out, and Dr. Phin is steersman. Every stroke that he makes is doing the work of those objectionable navigators. He is playing the game of "exclusiveness," and it only makes the matter more lamentable that he has no faith in it. None of us believes that he is "a fanatic for the existing Establishment," but then, What is he doing in that galley?

AMERICAN NOTES.

DEAN STANLEY IN BOSTON.

THE American papers indulge very freely in personal criticisms. Here is a paragraph on Dean Stanley from Boston: "The Dean of Westminster has been on a visit to our city, and has met with a most pleasant reception. He is to preach but twice in this country, and one of these sermons was given in Trinity Church last Sunday. A great concourse assembled to hear him and to see him, for the curiosity was as great to see as to hear the most noted man in the Anglican Church. Compared with Philips Brooks, the rector of the church, he was not much to see. His figure is slight and somewhat insignificant. His hair is grey and neatly cut. His face is pleasant and intellectual in its cast. His voice is not powerful, and in his discourse he was not distinctly heard. He read his sermon in an animated way, but without gestures. He is not ashamed to wear old clothes. A very bad soft hat on the back of his head, and a faded, weather-beaten overcoat on his shoulders, would not give a dandy a high idea of a dignitary of the English Church." Some Massachusetts minds are slightly mixed in respect to Dean Stanley and Mr. H. M. Stanley. It was proposed in one of Boston's suburban Sunday schools to invite "Rev. Dean Stanley, who had just arrived from England," to attend their Sunday school concert, and "speak to the children about his wonderful experiences in Africa."

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

A Unitarian's Confession of Faith concerning God, Jesus, Salvation, the Bible, and the Future Life. By John Page Hopps.

MR. HOPPS'S Confession has now run through its 400,000 copies, his recent offer of quantities "to give away" having been at once answered by a demand which has exhausted the last edition. Being stereotyped, it will no doubt appear again. The attention of our readers was called to the little work early in its history. Having obtained the place it has—and no other Unitarian publication that we know of has ever reached so large a circulation—words of approbation or comment would be almost out of place. We will only say that, although stereotyped in the letter, it is eminently fresh in the spirit. It has traits of individuality which give it its highest value. Here is just what a man heartily believes, and what, therefore, helps men also to see truth in its living power. The dry production of a Church Council would go but a little way towards the same result.

The Apostle Paul and the Preaching of Christianity in the Primitive Church. By Sir Richard Davis Hanson, Chief Justice of South Australia. Williams and Norgate, London and Edinburgh.

THE executors of the late Sir Richard Hanson have authorised the publishers to offer to the subscribers of the Theological Translation Fund the above work, published at 12s., for 6s., upon condition that the copies be ordered before the close of the year. So good an offer of so valuable a book ought not to be neglected. As in the Jesus of History, by the same author, the distinguishing merit of the work consists in its broad, unprofessional, and judicial treatment of evidences. "Unprofessional," we mean, as from an ecclesiastical point of view. The professional habit of mind of the late Chief Justice, as a lawyer, gives his argument its best claim to our attention. An unprejudiced weighing of the evidence is a first want in the criticism of the origins of Christianity. No doubt more than this is wanted for a complete fulfilment of the task undertaken by Rénan and Chief Justice Hanson; above all, a deep sympathy with the spiritual aims of Jesus and the Apostles. Perhaps neither Rénan nor the Chief Justice has this in its plenitude. But the critical faculty has a preliminary work to do of the greatest moment. It is easy to get befogged in the attempt to realise the pure teaching of the Founder of Christianity and his followers from the standpoint of internal evidence. A man may lapse from orthodoxy, or lapse back again into it, and never be able to give a fair reason for the faith that is in him, if he trusts merely to his own experience. Considering the extraordinary claims made by opposing religious schools, it is a first necessity for their determination that the history of questions be probed to the origin. What adds to the value of Sir Richard Hanson's book is that it presents the results of an inquiry pursued independently, and differing as well from the school of Baur, on the one hand, as from the orthodox school on the other. It was probably beyond the scope of Sir Richard Hanson's studies to trace out, with any completeness, the relation of the Pauline system to that course of speculation which grew into Gnosticism. At all events this subject, one of the deepest consequence to the history of Christian doctrine, is very inadequately treated in the work before us. In other departments, as in contrasting the Acts with the Epistles, this book is rich with materials carefully amassed, and criticised with peculiar sagacity.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

LINES BY AN INVALID, WHO IS AN OLD UNITARIAN.

IF entangled in brambles of life,
Misfortune stares in my face;
What is that? I shall equal the richest
At the end of my earthly race.

My health is gone, my body's weak;
When on my bed I cannot sleep;
Yet are my daily wants supplied,
And hence, though lonely, I'll not weep.

I always have my daily bread,
And friends full many, that wish me well,
My little ones are clad and fed;
For this my gratitude shall swell.

Into the world I must not dare,
My house my prison aye must be;
Not even into the House of Prayer,
Till God himself shall set me free.

—Merthyr Express.

T. DAVIES.

CURIOSITIES.

"What do you know of the character of this man?" was asked of a witness at a police-court the other day. "What do I know of his character? I know it to be unbleachable, your honour," he replied with much emphasis.

"Now, children," said a Sunday-school superintendent, who had been talking to his scholars about good people and bad people, "when I'm walking in the street, I speak to some persons I meet, and don't speak to others; and what's the reason?" He expected the reply would be, "Because some are good and others are bad," but, to his discomfiture, the general shout was, "Because some are rich and others are poor."

Two Irishmen on a sultry night, immediately after their arrival in India, took refuge underneath the bed-clothes from a skirmishing party of mosquitoes. At last one of them, gasping from heat, ventured to peep beyond the bulwarks, and by chance espied a fire-fly which had started into the room. Arousing his companion with a punch, he said: "Fergus, Fergus, it's no use. Ye mightas well come out! Here's one of the craythers sarchin' for us wid a lantern."

A St. Louis journal advises young men to choose a wife by the music she plays and the way she plays it. If she manifests a predilection for Strauss, she is frivolous; for Beethoven, she is impractical; for Liszt, she is too ambitious; for Verdi, she is sentimental; for Offenbach, she is giddy; for Gounod, she is lackadaisical; for Gottschalk, she is superficial; for Mozart, she is prudish; for Flotow, she is commonplace; for Wagner, she is idiotic. The girl who hammers away at "The Maiden's Prayer," "The Anvil Chorus," and "Silvery Waves" may be depended upon as a good cook and also as being healthful; and if she includes "The Battle of Prague" and "The White Cockade" in her repertory, you ought to know that she has been thoughtfully, religiously, and strictly nurtured. But last of all, pin your faith upon the calico dress of the girl who can play "Home, Sweet Home."

Jake was heard calling across the fence to his neighbour's son, a coloured youth who goes to school at the Atlantic Coloured University:

"Look hyar, boy, you goes ter school; don't yer?"

"Yes," replied the boy.

"Gittin eddykashun, ain't yer?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, it don't take two whole days to make an hour, do it?"

"W'y no!" exclaimed the boy.

"You was gwine ter bring dat hatchit back in an hour, warn't yer?"

"Yes, sir."

"An' it's bin two days since yer borrowed it. Now, what good's eddykashun gwine ter do you thick-skulled niggers when yer go ter school a whole year an' den can't tell how long it takes ter fetch back a hatchit?"

"I GO A-FISHING."

Now it seems to me that the first thing is to set ourselves to do it. 'Tis just like everything else, it wants doin'. It won't do to be always talkin' about it, an' desirin' it, an' prayin' that we may be useful. We must get up an' do it. Simon said, "I go a-fishin'." An' he might have talked about it, an' prayed about it all his life; he never would have caught anything till he went. We keep sayin', Dear brethren, let us go a-fishin', or, You know we really must go a-fishin'. We talk of how very right and proper it is, an' how we desire to do it, an' we go prayin' that we may be stirred up to go a-fishin'.

But Simon gets out his bait-box, an' his cross-lines, an' he shoulders his oars, an' he shoves off the boat an' settlin' down he calls out to the rest of 'em, "I go a-fishin'." Then the rest who perhaps had been talkin' about it, shoved off their boats, too, an' said, "We also go with thee." An' that's the way in fishin' for souls. You must set about it. Why, we stand in on the shore, loungin' about the quay, with our hands in our pockets, thinkin' that if the fish are to be caught, the Lord will send 'em to us. If we want them, we must go a-fishin'. An' then there's another thing I like about Simon, he didn't mind goin' alone.

I'm afraid a good many of us would have seen Simon goin' out in his boat, an' never have said what the rest did. We would have kept our hands in our pockets, an' have said, "Quite right an' proper; he's called to the work." Or we should have said, "Oh, he's a leader; he ought to go," or we should have said, "There goes Simon again; what a gift he's got for it!" Pack o' stuff an' nonsense. A gift for it! Why, he had a hook an' line, an' bit o' bait: an' so he went out to do what he could. That was the gift for it, an' that was his callin' too. I want for every one of us to say, I go.—The Christian. DANIEL QUORM.

MR. FRETWELL AT THE ENGLISH CLUB.

THE Pester Journal, published at Budapesth, reports that on Wednesday evening, October 9, Mr. John Fretwell, Jun., an English merchant, staying here some time, gave an oration in the English language, in the great saloon of the hotel Queen of England, to the members of the club and many English-speaking guests. The subject was entitled—"A Yankee sermon upon a German text." Prince Bismarck's speech of Sept. 17th, regarding the Socialists, was the subject dealt with. "Prince Bismarck," said Mr. Fretwell, "is not the man to carry out experiments for the benefit of mankind. His suppressive measures might possibly remove the outer symptoms of Socialism, but the real disease would penetrate the blood so much the deeper. No country of Europe, not England itself, could try the Social experiment. Under the unblest dominion of Bismarck's policy the whole of Europe has been exhausted by war. The people who should have devoted themselves to agriculture and industry have been sent to the slaughter. Russia, nor Germany, nor Austria have gained either benefit or real honour by it. North America may be the land for the experiment. In its fruitful soil, its free atmosphere, plants and weeds grow in luxuriance unknown here. Weeds! What is weed? A useful plant whose real value present science has not yet discovered; and many a thing called here a weed has in the free air of America developed qualities which the statescraft of Berlin dare never produce.

The lecturer proceeded to give an historical survey of several American attempts; that of the Spanish Catholics which made of Mexico and Cuba a hell; of the English in Virginia, and the struggle in late times of free labour with slavery, resulting in a Republic, which for industry, economy, and political maturity far surpasses anything in the old world. True the dollar-culture of the American may be thrown in my teeth. But surely this is not worse in America than it is in the old world. In the seething sea of American life, the good in humanity has a better chance of development than under Bismarck's policy; and though you condemn the deeds of a Fisk, Brigham Young, and Jeff. Davis, remember these rule the worst elements of the nation, and ask yourself what a Louis Napoleon and such like men made of the best of their people.

Mr. Fretwell then spoke of the many Hungarians whom he had met in America, and asked, "What can the Hungarians learn from the Americans?" Hungary and America both run the same course as great agricultural countries, and stand with each other in the sharp competitions of the European market. The American depends for his advance not so much upon nature as upon the industry, intelligence, economy, and freedom of his labour. The elevation of the lowest classes of society is the work of America, and if the peasant here learns the virtues of the American peasant, and will have liberty to make it valuable in life, the Hungarian will have the inmost peace and prosperity.

THE GASKELL SCHOLARSHIP.

WE understand that Mr. Gaskell, in accordance with the terms of the Presentation of the Scholarship, has named as Trustees the Chairman of the Committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board (Mr. Harry Rawson); the Treasurer (Mr. E. C. Harding); the Hon. Secretaries (Rev. H. E. Dowson and Mr. Francis Nicholson), with the Rev. S. A. Steinthal and Mr. G. W. Rayner Wood.

CHURCH EXTENSIONS IN LARGE TOWNS.

BY THE REV. GEORGE KNIGHT.

[CONDENSED from a paper read at the annual meeting of the North Midland Association.]

After an introduction summarised in our last number, Mr. Knight said: I suppose that with all our differences we are pretty well agreed about this from the extreme North of Scotland to the extreme South of England—that human nature is perfectible, i.e., that it may progress to an indefinite extent—that there is a providential order in every man's life, i.e., that no one walks with aimless feet, and that every life is perfect when its manifestations and most providential order are wholly one, i.e., when God's will is done by each. We believe in man, not that he is a degraded being, but that he is a child of God. We believe not only that God is present with every child of His, but also that He is working in him, though he errs, sins, and suffers; and we believe that every child of God shall be divinely whole and peaceful when he recognises that inworking of God in all his states, and shall say: "Even so Father; I am thine. Do with me as seemeth Thee good." We have that faith at heart. The first question is then: Is there any demand for that faith in large towns? It is not enough to say that a spirit of inquiry is abroad among religious people, and that thousands are beginning to see that the doctrines of the bishops of Queen Elizabeth's time, and the ritual of the bishops of Rome are hardly up to the tastes and culture of men in the 19th century. We are pleased to know that there are Broad Churchmen in the episcopal community and Broad Churchmen in Dissenting communities, and these, like leaven, are influencing the whole church. But it may mean little for us so far as church extension is concerned. If the churches already established widen so as to satisfy the needs of such religious souls, then surely there is no demand for our religious efforts in new places. The real demand is that we, and we alone, can supply the teaching and the service which those men need who feel compelled to stand aloof from given bodies, who dare not compromise their characters by a seeming adherence to them, and who must stand out and live on consistently in the face of God and man.

There is another point I must mention here. All church building grows from a nucleus. There must be some around whom we can group disciples: some upon whom we can depend for faithful and sustained assistance, and who shall on the spot represent our movements. You remember that this is how all life is built up. Huxley's stinging nettle and every human body are composed of structural units of protoplasm with a nucleus; and no single nettle or body ever appears but from a nucleated mass of such stuff. As the base of an organisation of spiritual life we want a nucleated mass of agreement, however small it may be, before we can hope to build up successfully. We want units to start with. We can then aggregate these units into a body around which all our energies must play, from which all our operations must proceed, and with and through which all our success must be realised. We must have a mass of inquiry, of honesty, and of earnestness, with a nucleus of substantial agreements.

Now suppose that the first query is answered in the negative, another one arises, viz., Can we create a demand for our simple faith? It is a fact to which we cannot shut our eyes, that religious sympathies seem to have an affection for the higher places of the town and society, that you find less expressed religion in these quarters of a town where human habitations are crowded than in those quarters where every house has an acre of ground around it, and that the places where the labourers and mechanics and the small shopkeepers live, seem to offer a wider field for religious enterprise than any others. I do not intend to imply for a single instant that artisans and small shopkeepers are less capable of religious growth than manufacturers and merchants; but that their condition (local) renders their religious development less likely than that of those who live on hillside and in large open places. Now is there not here a large field for our cultivation—a field into which we can drop the seeds of our faith—and is there not here an open door to all earnest men; and can't we hear a voice as that of another angel, saying, "Behold I have set before thee an open door and no man can shut it?" It is not for me to point out the particulars in which our simple faith applies to them, to those who are older in the ministry and in the church than I am, but I may remind them that we believe in man—no, in men—that they may progress indefinitely in godliness and charity, and that we can construct for each one of them an ideal life—a true, righteous and divinely peaceful life—a life whose motive power is love, and the expression of which is fair dealing, temperance, and piety. Is it not within our power to make them feel this? Can't we awaken their perceptions and win their sympathies by our beautiful picture; nay, can't we detach them for a while from these absorbing thoughts which keep them deaf to other sounds than the familiar, and place them where they shall hear the music of the higher life and where their souls shall respond, if it only be in dull tones, to the tones of that richer song, and then bend every power for ever after to learn its purer sweetness and power? We can go to them, not as Father Ignatius goes in his missions telling them that if they would be saved they must give credence to two things—first, that they are fallen beings; and second, that Jesus by his death has made God ready to receive them; but we can go telling them that the child has only to arise and go to his Father to find a welcome home.

How then shall we proceed to extend our churches? Not by jubilee lectures and spasmodic efforts of that kind,* not by desultory work of any description, however hot some people may be to be at work, but by a simple and inexpensive organisation such as can be easily sustained and controlled, decreased or increased at will. I would organise a small band of visitors and teachers who should, as far as possible, make themselves acquainted with the thoughts and tendencies of the people by means of the clubs, social gatherings, discussions, and so forth, who should visit house by house for the purpose of ascertaining whether the formation of a Sunday school is possible or not, and who should be prepared to take action at once. Establish a school and by that you come into a very close relation with every parent of the scholars, can ascertain the bent of the parents religiously, and have at your command extremely powerful machinery for effecting such a change as you need. In large towns where you have a nucleus this could be easily done, and in large towns where there is not a nucleus the difficulty is not insurmountable. A number could be told off from a neighbouring town week by week. For two years your humble servant went five miles every other Sunday to teach in a school, and he was not alone. When you have the children you are not far off the parents and the church is not a long way behind the school. I could run over on my fingers places where jubilee lectures were given, in some two, in others four and six, but now the places are abandoned, and perhaps so for ever. It is not the pronounced, the demonstrative, the spasmodic work which tells, but the silent and the persistent.

*This does not refer to the good lectures may do, but to church extension.

Then, supposing that we are warranted in starting a "cause," that cause should receive a fair amount of ministerial help. Of course lay help would be its chief help at first. But lay help seems to be foreign to the genius of our church. I was inclined to think, for some time after I entered the body, that Wesley's plan of sustaining a new cause was the best, but I have lived long enough amongst you to find out my error. We cannot do as the Methodists, for the obvious reason that no Methodist preacher is allowed to look beyond the end of his nose. Whereas our laymen take more license than the parsons, and often stand back to back to look for the same thing. You never find Methodists in that position. There is that inevitable quarter—that terrible district meeting, when the question rings loud and clear from the president, "Do all our preachers preach the Faith?" and then it is open to any one present to challenge the doctrine of a suspected brother. Our young preachers are never pulled up, and so they may run round and round until they are back to back with each other. I have in my recollection now two places where missions were started. The one we sought to work by means of ministers who were about as wide asunder as they well could be. The trumpet gave not an uncertain sound, but utterly discordant notes. Need I tell you the effect? We have no mission there now. In the other the statements of the ministers were challenged, and the declaration made: "We don't know what you are driving at." Need I tell you that it has been debated whether we should abandon that place or not? I know that we cannot see alike—that no two of us would agree on the implications of a single doctrine, but I more than suspect that two people from the same congregation are more likely to agree than are two men from distant places—say one from Stanington and one from Bedford. I would, therefore, suggest that every new cause should be put under the care of the church nearest to it. If that cause is begun by a single congregation, of course that congregation will have charge of it; but if that cause is begun by a group of congregations, I would still suggest that it should be put under the charge of the nearest one. The uniformity of teaching in this case would be more likely to be closer, so that we should stand less risk of being challenged as to our meaning. A single congregation would be more likely to take an active and more affectionate interest in its success than an association could through its secretaries far away from the scene, and our preachers would be likely to take a deeper interest in it, as their connection with it is closer and more frequent.

The next step I would suggest as necessary, supposing there are reasons for continuing the work, would be to locate a missionary in that town. Our new causes must be missionary in the real sense of that word, and the appointed ministers must be missionaries. I think that we miss our way frequently in trying to establish independent churches, because the temptation is great, both to the people and ministers of them, to regard themselves as free and as well established as those whose positions are won, and whose support comes from themselves. They have to win their positions and to become self-supporting; and, therefore, they have not money to look after themselves, but after others, and the ministers have not money to visit the congregations, but the people outside them. The population must be the flock, and the neighbourhood the parish of any one minister. In a word, I would make every new cause a sort of Domestic Mission. Referring to the successful missions at Holbeck and Hunslet, Mr. Knight said: I think that the success of these two missions is largely owing to their purely missionary nature, the founders of which, and the ministers of which, considered that by far the greater half of their work was frequent, if not weekly visits to the homes of the people. In the words of the Rev. C. Wicksteed—"Settled congregations are self-contained, and need less personal intercourse with the minister; but missions are different, for the people need almost daily, certainly weekly visits, for they have to be fed and cultured into the newer life." All such work, if silent, is persistent, and no power existing can break it down. It goes on for ever conquering and to conquer.

I believe that we have a faith that shall win its way, that shall touch the religious susceptibilities of the so-called irreligious, and show them seeking after life. We believe in it with all our hearts; we will consecrate to it all the energy our hearts have. Let us go forth bearing our seed-basket. We may have to sow in tears, but we shall reap in joy.

I hate anything that occupies more space than it is worth; I hate to see a load of band-boxes go along the street, and I hate to see a parcel of big words without anything in them.—William Hazlitt.

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

A RELIGION AND THE RELIGION.

T. W. HIGGINSON.

It is our happiness to live in a time when all religions are at last outgrowing their mythologies, and emancipated men are stretching out their hands to share together "the luxury of a religion that does not degrade." The progressive Brahmoes of India, the Mohammedan students in London, the Jewish radicals in America, are teaching essentially the same principles, seeking the same ends, with the most enlightened Christian reformers. The Jewish congregations in Baltimore were the first to contribute for the education of the freedmen; the Buddhist temple, in San Francisco, was the first edifice of that city draped in mourning after the murder of President Lincoln; the Parsees of the East sent contributions to the Sanitary Commission. The great religions of the world are but larger sects; they come together, like the lesser sects, for works of benevolence; they share the same aspirations, and every step in the progress of each brings it nearer to all the rest. For most of us in America, the door out of superstition and sin may be called Christianity; that is our historical name for it; it is the accident of a birthplace. But other nations find other outlets; they must pass through their own doors, not through ours; and all will come at last upon the broad ground of God's providing, which bears no man's name. The reign of heaven on earth will not be called the Kingdom of Christ or of Buddha,—it will be called the Church of God, or the Commonwealth of Man. I do not wish to belong to a religion only, but to the religion; it must not include less than the piety of the world.

If one insists on being exclusive, where shall he find a home? What hold has any Protestant sect among us on a thoughtful mind? They are too little, too new, too inconsistent, too feeble. What are these children of a day compared with that magnificent Church of Rome, which counts its years by centuries, and its votaries by millions, and its martyrs by myriads; with kings for confessors and nations for converts; carrying to all the earth one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and claiming for itself no less title than the Catholic, the Universal? Yet in conversing with Catholics one is again repelled by the comparative juvenility, and modernness, and scanty numbers of their church. It claims to be elder brother of our little sects, doubtless, and seems to have most of the family fortune. But the whole fortune is so small! and even the elder brother is so young! The Romanist himself ignores traditions more vast than his own, antiquity more remote, a literature of piety more grand. His temple suffocates: give us a shrine still wider; something than this Catholicism more catholic; not the Church of Rome, but of God and Man; a Pantheon, not a Parthenon; the true semper, ubique, et ab omnibus; the Religion of the Ages, Natural Religion.

I was once in a Portuguese cathedral when, after the three days of mourning, in Holy Week, came the final day of Hallelujah. The great church had looked dim and sad, with the innumerable windows closely curtained, since the moment when the symbolical bier of Jesus was borne to its symbolical tomb beneath the High Altar, while the three mystic candles blazed above it. There had been agony and beating of cheeks in the darkness, while ghostly processions moved through the aisles, and fearful transparencies were unrolled from the pulpit. The priests knelt in gorgeous robes, chanting, with their heads resting on the altar steps; the multitude hung expectant on their words. Suddenly burst forth a new chant, "Gloria in Excelsis!" In that instant every curtain was rolled aside, the cathedral was bathed in glory, the organs clashed, the bells chimed, flowers were thrown from the galleries, little birds were let loose, friends embraced and greeted one another, and we looked down upon a tumultuous sea of faces all floating in a sunlit haze. And yet, I thought, the whole of this sublime transformation consisted in letting in the light of day! These priests and attendants, each stationed at his post, had only removed the darkness they themselves had made. Unveil these darkened windows, but remove also these darkening walls; the temple itself is but a lingering shadow of that gloom. Instead of its stifling incense, give us God's pure air, and teach us that the broadest religion is the best.—Unity.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE GIRLS IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

[A PAPER read by Mrs. FREESTON before the Manchester District Sunday School Union.]

PART III.

There can be no doubt that the inability to attend school with regularity has a very depressing influence on the girls. They know that the prizes to be awarded at the end of the year for regular attendance will not fall to them, and this in itself is disheartening. They are conscious, too, that they are making very little progress, that their brothers are outstripping them, and are mortified in consequence; but, finding no help for it, they solve the problem at length by concluding that "whatever is, is right," and quietly acquiesce in the inevitable.

A double work, then, lies before us. First, to try and secure for our girls a larger share of time to devote to their education; and, secondly, to convince them of the future value of such—to awaken in them such a desire for knowledge that they will gladly make the best use of the opportunities afforded them. As a rule, girls are too early sent into the mill, and this is a question on which we should bring our influence to bear. It is often by the girl's own desire that she goes to work so early: the mere love of change, the desire to have more of both time and money at her own disposal are the motives which most frequently influence her, and parents weakly, or selfishly, give their consent. The school-board inspector will now do much for her protection; but the time at which his hand is withdrawn is the very period when instruction would be most useful to her—when she is old enough to somewhat understand its value. It is pitiable to see pale little girls trailing through the streets in all kinds of weather, to be shut up in hot and unhealthy rooms, and often amongst very objectionable companions, when by a wiser arrangement this might be prevented. If, instead of sending her into the mill (where, though she will earn wages, she will learn to dress expensively, and so absorb them), she were kept at school half the day, and made to work in the house the other half, learning under her mother's eye many of the practical details of domestic economy, and forming habits of thrift and management, it would be found at the end of the year that the family purse was not much lighter, while the gain to the girl herself would be immense, to say nothing of the additional comfort to the household as the result of her assistance.

The household labours of girls would be lessened, and in consequence a greater amount of time left for intellectual training, if in the homes of the working classes there was not such a tendency to cling to the traditional—if the work really necessary to the comfort of the family were more clearly defined. Some of us may remember when the learning to snuff the candle was an absolute necessity with young people, since an unsteady hand, or a hairbreadth miscalculation, involved mortification for the one and discomfort for the many; yet the art of snuffing the candle forms no essential item in a polite education at the present day. In the autobiography of a copper tea-kettle just to hand, it is stated that the said tea-kettle was presented to Mary Jones on her wedding-day; that, considering it too good for ordinary use, Mary asked John to drive a nail in the beam overhead, and there in pride and gladness the kettle was suspended. Once a week it was taken down, scoured for half an hour, and replaced. At the end of forty years John was ready to retire from work and enjoy his home, but shut in with Mary he found her such very poor company that he soon wearied of it. She had brightened her kettle, but had forgotten to brighten herself, and John was heard to make some very ill-natured calculations as to what might have been done in that direction with the 2,080 half hours which had been spent on the tea-kettle.

The adoption, as far as means will permit, of the various mechanical contrivances for saving hand labour in the home may also be made to tell favourably for girls. While on the one hand it is of the first importance that they obtain a thoroughly practical knowledge of household requirements, it is not necessary that they should apply that knowledge by the most roundabout and inconvenient methods. It is necessary they should know how to cut out and make up garments; but having learned this, it is folly to expect them to sew by hand what the machine would do equally well in a fraction of the time. As well may we repudiate steam, and persist in travelling by the stage waggon.

Another means of lightening the home labours of girls, and so leaving time for self-culture, would be to make a little more use of the boys. There are many little things they might do in a house without in the least unfitting them for what is termed their proper work, or yet jeopardising their future manliness. Take Sunday morning, for instance. It is not difficult to guess at the kind of work that girls have to stay at home for; and I venture to say that there is little of that work that a boy would not be benefited rather than otherwise for having it to do. A little tidying would help to cure him of his proverbial untidiness, a little nursing would make him more gentle, and if he learned to peel a potato, and even cook it, he will have acquired a little of the kind of knowledge very useful to both emigrants and travellers.

Having pointed out a few of the methods by which a larger share of time might be secured for self-culture for the girls of our working classes, I have only, in conclusion, to suggest how, when these girls come under our hand in the Sunday school, we may assist in turning that additional time to good account.

As a thoroughly practical measure, and one which I think has not yet had a fair trial in our Sunday school, I should advocate our making an entire change in the arrangement of our classes—that we know nothing more of boys' and girls' side of the school, or boys' and girls' classes, but let boys and girls learn together, having no other division than measure of attainment. At present the attitude between boys and girls in our schools is rather antagonistic than otherwise; this, I believe, would give place to a more brother-and-sister feeling. The boys would become less rude, while the girls would be roused from their listlessness, and stimulated to mental activity by having to compete with brighter intellects than their own. There would be some difficulties in the way at first, and some amount of prejudice to overcome, and a greater degree of watchfulness on the part of teachers would for a time be necessary, but the change once made, boys and girls would fall into it as naturally as brothers and sisters meet at home. Our infants are already mixed, and the change could perhaps be introduced most easily by first mixing the class next above the infants, and so by degrees getting the school accustomed to the change; or, better still, it might start with the adult classes, and give the benefit of example. There need be no rule about placing the teachers. Let a class have a male or female teacher according to circumstances.

Then we must take every opportunity to urge our girls to make use of the facilities open to them for self-improvement during the week. As compared with those offered to boys, these are few and far between, and much might be said on the necessity of this crying injustice being remedied, but time will not permit. But to proceed: The school board will help them up to a certain point, and then there are evening classes in connection with all our Sunday and day schools, and mechanics' institutions. There are science and art classes, schools of art, and classes for cookery. An excellent series of evening classes has been arranged for by the Manchester School Board, which commences in a few days. We may further assure them that employers of labour are becoming more and more willing to admit women to the employments hitherto reserved exclusively for men; that they will be influenced rather by the quality of the work done than the fact of whether it was the hand of a man or woman which fashioned it—whichever can execute the best work will have the preference. And finally, we may place the alternative before them that, since there are these facilities for obtaining either a general or a special education, they must take advantage of them, or be left behind in the race; since, as Mrs. Fawcett puts it, "The standard of woman's work is raised all round, they must endeavour to reach that higher standard;" since the altering condition of society may make the question of ignorance or culture now a matter of daily bread to them in the future, it is imperative on them for this reason, if there were no higher, that they should seek this culture; that since the Creator has bestowed upon them a nature capable of the utmost expansion, it is their duty to welcome any and every aid that will tend to develop that nature; that since it is no longer needful to be silly and helpless in order to be thought womanly, they should cast away all frivolity and listlessness, gladly use their new-born freedom, look their future in the face, and resolve, whatever may be their sphere or station, they will make their lives both useful and beautiful—filled in with high principle, holy love, and earnest work, knowing that such only can constitute true and complete womanhood.

APPLEBLOOM AND APPLE.

WHEN little Osy, two years old,
Once saw the Spring sun dapple
The applebloom with blurs of gold,
She asked me for an apple.

"There are no apples, darling, yet;
The bloom's still white and rosy;
Wait till the harvest, then you'll get—"
"I cannot wait," said Osy.

I told her of the changing year
The nipping frost, the raw gust,
The clement rain, the sunny cheer,
From April on to August.

"So wait till Autumn paints them red,
And makes them sweet for eating!"
"No, shake them down, pa!" Osy said,
With great blue eyes entreating.

I can't resist a mouth that pouts
And trembles, ripe for crying;
I cannot bear the first sad doubts
In large eyes so relying.

I shook the trunk; the branches snowed
Till all the grass was whitened;
The blue jay darted down the road,
And screamed that he was frightened.

Of course I shook, and shook in vain,
And Osy, standing under,
Laughed and shrugged off the blossomy rain,
Till glee was changed to wonder;

And wonder turned to pain and doubt;
Her eyes grew full and pleading;
Her quivering lips began to pout;
Her fists were closed for kneading:

And then there rose a long sharp cry,
As if her heart were breaking:—
"You see, my darling child," said I,
"Apples don't grow with shaking."

One day when all the apple tree
With fruit was bowed and ruddy,
Osy, with dolly on her knee,
Sat in a child's brown study.

The west wind came with pleasant sound,
And as the leaves were turning,
An apple tumbled to the ground,
And lay there plump and burning.

And Osy's face grew bright and glad,
From her dim daydream waking—
A touch had given what could be had
Not for a world of shaking.

Don't shake your fruit trees, I entreat,
But wait, and in your lap 'll
Drop in due season, sunn'd and sweet,
The ripe and perfect apple.

—Glasgow Weekly Herald.

C.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

MR. KNAPTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

WE have given in full the address prepared by Mr. W. J. KNAPTON as a farewell to the Bradford Chapel Lane Congregation. He had intimated, in a letter which we printed last week, his desire to deliver these parting words in the Chapel where he has ministered for four years. The congregation, however, in accepting Mr. KNAPTON'S resignation, declined his proposal, on the ground that, while they themselves were quite willing to hear any words of farewell or recantation in such legitimate privacy as would be afforded by a meeting with them in the Schoolroom, they did not wish, as we understand, to have their ordinary Sunday evening service made an occasion for a gathering of outsiders who might be attracted by curiosity, or by a triumphant antagonism to Unitarian opinions. In these circumstances the address was delivered on Sunday last neither in the chapel nor in the school, but in the Mechanics' Institution. The congregational vote on this matter was that of a majority against an amendment, that Mr. KNAPTON should preach as he proposed; the consequence of the action taken by the majority has been the resignation of the chapel wardens. While there is some apparent good reason in the decision of the majority, we cannot but regret that they had not taken ground more easily understood by the general public, to whom the specialities of such a case are not easily conveyed. It is always best to act so that no explanation is required; and to have heard Mr. KNAPTON'S address as he had suggested would have shown a generosity worthy of our liberal position.

The address itself calls for ampler treatment than we are able to give it at the last moment before going to press. Mr. KNAPTON has become deeply impressed with the "impotence of Unitarian principles, or lack of them;" and he has acquired for himself a gradually "intensified consciousness of the saving power of historical Christianity." These are the two points in which he indicates the causes of the change which has come over him. Under these two heads Mr. KNAPTON says some very incisive and very true things, which we should not only be ready to hear but to welcome, by whomsoever said, as deserving our best consideration. We grieve that the churches of our connexion should often show so little life; that the teaching of their pulpits should be so doubtful or purely negative. But when Mr. KNAPTON points as a remedy to what has for the present satisfied his own mind, we can only remember with utter pain how little the same kind of experiences and the same doctrinal fundamentals were able to satisfy ourselves. If Unitarianism seems impotent—an advanced form of faith demanding the most personal efforts for realising all it may contain, a faith tried as yet only within a very small circle—how impotent is the Christianity in which Mr. KNAPTON is going to put his trust? With Orthodox Christianity for the religion of the civilised world, surely if it were as potent to save as Mr. KNAPTON'S argument implies, things should have been very different from what they are to-day. Religion, in fact, from this point of view, presents impotencies all round. Men do not rise easily to the heights to which they are called by the best inspirations of their nature. It is often very helpful to look out of ourselves. When too much has been made of individual effort, there will come a great comfort in having another to rest upon. We were made for sympathy. There is even a vicariousness, we believe, among the deep influences of human life. A place will have to be given in a full and effective religion to much truth that has underlain the popular theology. But while this is our earnest conviction, we must say that it brings us no help at all to fall back upon views of the Bible and of the doctrines of orthodoxy which open and fair inquiry has been compelled to repudiate. Mr. KNAPTON'S new standing point leads him to accept the orthodox interpretation of texts, which, merely on the ground of scholarship, is being gradually abandoned. But to follow him would be scarcely just, as he does little more than hint at his altered opinions on points of doctrine. The basis of his change, as here exhibited, has been that of personal experience. Is it safe to put so much trust merely in what may give us peace? The vagueness of results, under such a guidance, is almost as great as the indeterminateness of Unitarian theology. Dr. NEWMAN'S sense of the presence of sin in the world led him to see the necessity for an infallible church. Mr. KNAPTON'S belief in original sin leads him to a different conclusion. The wide diversities of opinion on the subject of the Atonement among still nominally orthodox seekers after truth warn us not to expect new infallibilities. For himself, if Mr. KNAPTON finds satisfaction, it is well. Those who cannot find it along with him, may at least be waked up by his words, and so may some good fruit grow out of his experiences as a Unitarian and a minister.

INDEPENDENT BONDAGE.

AMONG the most marked characteristics of Mr. BALDWIN BROWN'S address at the Congregational Union at Liverpool, was his emphasis of "the free movement of thought and expression of conviction which our noble liberty allows." Again and again, in varied phraseology, Mr. BROWN assured his auditors that this was a crowning glory of Congregationalism, differentiating it from and elevating it above all other Christian Communities in the land. The warmth and the persistence with which he expressed his convictions on this point create some doubts whether the sober reality corresponds to the glowing picture of freedom. And the doubts are intensified by some utterances at the Union which point in a direction exactly opposite to that in which Mr. BROWN would have Congregational churches go. Mr. BROWN, in an eloquent passage, deprecated the tendency to ecclesiastical centralisation, and pleaded that the breath of their life was the play of the living Spirit through the free thought and action of the individual Independent Churches. If they maintained that in full vigour as the core, they might develop and organise as they would. But, he urged, they must maintain at all hazards the entire independence of the churches of all but brotherly guidance and influence. "Harden into an Independent body, you may look larger and stronger, and may make a more monotonous order in your house of life. But you may write 'Ichabod' on your temples; your strength has departed, your glory is gone."

That the tendency against which Mr. BROWN enters so wise and earnest a warning exists among his brethren is manifest in a paper read by the Rev. HENRY T. ROBJOHN'S, B.A., on "The Certifying of Ministers." With much in this paper as to the growing necessity for carefulness in the selection of ministers we cordially agree; but the general tenor of it is destructive of the freedom which Mr. BROWN passionately eulogises as the precious possession of Independents, and directly promotive of the building up of "the Independent Church of England," into which he prays God they may never be tempted to make themselves. Mr. ROBJOHN'S does not nominally deny their Independency, but practically he denies it when he says, "our system has been for long years a federated Independency." This is the fact, and it will be wisdom to face it, urges the writer.

Each church is described by Mr. ROBJOHN'S as a spiritual commune, but the union which is necessary for certain work has brought into existence the cantons of County Unions, and the development has been carried a step further in the formation of the National Union of Independent Churches. What relation have these Associations to the certifying—that is, as Mr. ROBJOHN'S explains, to the recognition and welcoming—of ministers? The reply of the writer is that, "if our churches are in any sense federated, then a particular church is not the only party that needs, and may demand to have, certain information respecting a minister. But all the churches in the Union, whether it be that of the county or the nation." Undoubtedly, Unions of churches, as well as individual churches, have the moral right to have satisfaction on certain points. But on what points? To use Mr. ROBJOHN'S words, on Christianness, Character, Capability. But

Mr. ROBJOHN'S idea of the right of inquiry, on the part as well of the associations as of the churches, does not stop at spiritual and intellectual qualifications. It extends to credal qualifications also; and here it is that Mr. BROWN'S picture of the "free movement of thought and expression of conviction which our noble liberty allows," loses much of its lustre as Mr. ROBJOHN'S throws over it the sombre colours of the actual facts. Mr. ROBJOHN'S puts the matter in as attractive a setting as possible. With a strange disregard of rebutting facts, of history, he speaks of it having been "our glory to insist on the absolutely unfettered freedom of thought respecting the objective of theologian science. We take no book, no teacher; we curb no faculty. We say to every inquirer: 'Investigate in the exercise of boundless liberty.'" Mr. ROBJOHN'S might be charged with having a memory so short that the Declaration of May last has completely escaped him; but to such a charge he would instantly plead not guilty, because he goes on to explain that this boasted freedom of thought is not recognised in their churches, their unions of churches, and their ministry, until "it has led to Christ, and that Christianity which centres in Him"—in other words, until it has led to that orthodox conception of Christ and of Christianity which Congregationalism assumes to be Christianity, and which was formulated once again, with sundry omissions, in May last. So that while "the individual starts from liberty, the Church stands on the Catholic creed." Mr. ROBJOHN'S does not explain what he means by "the Catholic creed," but we shall probably be right in inferring that he means (with, perhaps, the materialistic doctrine of Annihilation substituted for that of Eternal Punishment) the orthodox system of faith. The liberty of the Congregational ministry is, therefore, guarded by orthodoxy: it is simply liberty to move inside the circle of certain traditional beliefs. We have been condemned by a reviewer in the British Quarterly for affirming that the May Declaration renders spiritual and intellectual fitness an insufficient entrance to the Congregational pulpit, and makes a creed as indispensable as holiness of life and power of heart and brain. What says Mr. ROBJOHN'S? Not only that there must, henceforth, be a creed, in addition to "Christianness, Character, and Capability," but that there is one now. "It is not true that we have no creed by which to judge. To a very large extent our individual churches are founded even upon written creeds. I am not referring to creeds embodied in the trust-deeds of buildings, but to those 'forms of sound words,' which are to be found in our Church books, and which constitute the intellectual foundation of the Christian Society." So it is, by implication, with the County Unions. Hence arises the great responsibility of these Unions in relation to ministers. Mr. ROBJOHN'S would have them keep a sharp look-out for men who use the liberty we hear so much of in the excitement of public meetings. "If a brother has notoriously abandoned 'those things which are most surely believed among us,' he has ceased to have fellowship with us. How, then, can we commend him to another Evangelical Church federation?" Mr. R. W. DALE and Mr. EDWARD WHITE have notoriously abandoned things assuredly believed among and by the founders of Independency. Would Mr. ROBJOHN'S affirm that they have ceased to have fellowship among Congregational Unions? Would he hesitate to commend them to another Evangelical Church federation? If not, why not? Is a County Union to include one class of heretics but exclude another—to regard Mr. DALE'S philosophical Materialism as harmless, but Mr. PICTON'S spiritual Theism as poisonous—to

"Compound for sins it is inclined to
By damning those it has no mind to?"

We don't, however, want to argue the question with Mr. ROBJOHN'S, but simply to point out that he bears witness against the claim of Congregationalism to be a system of "free movement of thought."

Mr. ROBJOHN'S goes further than the existing limitation of ministerial freedom, and urges a policy which amounts to what Mr. BALDWIN BROWN calls "hardening into an Independent body." He would have young men who go to the ministry direct from college, "certified by committees," and not by college professors. Even where church and college certificates are all right, neighbouring churches should be careful before giving their recognition, and ministers before according their welcome. Ministers should be sure of their man before attending an ordination; and Mr. ROBJOHN'S advises that they should adopt what we are surprised to hear was Mr. BINNEY'S practice, and "see the confession of faith beforehand!" County Unions should use their influence in this direction, for "it rests almost entirely with them to conserve our reputation as united Christian societies, served by a ministry that is at once believing, high in character, capable, and evangelical." This is the policy upon which county unions often act, as Mr. ROBJOHN'S himself tells us, and, in so acting, they prove that Congregationalism is not a system that allows of unfettered thought, as Mr. BALDWIN BROWN represents it in glowing rhetoric. This is the policy which Mr. ROBJOHN'S would have universally and invariably adopted by County Unions and by the National Congregational Union, as the uniform principle and method; and which, when adopted, would result in the institution of "the Independent Church of England," from the very temptation to which Mr. BALDWIN BROWN entreats heaven to grant them all deliverance.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY AT WHITCHURCH, SALOP.

RECENTLY this society held its annual meeting at Whitchurch, but the local committee deemed it inexpedient to invite the Rev. W. Carey Walters, because they described him as the minister of a "Free Christian Church largely supported by Unitarians." When the meeting was held one of the ministers who spoke alluded to Mr. Walters's views of the Bible as "flippant, conceited, and shallow." This word "flippant" seems to have roused Mr. Walters to the determination to preach a sermon on "The Bible—The Bible Society and the Christian Union," and he delivered it on Sunday last. Therein with considerable force he denies that the Free Christians are "flippant," and claims that according to their light they are trying to serve God and Christ. We quote the following:—

"The world is still filled with evil spirits. Vice of every kind, selfishness, ignorance; these are the demons which afflict humanity, and all Christians are united in the effort to cast them out. Great has been the work done by what I may call the Organised Churches; Wesley and Whitfield and their followers; the National Church with its thousands of Ministers, the Orthodox Nonconformist Churches, all have worked faithfully and successfully, and from many a heart and many a neighbourhood the evil spirits have fled for ever. We bless God for it, for the great work they have done and are still doing, and we pray earnestly that that work may issue in still greater results. But there is a little band of churches called by various names, but all united in one principle, that of perfect religious freedom; a little band of men and women throughout our land differing much in creed and ritual, but united in the belief in worship of Almighty God in perfect faith in the constant inspiration of His Spirit, who, while wishing to do the works of Christ, have not been able to labour with the 'authorised' band. It has not been without pain that they have severed themselves, that they have cut themselves off from the national life at its highest point, or have come out of churches dear because of tender associations. . . . Every society for the diminishing of vice numbers among its most earnest supporters, these so-called 'heretics.' Education has no more energetic advocates, political and social progress no more ardent friends, superstition and infidelity no more determined foes. We can point to Sir Isaac Newton and John Locke among philosophers; Priestley and Lyell among men of science; Florence Nightingale and Mary Carpenter and George Peabody among philanthropists; John Milton and Longfellow among poets; Charles Dickens and Mrs. Gaskell among novelists, as of this 'household of faith.' A host of others in the ranks of literature, art, and science, and in the humble, but not less noble, walks of Christian philanthropy, have occupied an honourable place among their number. . . . Perhaps they, more largely even than any other group of Christians, have been instrumental in winning men from unbelief and utter darkness to faith and light. . . . And yet from almost all quarters comes the cry, 'Forbid them.' Few, indeed, are the followers of Jesus; few, but happily increasing every day, who moved by his own spirit dare to say, 'Forbid them not; he who is not against us is for us.'

In a subsequent part of his sermon Mr. Walters points out that a Unitarian, Wm. Smith, along with Thomas Clarkson, of the Anti-slavery Cause, and others, originally founded the Bible Society—that Quakers and Unitarians were especially active, that in consequence an abortive attempt was made to start a Trinitarian Bible Society. The original society, however, still lives, and he calls attention to the present year's report and the constitution of the society and says—"You will notice—1. That the Holy Scriptures are to be circulated without note or comment (this to prevent disunion). 2. That each subscriber (whatever his views) of £1. 1s. per annum is a member of the society; and 3. That every clergyman and Dissenting Minister, who is a member of the society, may attend and vote at all meetings of the committee. What I charge the Bible Society with attempting to do is this,—they cannot or dare not openly change the constitution of the society, and, therefore, by advice from head-quarters, they are closing their local committees and platforms against the descendants of the very men who, in its early and unpopular days, were its most earnest and faithful friends."

UNITARIANISM AND EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANITY.

REV. W. J. KNAPTON.

[FAREWELL ADDRESS to the congregation of Chapel Lane Chapel, given in the Mechanics' Institution, Bradford, on Sunday evening, October 27th, 1878.]

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Corinthians, iii., 11.

It would have been more in accordance with my feelings, my friends, if, to-night, instead of speaking to you in this hall, I had addressed you from that pulpit that I have now occupied for nearly four years. The action of the congregation, however—you will all probably have read the letter addressed to me by the Chapel Wardens—made this impossible. I do not mean that I had not a legal right, for I had a legal right to occupy the pulpit for at least six months longer, and preach from it Evangelical doctrines if I chose to do so; I do not mean that I had not a moral right, for the fundamental principle of the church is not that of doctrine but of freedom; but I mean that after the receipt of such a letter I could not with a just sense of what was due to myself—I could not in the interests of truth, force myself on an unwilling people. All Unitarians present are perfectly well aware that, on public platforms and at ordination services, most Unitarian ministers and lay representatives of Unitarian churches, ever claim for the ministry of the Unitarian church exceptional, nay absolute freedom in the pulpit, but I have long looked upon this claim as of the nature of an empty boast. I have recognised the fact that there must be a tacit understanding, which shall have the same force as a written agreement between minister and people upon fundamental doctrines, and the recognition of this fact led me to resign at once, when a vital change had taken place in my convictions. The claim of exceptional freedom as set forth by Unitarian churches may be thus stated: "We do not retain our minister as the advocate of a creed or of any set of doctrines whatsoever, but we select a man who has devoted some time to the study of religious questions, in whose judgment we have confidence; we place at his disposal time for further study, and then we are glad week by week to hear the results of his thought, the opinions of a mind unfettered by doctrine or dogma, acting in perfect freedom, whatsoever those opinions may be." Now, in the first place, those who permit themselves to talk in this way are guided by doctrinal considerations in the selection of a minister for their pulpit; and, in the second place, they would feel pained and injured if a minister, who had changed his opinions about fundamental points, were to take them at their word, and to say, "You know your pulpit is perfectly free, and therefore I propose to continue in my office." My friends, you are well aware, in spite of all fine speeches to the contrary, that a doctrinal basis is essential, an agreement between minister and people on that doctrinal basis is essential, if a church is to work harmoniously and effectively. Do you say no? Why, you were not prepared to hear me this one night! When you select your next minister, will no question of doctrine enter your mind? To guard against misapprehension, may I say one other word upon that question of creed or no creed before passing on. I have said that a doctrinal basis is essential. I do not mean by that that it is necessary that a series of articles embodying a number of doctrines should be subscribed to. I myself should be satisfied to make the absolute authority of the Bible that basis, believing that those who faithfully study it will be led into all truth. The most dogmatic haters of dogma have all their dogmas. The Unitarian creed is a negative one. It does not consist in any glorious affirmations, but only in negations. In the line of negation the Unitarian Church allows great latitude, and that latitude is sometimes called freedom; it rejoices in great vagueness, and that vagueness is often called progress; it dislikes decision, and therefore it calls decision sometimes dogmatism and at other times bigotry. There is no single doctrinal truth on which Unitarians are agreed. On the authority of the Bible, say you? How many members of Chapel Lane Chapel are there who look upon the Bible as supreme authority in matters of religion? On the headship of Christ, urge you? How many Unitarians look upon Christ but as a great religious teacher, or spiritual leader, and are ready to say with Theodore Parker, "God has yet greater men in store, I doubt not." I am aware that this statement is as repulsive to some members of the Unitarian Church as it is to me. On the doctrine of the existence of God, urge you? A minister said to me the other day, in reply to a remark of mine that another minister had lost his belief in a personal God, that it was a difficult thing to do, referring to the difficulty of the mind freeing itself from the doctrines of childhood; but he added, I do not know but it is a glorious thing when it is accomplished. In the doctrine of immortality, do you urge? I ask you, are there not some present who have heard, from my late pulpit, immortality spoken of but as a hope, nay, who have heard personal immortality denied, and that name, dear to the heart of suffering humanity, given to the continued influence of a man's deeds, in this world after he is dead? I say, then, that we have failed to discover a single fundamental doctrine on which there is general agreement amongst Unitarians. They are unanimous in the denial of the Trinity, they are not unanimous—far from it—in a belief in the existence of God; they are unanimous in the denial of the atonement, they are not unanimous in the belief in the headship of Christ; they are unanimous in repudiating eternal punishment, they are not unanimous in the conviction of immortality. The Unitarian creed is a negation. Unitarian liberty is latitude in the direction of negation; and it is latitude in this direction, because the majority of the people are positive only in the region of negation. A Unitarian minister's freedom in matters of doctrine is, more or less, regulated, controlled, and governed by the doctrines that have recommended themselves to the majority of his people. I do not say this in the spirit of animadversion; I simply state a fact. If I am wrong in this, if Unitarians mean what they say when they talk about absolute freedom of the pulpit, if the minister be really free to follow truth whithersoever she may lead him, I ask, in all conscience, why I have been denied even one night in which I might have endeavoured to bring home to the hearts and consciences of the people those robust, life-giving principles of Evangelical Christianity which have won the assent of my understanding and the consent of my heart? If in two words I were to indicate to you the things that have influenced me in the change that has come over me, I should say they were, first, a growing sense of the importance of Unitarian principles or lack of them; and secondly, a gradual intensified consciousness of the saving power of historical Christianity. I came to this town (many present may recollect) an ardent enthusiastic advocate of Unitarianism. I had, I hope, been baptised into the spirit of Channing and Martineau, and was inspired by the example of Theodore Parker, whose burning eloquence was so effective in the great anti-slavery movement in America. I had had the advantage of being associated with the late Mr. George Dawson, of Birmingham, as assistant minister for four years. I felt that I had a gospel to preach. Men were to be saved from superstition and built up into the Christianity of Christ. I preached, I lectured, I went here and there with this modern gospel. People came, they listened, they went away again—many of them came no more: I could not understand it then, I think I understand it now. But, some may say, "Are you going to give up the simple and glorious truths of Unitarianism, are you going to give up the freedom you enjoy, for a set of obsolete dogmas that impede progress and that are calculated to put back the day when the Kingdom of God shall be established in the hearts of men?" I reply, that I do not propose to give up any truth; I do not intend to sacrifice my freedom—God forbid; and, I further say, that the absence of doctrine—that is to say, the absence of positive conviction—of a real object of faith, and a living faith to fasten on that object—is the chief obstacle to the promotion and extension of that kingdom. My friends, I speak to-night with a deep and solemn sense of responsibility. I would not willingly hurt the feeling of any one. I am sure, however, you will feel that I shall best do my duty by speaking out plainly; therefore, I will say that a knowledge of the wide-spread lack of a real faith of any sort—unless dogmatic negativism or a pronounced agnosticism may be dignified by that name—was one of the first things that caused me to suspect the soundness of Unitarian principles. I hope I shall not be misunderstood by those present who are not so intimately acquainted with the Unitarian position as I am.

I must not for one moment be understood as saying that all Unitarians are Agnostics. I know that a large number are; a still larger number Theists. As I have pointed out, and I beg you to bear this fact in mind, there is no standard of belief which as a body they recognise. They are agreed only in the assumption of a negative attitude towards what the Christian world regards as the central doctrines of Christianity. The Church may be fairly said, however, to be divided into two schools, the old and the new, the conservative and the advanced. I, in the exercise of,—I will not say the Unitarian, but the Protestant principle of the right of private judgment, have brought my reason to bear upon both, and having weighed them in the balance have found them wanting. Perhaps I cannot do better than say a word upon each in turn. The advanced school. Those who belong to this school may, with something like accuracy, be considered under two heads: Agnostics, Theists. Agnostics, or those who profess to know nothing—an Agnostic literally means a know-nothing—who, repudiating the authority of the Bible, urges that it is absolutely impossible for man by any process of reason to know whether there be a God; whether immortality be anything more than a hope. They do not say that there is no God, that immortality is an impossibility, they simply affirm that they do not know whether there be a God, and they are not sure that immortality is anything more than a beautiful dream. Perhaps you will ask, how it is that people entertaining such opinions are to be found connected with chapels, holding office amongst any body of people who profess to meet together for the worship of Almighty God? I have often asked myself the same question, and the only answer that suggests itself to my mind is that it is an exceedingly difficult thing to destroy the religious instinct. I cannot but think that at times a suspicion crosses the minds of such people that they are not right after all. There is a felt want. They can say with the Psalmist, "My soul thirsts" though they may hesitate to add "for God, for the living God." They are like the tired child that cries for it knows not what. I have heard it said that the Unitarian Church is the half-way house to infidelity. I tell you, my friends, and it pains me to have to say so, that some Unitarian Churches are not the half-way house—"I speak that I do know, and testify that I have seen"—but the home of infidelity. I could name churches in which Agnosticism or Positivism is openly preached. I could name ministers who with a smile of conscious superiority look down upon those who believe in a Personal God as "behind the age." I will not do this, but I will quote an extract taken from the last week's Inquirer; the Inquirer is the chief religious journal of the Unitarians. "We read with some natural feelings of regret, that Southplace Chapel, London, which was erected by the Unitarians of a former generation as a Unitarian Chapel and dedicated to religious worship, is now turned on Sunday evenings into a Secular Institute, 'under the auspices of the British Secular Union' in order 'to bring secularism before the public in a proper and effectual manner.'" I may tell you that the Unitarian minister preaches in the morning, and as we have seen, the secularists have their turn in the evening; thus, like top and under sawyer, these two endeavour to cut down the tree of life. Now I have long seen that the principles that the Inquirer advocates—it seems, I may say in passing, to glory in its own inconsistency, an inconsistency sometimes christened liberality, and to advocate in one place what it repudiates in another—legitimately lead to negation of all distinctly religious truths. Shall we affect surprise if those we have taught that prayer (to use Coleridge's phrase), is but a sort of "self magnetism," come to doubt the reality of prayer? Shall we be astonished if those we have taught that God is but a voice, an unknown and unknowable something, a force pervading nature, begin to doubt the existence of the Almighty? Shall we be utterly amazed when we have glorified negation and doubted the possibility of arriving at anything like definite truth, that those who have caught our spirit shall become, if possible, a little more negative than ourselves? Is it wise to hang between premise and conclusion, like a shivering lad that wants to bathe, yet fears to take the plunge? I have long felt that many of this school of Unitarianism are not true to their fundamental principles—they draw back where logical consistency calls upon them to advance, they fear to go on and they hesitate to retire; they are undecided; their faith becomes enervated; it is no longer a master passion, it has degenerated into a spirit of criticism. Do you wonder then, that knowing all this, I have been led to examine the cause, of which it is the effect? I now come to consider the principles of those who are Theists by conviction and more or less Christian in spirit. They, like the Agnostics, reject the doctrine of the infallibility, and consequently the absolute authority of scripture. They are a law unto themselves. The Rev. Dr. James Martineau is the recognised head of this section of the church. It would be an impertinence in me to say one word in praise of him, for he is known to all theologians as a man of splendid powers, and it would be generally admitted that in him there is a rare combination of fine scholarship, keen critical acumen, and the deepest reverence for sacred things. I gladly acknowledge my indebtedness to him. His "endeavours after the Christian life" have appealed to me as few books could. A beautiful spirit breathes through it. The fatherly character of God; the unrivalled teaching, the marvellous self-sacrifice, the glorious example of Christ; the truth of immortality; the obligations of duty—that man must do the right at whatever cost—are set forth with remarkable clearness, illustrated with imagery, and enforced with magnificent argumentative power. But although all this is true there has been for some time past a growing, a deepening conviction in my mind that this gospel is but a half truth. It has not appealed to my whole nature. There has been a consciousness of something lacking. I have felt, in reading Dr. Martineau's last work, Hours of Thought on Sacred Things, as I felt when gazing upon a glorious landscape. A pleasing sense of the beauty upon which I have looked has stolen in upon my mind, the thought that a grand thing it is for a human soul to be at peace with itself and with its God, and thus to be in harmony with all the surrounding glory. But the golden glory of the setting sun; the exquisite colouring of the rainbow; the quiet joy of nature, do not possess sufficient motive power to bring a human being into harmony with the peace that they shadow forth, and in the same way the teaching to which I have just referred, lacks the power to still the tumultuous waves of human passion. Musing upon this, there occurred to me the thought that if God be all-powerful, He could Himself come down to save sinners, and that, if he be all good, He would do so. Thus I felt the necessity of the incarnation before I was convinced of its truth. I called for my Lord to save, and lo, unobserved by me, he had been standing with outstretched arm all the time. A word or two now about the old, or conservative school of Unitarianism. The members of this school, following in the footsteps of Priestley and Belsham, accept the Bible as a revelation from God, look upon it as authoritative, but profess to find not the doctrine of the Trinity, not the fact of the Atonement, but Unitarianism in it. Their cardinal doctrines are the Fatherhood of God; the brotherhood of man; the headship of Christ; the certainty of immortality; and when they speak about a man being a Christian they mean that he recognises Christ as his teacher, and seeks to act under all circumstances in his spirit. They would all, I think, accept this statement of Dr. Channing's: "That there is but One God, even the Father; and that Jesus Christ is not this One God, but His son and messenger, who derived all his powers and glories from the Universal Parent, and who came into the world not to claim supreme homage for himself, but to carry up the soul to his Father as the only Divine Person, the only ultimate object of religious worship." Now when once I had accepted the authority of the Scriptures, when once I looked upon them in very truth as a revelation of God's will, my sympathy before having been with the school of which Dr. Martineau is the ablest representative, my difficulties with regard to the soundness of the Unitarian position were increased a hundred fold. I could not long accept that exegesis that finds Unitarianism in the Bible. I believe that all competent scholarship, even in the Unitarian body, has given up the notion that Unitarianism can be sustained from the Scriptures. Theodore Parker did not hesitate to say that that was his opinion. Are you then surprised, nay do not some present rejoice with me to-night when I say that, like doubting Thomas, I was at length compelled, by an evidence that I could no longer resist, by an appeal that I could no longer withstand, to cry "My Lord and my God." I have said, in speaking of the theism of Dr. Martineau, that it is but a half-truth—it sets forth the human side of Christ's character and not the divine—and I would emphasise that statement by adding that Unitarianism at its best, in my judgment, is but a half-truth, and this is the reason why the overwhelming majority of those who hold it are but half-hearted in its advocacy. There is neither the undivided front which comes from a united purpose, nor the missionary zeal that is the result of the desire that others should share the truth that has been arrived at. The hand of death is on all their institutions. Some of the new churches that the more zealous are trying to establish may be said to be "dead before they are born;" and most of the old churches are in a state of genteel decay. The treasurer's reports at meetings of mission societies read like "petty cash accounts;" but though this be the case, Unitarians have the reputation of being, in proportion to their numbers, with perhaps the one exception of the Society of Friends, the wealthiest body of people in England. I will quote an extract from a letter, a sad, a pathetic letter, one amongst many, that I received a day or two ago from a Unitarian minister. It may serve to further illustrate what I have said. He still holds to the truth of the Unitarian doctrines as maintained by the old school: "But now with respect to the denomination. Here I am utterly disappointed, nay, I am more than disappointed, for I am perplexed and confounded beyond anything I am able to express in words. I feel the want of a creed, not indeed for my own guidance, but as a bond of association, and as a check to the flippant and rash statements of many of our younger ministers. I feel the want of more devoutness, both in our public services and ecclesiastical meetings, and in our private intercourse with each other. I feel the want of a larger measure of Christian zeal among our ministers and people—zeal in defending the truth, and in propagating it among our neighbours and the people generally. And I feel the need of many other things of a spiritual nature which I will not here express, but which Unitarianism, as embodied in the existing denomination, fails to supply. What, then, am I to do? I cannot go away from the truth. I cannot fraternise, except occasionally, and for the sake of charity, with those who preach and teach serious errors. I cannot pretend to be what I am not, and seem to believe what I do not believe. I suppose, therefore, I must stand still and wait until some better state of things shall arise." I will only say that a knowledge of the state of things described in that letter led me to ask if these are the fruits, what about the tree that produces such fruits? God grant the writer a speedy deliverance out of present darkness into the light and life of the Christian faith! Perhaps no better illustration could be given of the barrenness and impotency of Unitarian principles than that which is furnished by the history of the congregation of which I now cease to be minister—the last of a line of ministers that have preached in this town for something like 200 years. The congregation worshipping in Chapel Lane Chapel is the oldest Nonconformist congregation in Bradford, and one of the oldest in Yorkshire. The first chapel was built in 1688; the second in 1718; and the present building was opened for public worship about ten years ago. It is still the only Unitarian church in Bradford. I have asked myself the question, I have asked myself the question over and over again, what is the reason that it is to-day the only Unitarian church, that with the growth of this great town it has not grown, that while other churches have multiplied it has shown no sign of need for further accommodation? Just think of this: the congregation was organised and the first church built fully thirty-five years before John Wesley was born, and the second church even was erected whilst he was yet a school boy; and then think of the fruitfulness of the one great movement in the souls won to Christ, won to God, in sinners saved; and of the barrenness of the other. I have asked myself further, what would have been the moral and spiritual condition of this town if it had been left to the moral and spiritual power of this very free church? I need hardly tell you what answers I have given to these questions, I need hardly tell you what weight considerations suggested by these questions have had upon my mind. These facts, with others that I have referred to, and more that I shall mention, and still more that I could mention if time permitted, have, thank God, brought me to the feet of my Saviour. Side by side with the deepening sense of the impotency of Unitarian principles, there has, as I have said, been growing up in my mind a consciousness of the saving power of historical Christianity. I am at a loss where to begin, or what to say, on a subject so vast as that which now opens to the view. I could occupy hours in bringing before you the evidences that have had weight with me—that have compelled me to the belief that the Bible is the very word of God, a revelation of His will, an absolute authority on all matters on which it speaks; it would take me hours to tell how an ever-deepening sense of the need of an atonement was succeeded by the conviction that such an atonement had been made, and how can I briefly indicate how the blessed truth of the Incarnation mastered my traditional objections, and won the consent of my heart? I will touch upon these three subjects in turn. A word now about the Bible. There never was a time when I could not take up the language of Milton, and say, "There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion, no orations equal to those of the prophets, and no politics like those which the Scriptures teach," but whilst saying this I thought at one time that the Bible was not, as a whole, the word of God. I had not then felt what has since been borne in upon my mind with irresistible power, that if we, to use the language of Goethe, "Tear out of the New Testament faith in the veracity of Christ as to the fact of the supernatural, there is not enough left to build faith on in regard to any other particular." I doubted the supernatural, and still rejoiced in the moral and spiritual teaching of the Bible. I had difficulties about the miracles, but bowed in deepest reverence before the majestic figure of Christ, the central figure of history. I never, however, committed the folly of placing the Bible side by side, as though they could be in any sense on a level, with the other great religious books of the world. Some of you may recollect that in Chapel Lane schoolroom, two or three years ago, at the annual meeting of the congregation, I, when a brother minister suggested that the other books should occasionally be read instead of the Bible in our pulpit services, protested against it. From that day to this I have felt more and more impressed by its spiritual power, its unique glory, its unrivalled majesty of utterance, until at length, through a number of considerations that are set forth with remarkable clearness and enforced with conspicuous and convincing power by Butler, Paley, Blunt, Rogers, and a whole host of Christian apologists, I was led to the conclusion, and it was a matter of rejoicing when I came to it, that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." I feel, my friends, some difficulty in approaching the awful truth of the Incarnation. But I must say one word or two upon it. I recollect as distinctly as though it were to-night the first time when the thought rushed in upon my mind that if men were to be saved the Incarnation was a necessity. The idea came into conflict with all my previous convictions; it was not to be resisted; it occurred to me again and again. I had been reading Dr. Newman's "Apologia," and I came to that passage—in his "general answer to Mr. Kingsley," in which, after dwelling upon the presence of sin in the world, he urged that that fact was sufficient to explain the necessity of an infallible Church. I got up from reading that book a firm believer in the doctrine of original sin, of the truth of which doctrine I am as sure as I am of my own existence. I did not feel compelled to say with Dr. Newman, here is sin, therefore the necessity of an infallible Church; but I did feel that here is sin, and therefore God in his goodness would be likely in some way to interpose to save men from its effects. I came to a fresh study of the Bible with more than interest excited, with a kind of tremulous wonder as to whether I had been wrong in my previous interpretation, and whether therefore I was on the threshold of a new revelation—new to me but thank God old to Christendom. The pages seemed to live with fresh glory. I found Christ appropriating every attribute of the God-head; I heard the apostle say that "He thought it not robbery to be equal with God;" my intellect sanctioned, my heart responded to the Lord's claim, "I and my Father are one;" I felt that those that had seen Christ had seen the Father, for He is "over all God blessed for ever." As I feel I must not detain you longer I will say but one word on the Atonement. I shall have other opportunities I hope of bringing that saving, transfiguring truth home to the hearts and consciences of many. As in the case of the Inspiration of the Scripture, as in the case of the Incarnation, so I felt the necessity of an atonement before I was convinced or experienced the fact of the atonement. The whole of the doctrines won the assent of my intellect before they won the consent of my whole nature. I felt the truth, the saving power of the atonement, a few days before I mentioned the fact to any but one or two dear friends. The first time I proclaimed the doctrine was when I took the hand and looked in the eyes of that poor man who now lies ill in the infirmary—you know the facts of his case, how in a terrible hour he took his wife's and attempted his own life—and I then felt that I could do no other. I felt at once that the gospel that I had long preached was no gospel for such a case as his. What could wash that red hand clean? What could give peace to the troubled soul? What power was sufficient to lift off the heavy burden? What would reconcile him to his God? Ah! dear friends, in the presence of a conscience thoroughly aroused, I asked myself these questions; and then I talked to the sin-stricken, heart-broken man of God's love, of the suffering of Christ for him, and assured him that if he took the road by the red hill of Calvary he would come to the perfect peace. God be praised there is healing for every bruised spirit, and salvation for all who earnestly seek it. But one word in conclusion. I gladly acknowledge many kindnesses from many friends in that church that I am leaving. I shall never forget the kindly help, the friendly counsel that I received from some good friends when first I determined to prepare for the work of the ministry. I know that I am separating from some who are as anxious for the truth of God to prevail as any one can be. God grant that they may be led into all truth! I hope I have said no word that may cause them pain. They have been as much troubled at some of the facts that I have mentioned as I have been myself. I will only say to them now that fidelity to any principle will not give peace, only fidelity to the Truth. I pray that in God's own good time they and you, each one and all of us, may be brought to a saving knowledge of Christ, and that thus we may all at last come to know what is meant by that "Peace of God which passeth all understanding," and "which the world can neither give nor take away."

EASTERN UNITARIAN MISSION.

THE annual meetings of this Association were held at Norwich last week. On Sunday, the 20th inst., the Rev. Andrew Chalmers preached the sermon in the Octagon Chapel, after which a collection was made for the Mission fund. On Monday subscribers and friends, to the number of seventy, dined together, and the business meeting followed. Mr. JAMES FREEMAN, the president of the Mission, occupied the chair. In a few well-chosen remarks he reviewed the work of the year, and welcomed the delegates. The report was then read by the secretary (Mr. A. P. Allen), and the financial statement by the treasurer (Mr. G. A. Stevens.) The Rev. A. Chalmers was thanked for his very able sermons, and in his reply spoke of the work at Cambridge.

The Rev. H. W. PERRIS, in moving the adoption of the report, regretted that the absorbing nature of his duties in the city of Norwich left him very little time or strength for propagandist effort. He hoped to have opportunities of becoming better acquainted with his co-religionists in other Eastern towns. After warmly greeting the Rev. T. L. Marshall, Mr. Perris referred to the peculiar difficulty of the Cambridge enterprise, and hoped that the youthful cause might flourish, despite the enervating influence of the climate. The Rev. A. PEATON, of Yarmouth, thought that it would be well if the London Association took charge of Chelmsford, and if the efforts of the mission were put forth at more northern centres. Mr. WOOLNOUGH spoke of the work going on in Norwich. The Rev. A. POPE reported progress at Chelmsford, and an earnest plea for continued aid was urged by Mr. MADDOX. The election of officers for the ensuing year followed. Samuel Courtauld, Esq. (who, though in feeble health, has manifested a lively and practical interest in the work at Chelmsford), was nominated president; Messrs. Allen and Stevens retain the responsible duties of Secretary and Treasurer.

A public meeting was held in the evening (subsequent to the tea) in the Girls' School-room, Calvert-street, and was well attended. The chair was taken by Mr. J. FREEMAN, and amongst those present were the Revs. T. L. Marshall, H. W. Perris, A. Chalmers, J. Trist, A. Pope, B. Gisbey, and Messrs. J. W. Dowson, G. A. Stevens, A. P. Allen, J. Mottram, A. Mottram, H. Snowden, C. F. Stevens, R. W. Ladell, — Green, D. C. Betts, A. Kent, W. H. Stevens, — Woodrow, C. Cannell, — Blazeby, H. J. Booty, — Priest, S. C. Sothern, P. D. Freeman, F. Woolnough, J. Lincoln, W. Lake, and many others, including friends from Yarmouth, Lynn, and Diss.

The CHAIRMAN having opened the proceedings, called upon

The Rev. T. L. MARSHALL (who attended as the deputation from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association) to address the meeting. He said that the various branch associations were regarded with maternal solicitude by the parent society, which gladly assisted those that were weak, in the hope that at no very distant day they would run alone and return something of the beneficent care they had received. He expressed his great gratification in now visiting Norwich for the first time, for from his earliest youth, when a boy at the famous Latin School at Boston, U.S., he had read of the celebrities of Norwich and Norfolk, and later in life had enjoyed the friendship and paternal regard of former ministers of the Octagon Chapel; and, he added, that he regarded Mr. Perris as the worthy successor of a long line of ministers who had adorned the Octagon pulpit. He then went on to say that the feature of this association, and of the Liberal movement generally, which peculiarly attracted his own sympathy, was not its dogmatic, nor controversial, but rather its positive, religious, and constructive character. He was one of those who cared very much more for building up and for edifying than for destroying. The best way of rooting out error was by preaching truth rather than by attacking it in a controversial way; by proclaiming their deepest religious convictions, and not merely by going out of their way to assail the religious convictions of others; by substituting in the place of error those positive truths by which men's minds and souls may live. The operations of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association were directed to the spread of Liberal Christianity and the building of churches in all the important towns in different parts of the country; not as a sort of defiance to the orthodox churches, but as spiritual homes for Unitarian families, and for the Freethinkers in the best sense of the word, to be found in many towns where no chapels exist, and where they have no spiritual houses in which religious and Christian life may be nourished and grow strong. Their distinctive mission in these days was religious, and not merely theological or controversial, though, of course, theology and controversy had their place, and their fathers, by such means, did good work in preparing the ground. Their work was not merely negative and destructive; it was eminently a Christian work. In these days it was important that in their small body they should lay stress upon the absolute necessity and Christian duty of being at unity amongst themselves. They all knew that there were various shades of opinion amongst them—as there must and would always be. Some would lay stress upon the dogmatic, sectarian, and denominational aspect of Unitarianism; others upon its more liberal and positive aspects. There was a tendency on the part of some to lay stress upon those few points upon which they differed rather than upon those many points upon which they were thoroughly at one. If some of their friends disliked the name "Unitarian," and preferred the name of "Liberal Christians," or "Free Christians," or any other broad name, why should others insist upon their retaining the narrower name? If some preferred the more spiritual and less doctrinal aspect of the faith, why should others charge them with unfaithfulness to the truth? Let them give each other credit for perfect sincerity in their preferences, and resolve above all things, whatever may be the small and petty differences which existed amongst themselves, to keep together, and avoid every temptation to split off into little fractions or sections. The main object of the Association was, while ignoring all their various little differences, to strengthen, as far as possible, the smaller churches, and bring the living influence of the larger churches to bear upon them, by fostering aid in the time of need, to become strong and self-supporting. The Association also sent out in different parts of the country missionaries of energy and ability. Another object was to circulate the rich religious literature they possessed. In addition to bringing churches and missions at home into brotherly unity and fellowship, the Association had more especially of late years been extending its ground and entering into fraternal relations and fellowship with churches founded upon the free and open principle upon the Continent and America. Some of these churches, though not taking the name of Unitarian, held precisely the same position, diffused the same Liberal views, and entered, through their representatives (some of whom were the foremost scholars in Europe), into close relations with the Central Association. One result of this part of the society's meetings was the formation of the closest friendship with men on the Continent, who would have known little or nothing of English Unitarians, and would have remained entirely ignorant of the work they were doing had it not been for this Association. In France, Germany, and Holland had this good work been going on. An Association with so many objects, which, notwithstanding its small income, had been carrying out those objects with unwearied patience, and with no small measure of success, during the last fifty years or more; an Association which had formed itself into a central bond of union for the free churches of this country without assuming anything like authority, and without presuming to represent any but those who asked or chose to be represented by it; an association which scattered missionaries through the thriving towns of the country, and endeavoured to raise congregations in such places as Chelmsford and Ipswich, and to strengthen the older churches; an Association which diffused a rich religious and spiritual literature—was surely deserving of their confidence and pecuniary support whenever they were able to give it. He further reminded them that this Association had brought the Unitarians of England into closer contact with one of the oldest and most interesting of the Protestant churches on the Continent (the oldest Unitarian church in the world), that of Transylvania, which dated from the earliest days of the Reformation—was older even than the English Church; and had sent—and was now sending—some of its distinguished young men to be educated at our College, who had afterwards gone back to their own country, carrying with them the deepest interest for the work in England, and becoming professors and scholars, introducing the highest results of German and English culture into that long-neglected and, at one time, oppressed and almost benighted country. In conclusion, he remarked that the parent Association was always willing to help a society like that in East Anglia, when it showed signs of life, and where there was work to be done. He hoped, therefore, that its members would put their hands rather deeper into their pockets than many of them had yet done, for they might be assured the parent Association would give them far more than they would probably give it for some years to come.

Mr. J. W. DOWSON followed in a few earnest words, in which he expressed his unflinching adhesion to the principles of Unitarianism, holding the same views as he did fifty years ago, though perhaps, he had of late years a little more exalted the spiritual side of their religious life.

The Rev. A. CHALMERS (of Cambridge) was the next speaker. The subject of his address was "Liberal Christianity in its Foreign Relations." He said that the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had relations with no fewer than six different countries on the Continent. It maintained friendly intercourse with the Liberal Protestants of France; with a small group of earnest spiritual-minded men in Italy, who had received help from the Association; with the Swiss national church, which was now so extremely Liberal; with the numerous warm-hearted friends in Germany; with Transylvania, though the Church there could scarcely be called a foreign church; and last but not least, with their Dutch brethren. Mr. Chalmers then in a very pleasing manner gave an interesting account of his travels through most of the countries mentioned, which he had visited as delegate from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, giving a description of the religious life of the people, and the warm reception accorded to him on all sides; and expressed an opinion that the time was not far distant when the Protestant Church of Germany would be as Liberal as Unitarians could desire.

The chair was then taken by Mr. A. P. ALLEN. The Rev. H. W. PERRIS, whose subject was "Liberal Christianity viewed as a Home Fellowship," said they were led the more to consider their Liberal Christianity in its inward aspect—its home aspect—by the fact that the great and constant reproach levelled against them as Liberal Christians was, that their force was of a centrifugal kind; and a word of warning would not be out of place, lest they should forget that their testimony would be of very little real use unless they could develop in their congregations an amount of spiritual home-life. If they would allow him to say so, there was still something to be learned in his own congregation—and others too, he dared say—with regard to the extent to which it is possible to forget position in life, political differences, differences of education, differences of dress, differences that had sprung up by family feuds and family leanings, and by ordinary movements of social life, which tended to divide rather than to unite. He looked forward to the time when there should be no member of his congregation who would not, whenever he met any other member of the same congregation, recognise that member in a frank and brotherly—or, it might be, sisterly way; and, besides this formal recognition, there should be a real substantial interest taken in one another's welfare, and at least an attempt made to forget everything else in comparison with the one great thing which Christ left as a principle behind him, and as an example for others to follow—a close brotherly relationship, and an assurance that in the sight of God all their lesser differences vanished into the thinnest of thin air. It grew upon him, as he saw more and more of the working of these free churches, that the innermost secret of a religious life was the attainment of a state of mind and heart which enabled one even in the very act of differing from another who belonged perhaps to an alien fellowship, to recognise to the last grain the real moral grit that was in that other. To keep down religious irritability, while abiding faithful to the truth apprehended, was more and more incumbent on them. Some touching remarks followed concerning divided families, and the peculiar trial arising from discrepancy of judgment between parents and children, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters. Mr. Perris concluded by declaring emphatically that there could be no true service of God which did not take the form of service to man.

The meeting was also addressed by the Revs. A. Pope (Chelmsford), B. Gisbey (Lynn), and J. Trist (Diss). Several members of the Octagon choir and congregation contributed at intervals selections of vocal and instrumental music, which added much to the pleasure given to all present by the proceedings.

Q U E R Y .

So many sounds that jar and jangle
Discordant in life's room;
So many threads that fast entangle
In life's stupendous loom.
So many hands that seem to beckon
The frosty wild across;
So many points from which to reckon
Our chance of gain or loss.
So many creeds: such diverse altars,
Each lit with tapers dim,
That, drawing near, the faint pray'r falters,
And dies the rising hymn.
Until distracted—we confess it,
Our souls despair of peace:
God! show us wisdom—who possess it—
And let our searchings cease.
We live unanswer'd, though we languish
As thirsty flow'rs at eve,
Whose petals for their looks of anguish
No drop from Heav'n receive.
And who are wise? The herd that, smiling,
Touch chords with cheerful hands,
And trip them by, the time beguiling
While run life's heavy sands?
"Laugh, dance while we may,
Be joyous to day,
To-morrow! who cares for to-morrow?
The present is ours,
Come, gather her flow'rs,
And a truce to all thinking and sorrow!
Oh, blithely we sing,
Life's merry bells ring,
Her garlands hang soft o'er our faces!
O'er valleys and hills,
Come, dance to the rills,
Where the sunshine the leaves shadow chases!
To-morrow, we greet thee,
To-morrow, we'll meet thee,
Good-morrow, we hail thee a treasure!
The foolish are sad,
The wise are the glad,
Step we now to a right tuneful measure!"
Or, they who shelter'd in green valleys
Too lax to venture aught,
Shrug lazy shoulders at the sallies
Of bold, ascending thought?
Their cloaks hang smooth and closely round them,
Their lanterns calmly gleam;
No fathom line descends to sound them,
Nor stir them from their dream.
"The vales may be dreary,
And cold be the night,
But terrible, surely,
The turmoil of fight!
Our lanterns burn dimly,
But sure is the spark—
Whilst yonder the battle
Is wag'd in the dark!
Oh, wrap your cloaks warmly,
Away from the throng,
They press to a conflict
That's weary and long.
And back in the evening
Their steps will they bend,
Dust-cover'd and baffled,
Afraid for the end.
Whilst, under the hedges,
And safe from all fear,
We tend to our lamps, till
The daylight appear."
Or we, who, after long devising,
Dare lift above our head
Some torch, whose blaze through gloom arising,
Dear rays of hope shall shed?
We, peradventure, feed its flaming
With fuel not from Heav'n,
And strain our throats, a blessing claiming,
Where blessings are not given.
We, peradventure, miss our bearing,
And clasp an error tight,
Like misled soldiers, who with daring
In wars quite needless fight.
But as God lives, He judges fairly!
And loves He not the brave
Who strike for justice—seeking rarely
Their single souls to save?

S. C.

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

WE would again invite the notice of our readers in and around Manchester to the meetings of this Union. The first of the present season is to be held, as an advertisement shows, in the Memorial Hall, on Tuesday evening next, when the Rev. Charles Wicksteed will read a paper—"An Attempt to Define the Actual Historic Attitude of the Roman Catholic Church towards the Translation and Circulation of the Scriptures." In urging our friends to greet Mr. Wicksteed with a large attendance, we would remind them that there is no society or gathering in Manchester which offers the same opportunities for friendly intercourse and free discussion as the Beard Memorial Union. It occupies, indeed, very much the same place as the Liberal Social Union in London. It is open to all, laymen as well as ministers, ladies as well as gentlemen. Membership is constituted by the payment of half-a-crown per annum, but all visitors are heartily welcomed.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

TROWBRIDGE: CONIGRE CHAPEL.

ON Wednesday evening, October 23rd, the congregation met to commemorate the 218th anniversary of the formation of the church. The well-appointed schoolroom bore so many evidences of the taste and judgment of the late revered pastor that it needed nothing to keep the people in remembrance of him. The simple dates, 1660 and 1878, worked in scarlet on a white ground, over the clock, served as a silent mentor to link past and present, and show the rapid flight of time. The cordial greeting of more than 200 persons was sufficient welcome to the newly-appointed pastor, the Rev. J. Felstead. At seven o'clock a public meeting was held in the chapel, when the attendance was again large, notwithstanding the driving storms that prevailed during the earlier part of the evening. The hymn "Stand up and bless the Lord," having been sung, the Rev. W. Robinson, of Crewkerne, offered prayer, after which the choir, under the direction of Mr. John Millington, organist, sang the anthem, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem."

The Rev. JOHN FELSTEAD then said he was very glad to meet them on this occasion, which was the first gathering of this kind, and he hoped it would in every respect be a very pleasant one to them all. As he understood it, they were come there to-night to commemorate three especial things, first, the founding of this church and congregation; secondly, the pastorate of one who will always, as long as life shall last, occupy a place in the hearts of everyone belonging to this church—a pastorate that endured for fifty years; and thirdly, the re-building of the chapel. At this anniversary meeting he should like to join with them all in doing reverence to the kindness and worthiness which were represented in their late pastor. That beautiful chapel told them he was worthy of honour, and he built it. That congregation told them he was worthy of honour, and he built the congregation. Those things made it very difficult for those who came after him, for they could never feel towards his successor exactly as they felt towards him. He prayed God to aid him to carry on the great and honourable work which had been carried on for so many years by Mr. Martin.

The Rev. H. AUSTIN, of Cirencester, then addressed the meeting, as did Mr. BUTCHER, of Bristol, in a happy speech. He said he always thought of Trowbridge with a great deal of interest. Speaking of trade he said our foreign trade was gone, and would not come back again. It was for the working men to cultivate the home trade, by seeking to avoid reckless, wicked expenditure, which is bringing misery and wretchedness on our country, and by which one-fourth of the working men's earnings was squandered.

Mr. FELSTEAD said he fully sympathised with the last remark of the speaker, and mentioned the fact that 140 millions were squandered in this way in strong drink, which was worse than madness.

The Rev. W. ROBINSON next addressed the meeting, as did the Rev. J. W. SMITH, of Ringwood, a native of Trowbridge, and spoke with emotion of his recollections of this place and of their late revered pastor, as this was the first opportunity he had had of doing so since the death of Mr. Martin. This was their 218th anniversary, and he was overwhelmed with the thought that he had known this church and congregation almost one-fourth of that time. The longer their present minister remained here, the more he would see he was gaining the place in the hearts of his people that was occupied by their former pastor.

Mr. GEO. COLEMAN then said a few words, and then a hymn having been sung, and the Benediction pronounced, the proceedings terminated.

HYDE CHAPEL SCHOOL, GEE CROSS.

ON Saturday evening week the annual presentation of prizes took place to the successful and attentive scholars of the day and Sunday schools connected with Hyde Chapel. About 500 sat down to tea. Afterwards the meeting was held in the large room, which was densely crowded. The left hand of the platform was occupied by the children of the day school, who, led by Mr. William Woolley, sang a number of pieces during the evening with unusual precision. Of the remaining half of the platform a large portion was occupied by a table covered with handsome volumes, chosen mostly for literary excellence. The chair was taken by Mr. T.

THORNLEY, supported by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, and Mr. Jesse Pilcher, of Manchester.

The CHAIRMAN briefly expressed the pleasure he had, as treasurer of the day school, in witnessing its growing prosperity.

The Rev. H. E. DOWSON then delivered the prizes, and pleasantly alluded to the arduous although agreeable nature of the task he and Mr. Pilcher had undertaken—a task they in former years had thought too lengthy for one night, yet which was yearly increasing. He then gave a number of statistics showing the growth of the school in the last eight years, the Government grant having risen from £79. 7s. 1d. to £243. 7s. 6d. The attendance had been exceedingly good; out of a possible number of 475, seventy scholars had attended over 400 times, and of these 26 had attended 440 and ten 540 times. He also read a tabulated statement of the results of the Manchester District Sunday School Association examinations, from which it appeared that of 89 scholars who presented themselves in the various subjects, 80 passed, 15 with honours. The school accommodation had now become too small, but he was happy to inform the audience that there were certain ladies present who had promised to build them larger premises. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. JESSE PILCHER delivered the certificates given by the Association, and said now they might fairly claim to have solved the problem of examinations. The opposition arose from that terrible hobgoblin, the mischievous distinction between secular and religious instruction—a distinction which was now broken down, and they might look forward to a day when any subject which the teacher had at heart might be deemed religious. (Hear, hear.)

The prizes won by the scholars would fill a whole column of our paper.

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE UNITARIAN CHURCH. ON Monday evening September the 9th the annual meeting of the members of the Unitarian Church was held at the Temperance Hall, Pitt-street. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen as the concluding portion of the business of the meeting was to be devoted to welcoming their new pastor, the Rev. J. H. Smith, who had been selected by the British and Foreign Unitarian Society in England as being highly fitted for the duties of minister of the Sydney congregation. Mr. Biddell was voted to the chair. Mr. Eames, the secretary, read the annual report, from which it would appear that the Unitarians have good reason to feel hopeful of success in the future. The report touched upon the several difficulties that had attended the efforts of the many friends who had assisted sedulously in resuscitating the church, and concluded in a warm appeal to all lovers of Unitarianism and free religious thought, to come forward and lend their aid. The report, on being put to the meeting, was carried unanimously. The treasurer, Mr. Turner, and Mr. Shaw, on behalf of trustees and building committee of the new church, read their reports, which were satisfactory, and were adopted. On the motion of Mr. Turner, seconded by Mr. Freeman, a substitution of a new rule regarding membership, defining their position and privileges, was carried unanimously. On the motion of Mr. Braham, seconded by Mr. Lea, the following were appointed office-bearers of the Church for the ensuing year: President, Mr. J. MacDonnell; treasurer, Mr. Turner; secretary, Mr. Eames; librarian, Mr. D. Jones; chapel wardens, Messrs. Davies and Joyner, which, on being put to the meeting, was carried. On the motion of Mr. Mielikin, seconded by Mr. Birch, and carried, the following were appointed to serve on the committee for the ensuing year: Messrs. Freeman, Biddell, Whitley, Loudon, Service, Lea, Mahoney, and Miss Davis. This terminated the business portion of the meeting.

A short interval was then devoted to some choice music, which was highly appreciated.

WELCOME TO THE NEW MINISTER.

The CHAIRMAN then delivered an address of welcome to the new Minister.

The Rev. J. H. SMITH responded to the welcome which had been given him as minister of the Unitarian congregation of Sydney, and went on to speak of the causes which had induced him to come to the colony. He considered New South Wales to be the most promising of our colonial possessions, as a seat of freedom, as the course of a new and strong life, wherein nothing that had not sound sense and reason on its side could hope to attain to a vigorous growth. There time-honoured errors would hardly be able to find a congenial home, where everything had to be begun de novo, where Test and Corporation Acts had never been known, and the somniferous wings of a State Church never been spread. Out in the wilds of Australia he knew men had to grapple with the hard facts of nature and of life (than which no better training can be given to any people), unburdened, but also unassisted, by those established and conventional aids which all persons seize upon in an old and conservative country like England. Whatever means of art and refinement they possessed in Sydney he knew had been wrenched by hard labour out of the soil and climate of this sunny and almost boundless continent. From these causes, and being himself of cosmopolitan sympathies, he had come among them to preach and teach, and, he humbly trusted to exercise the virtues of a free religion. However prosperous a people were, they needed a religion. A religion of finality, that is a religion in which all that man can know of God, and man's duty towards Him, is believed to have been once and for ever revealed and to be contained within the pages of a book called the Bible, was a religion that could not be maintained in the light of the present day. The great Spirit of Life is for ever revealing himself, and every fresh discovery of science was a new revelation. The religion of to-day would be the superstition of to-morrow. It was necessary to adjust the fingers of our theological dials to the spirit of the times. But Agnosticism and Nihilism would not satisfy. As savants adopted what seemed to be best hypotheses in matters imperfectly known, so theologians must adopt the best theories of nature and God, and hold them firmly until verified or disproved. That was a clever saying of an eminent man that, "If there were no God, it would be necessary to invent one." It was a great mistake, however, to hedge about our religion with narrow definitions, and enforce shibboleths as crucial tests of the truth. Religious relations partook of the nature of the infinite. Yet they had positive convictions respecting an eternal intelligence, the love and service of man, reverence for the best teachers, and natural retribution. The speaker concluded with some practical observations on their new church, urging the friends of religious freedom to see that they were not saddled in their first endeavours with a heavy debt.

At the close of Mr. Smith's reply, which was frequently applauded, and listened to with marked attention, a further interval was devoted to vocal and instrumental music; after which it was notified that a suitable room for holding divine service had been secured at the new Temperance Hall, pending the completion of the church in Liverpool-street, which, it is expected, will be completed by January next. The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman and the ladies and gentlemen who had so kindly volunteered their musical services during the evening. Several new members enrolled themselves at the close of the meeting.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL RESIGNATION.—The Rev. Harold Rylett has resigned the pulpit at Reading.

BELFAST, MOUNTPOTTINGER.—The first meeting of the session of the Mutual Improvement Association was held in the reading room on Wednesday evening, October 16th, when a lecture was delivered by the Rev. D. Thompson, on "Gleanings from the Poets." Mr. S. M'Millar presided, and the room was well filled. In his opening remarks Mr. Thompson referred to the fact that twenty years ago there was only one mutual improvement society connected with their churches in Belfast, that of York-street, and now the example then set had been followed by all their churches in town. He spoke of the advantages and pleasures to be found from a love of literature, and recommended young people to learn and commit to memory choice selections of poetry. He then read a number of pieces from favourite poets, and also an original poem by a member of the Society. A vote of thanks was passed by acclamation.

DEVONPORT.—The Rev. Alfred Hood, of Devonport, has been obliged to seek restoration of his health at Davos-am-Platz. His congregation has given him three months' leave, and we are gratified to find that his friends at Devonport, Plymouth, Bristol, and other places have shown their regard for him by filling a purse for him before he left England on Saturday last.

Huddersfield.—The new book of Hymns, Chants, Anthems, edited by Mr. Page Hopps, has been adopted for the use of the congregation here, and will be introduced on the first Sunday in January.

HULL.—Last Sunday evening, October 27th, a musical vesper service was held in Bowlalley Lane Chapel, Hull. Sir J. Goss' "O taste and see;" Hayden's "In native worth," "On Thee each living soul;" Mendelssohn's "Lord how long;" Weber's "He is blessed;" and Clark Whitfield's "Behold how good and joyful," were well sung by the choir. The voluntaries by the organist were very good, and the opening and closing hymns were sung heartily by the very large congregation. A short address was given by the Minister, the Rev. J. M. Dixon, on "Music as a Devotional and Harmonising Influence." A liberal collection was taken for the medical charities of the town.

LONDON: KENTISH TOWN.—The soirée inaugurating the second session of this institute took place on Tuesday evening, October 15th, in the Camden Lecture Hall, Camden Town. About 150 persons were present. The Rev. P. W. Clayden presided, and in opening the meeting expressed the pleasure he felt at seeing such a large number present. He hoped that the institute might shortly have a room in connection with the church to meet in, as strenuous efforts were being made to raise a fund for building a school room; already a small amount had been subscribed for the purpose. He then called upon the secretary to give a short account of the proceedings of the society during the past session. The secretary stated that during the session 87 members had joined. The number of young people who had joined had been small, but there were hopes of an amendment in that respect during the present session. The society had been financially successful, the accounts showing a small balance in hand which had been duly placed to the credit of the Sunday School Building Fund. The programme for the session had comprised eleven meetings for papers, discussions, &c., two soirées, three lectures, and two concerts. Many objects of interest were kindly exhibited during the evening by members and ladies and gentlemen of the congregation, and music, &c., was given at intervals by Madame Suter, Mrs. Hind, Miss Suter, Miss Elkington, Mr. Jerson, Mr. Wurtzburg, and Mr. Serrell. Mr. F. Allen also read a humorous paper. The meeting, a thoroughly social one, was closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman, and to the ladies and gentlemen who had assisted to add to the enjoyment of the evening.

LEICESTER.—The inaugural meeting of a "Social Union" was held on Thursday evening week at the rooms connected with the Great Meeting. Tea was served in one of the schoolrooms; after which the company, numbering about 200, adjourned to the Lecture Hall, which, with the help of small tables, books, pictures, and flowers, had a very homelike appearance. The chair was taken by the president, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, who delivered an address on "Social Union considered as a Fine Art," in the course of which he explained that the Union was established "for the purpose of promoting the intellectual improvement and social fellowship of its members." Its object was to bring kindred spirits together, and to make life go more pleasantly with some. They invited both sexes on equal terms, and did not believe that "woman's sphere is bounded on the north by her husband; on the south by her baby; on the east by her mother-in-law; and on the west by her maiden aunt." Webster's definition of the "Fine Arts" was, "the arts that depend chiefly on the labours of the mind or imagination, and whose object is pleasure." To that they ought to add—and the production of objects of intellectual beauty. The Fine Arts involve three things: A perception of the beautiful and the harmonious; an aiming at the production of the beautiful and the harmonious; and delight in ideals. Social Union includes all these. The highest forms of the beautiful and the harmonious are so as the result of combinations. So with society and the social idea. All exclusions, and isolations, and selfishnesses are essentially barbaric and inartistic. Social Union, then, may be considered as a Fine Art, inasmuch as it supposes a perception of human beauty and of a harmonious state of society. It includes also the production as well as the perception of beauty and harmony. It is creative, as it aims at elevating and including all, in a harmonious and renovated state of society. It also delights in ideals. It works in the same way that the great Arts of Music, Painting, and Sculpture work, in ever aspiring towards cherished dreams of perfection. All this involves a spirit of benevolence, true courtesy, a spirit of hopefulness, and thoroughness. Success would be attained if they acted in the spirit of the late Bishop of Winchester's witty saying, who, when asked to define the way of salvation, said, "Take the first turning to the right, and go straight on." During the evening a musical entertainment of considerable excellence was given, under the direction of Mr. Wykes and Mr. Rowlett.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The Hant's Independent contains a paragraph signed "I. C. U.," in which the services of our minister are thus highly spoken of:—Liberal minded and reverent seekers after truth in Southampton, I am told, are confidently looking forward to find their cause much strengthened and themselves built up by the ministrations, at the Church of the Saviour, of the Rev. D. Amos, formerly a Congregational minister at King's Lynn. Mr. Amos, who is in the vigour of life, has already, since his acceptance of the pastorate of the church, imparted much activity to its different agencies, whilst his broad and liberal views in the pulpit have attracted larger congregations than have been seen at the Church for many years. Mr. Amos has just concluded a series of morning sermons on "Primitive Christianity," which I am told has given great satisfaction to the members of the Church, who deserve every encouragement for their attachment to the cause through many months' absence of a minister; whilst in his evening discourses he has touched upon some of the principal questions affecting our times with a broadness of theological view and an earnestness of purpose and sympathy that have attracted to his ministry many who are seeking after the Infinite and Eternal if haply they may find Him apart from the narrownesses of the dogmas and isms of the age.

STOCKPORT.—The annual school sermons were preached on Sunday last to large congregations by the Rev. Eli Fay. The collections realised £33. 13. 0½d.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The fourth lecture in connection with the Philosophical and Musical Society was delivered on Thursday evening by Mr. Stafford Maccrom in the Kell Memorial Schools. There was a large attendance, the chair being taken by the Rev. D. Amos. The lecturer prefaced his subject by stating that phrenology was simply a discourse upon the phenomena of our mental life, an attempt to explain the wonderful evolution of intelligence through and by means of a material brain; reverently, but truthfully, he hoped, he was now to explain its structure, and the laws which governed it, its divisions and sub-divisions; to trace it through its youth, maturity, and decay, as the temporary home of an immortal spirit, and the sublime handiwork of God. Phrenology had experienced fierce opposition, but notwithstanding the shortcomings of its champions, and the tremendous assaults of its foes, it had outlived all, and was to-day prepared to hold its own. A logical definition both of spirit and matter may be demanded, but the fact was no finite mind could frame a sufficient definition. The phenomena were indisputable. The brain is subject, as are all other organs, to the law of organisation, viz., that different functions are never performed by the same organ. The lecturer affirmed in the most solemn manner, that for his most valuable knowledge on this subject he was indebted to spiritualistic sources, the result of which had been to demonstrate to him the existence of mental organs, whose aim could only point to God. Man was therefore a religious animal, and in answer to those who questioned the wisdom of such researches, he boldly affirmed that it would teach them to develop and mature the splendid gift of intelligence to raise inferiority to a better type, it being for to-day and for all time. A lively discussion followed, strong exception being taken to the points advanced by the lecturer, and the proceedings closed with the usual votes of thanks.

SOUTH SHIELDS: UNITY CHURCH.—On Wednesday, the 23rd inst., a lecture was delivered by the Rev. R. C.

Smith, on "William Lovett" in connection with the Mutual Improvement Society. The attendance was good and the lecture was listened to with great attention. On Sunday a Harvest Festival took place at the church and the church was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The services were conducted by the Rev. R. Cowley Smith, in the morning, on "Pure Religion," in the evening, on "Florence Nightingale." Anthems were also sung by the choir. In the afternoon Mr. Smith conducted a children's service, each scholar bringing some flowers or fruit to add to the collection. At the evening service the Church was well filled by a most attentive and appreciative congregation.—On Monday evening a lecture was delivered by the Rev. R. C. Smith in the Church, on "Unitarian Christianity," at which there was again a good attendance. Mr. T. Hornby presided. Votes of thanks were passed to the ladies and to lecturer. J. Kirkley Esq., secretary to the Shields Infirmary, (who is a member of the Established Church) was also present, and moved a vote of thanks to the Committee of the Church for their efforts to do something for the Infirmary by the Harvest Festival. The fruit and flowers were sent on Tuesday to the Infirmary. The Collections amounted to £6. 11s. 2d., against £1. 19s. 6d. last year.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

The report from Heywood and other matter must stand over till next week.

[ADVT.]

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, WHITCHURCH.

To the Editors.—Will you allow me to make one more appeal to your readers on behalf of the work here? I hope it may be the last. We have still a debt of £140 on our church. This includes the cost of a fine harmonium, and all the internal fittings of the church. If possible, we wish to clear the debt off entirely by December 31st, and are prepared to do our own share towards achieving this desirable result. We shall have a bazaar and tea meeting towards the middle of December, and I venture to ask help in the way of work from our lady friends, and of cash contributions from those gentlemen who may feel any interest in our work, and who have not before contributed. Towards the £140 we have about £47 promised already, including, amongst other sums, £10 from Mr. R. Y. Fletcher, Whitchurch; £10 from Mr. John Gresty, Whitchurch; £5 from Sir J. C. Lawrence, Bart.; £5 from W. Rathbone, Esq., M.P.; and £5 from Ed. Caddick, Esq. Pounds, shillings, or pence will be gladly received by the undersigned,

W. CAREY WALTERS,

56, Bargates, Minister of the Church.
Whitchurch, Salop.

PEARSALL'S SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—Perhaps your Kidderminster correspondent will write to correct Kearsall into Pearsall. The Grammar School, founded by Mr. Pearsall, had the Rev. W. Blake as its first master, and the late Dr. Lant Carpenter and his sister among its first scholars. The Rev. W. Mountford, the author of "Euthanary," and other excellent works, received his elementary education there. The late Dr. Philip Pearsall Carpenter was given his second name from respect to the founder of this school, who was an enlightened and benevolent man—even more enlightened than I was aware of, if, as I must infer, he authorised his trustees, in case his school should seem no longer needed, to apply the foundation to some other purpose, such as a library.—Faithfully yours, R. L. CARPENTER.
Bridport, Oct. 28th, 1878.

PLEADING FOR CHRISTIAN HELP.

To the Editors.—Will you kindly grant me a little space in your columns to narrate an incident that may call the attention of your readers to one of the most truly Christian institutions in London?

Nearly five months ago a young girl of about eighteen, with whom we had had to do in our Sunday school, left her home in disgrace, and for four months all efforts to discover her were in vain. A week ago, however, the parents received a letter from a police constable, informing them of their daughter's whereabouts. We then found that our worst fears were realised, for sadly indeed had she gone astray. What was now to be done with her? It would not do to take her home, for the mother was out so much at work that the girl could not have the necessary supervision. In this dilemma we remembered having read an article in the Inquirer some months back upon Mrs. Hampson's Home, and it being quite near, we thought we might go and take counsel with this lady. Those who know the anxiety of such times will realise how intense was the relief to find in Mrs. Hampson the most kindly adviser and ready helper that one could possibly desire. Being entire strangers, we felt some hesitation in asking her help but there was no need; at the first knowledge of the sorrowful tale her hearty co-operation was secured, and within 30 hours after our visit the girl had been fetched up from the country and placed in the Home.

Such was our introduction to an institution formed to reclaim and care for those who have stumbled and fallen in the battle of life. During the two years and a half that it has been in existence fifty girls have been taken in, wisely and lovingly treated, and as far as we can tell, thoroughly reinstated in a virtuous life. There is no slurring over of their sin, but at the same time they are encouraged with the hope that they may live down the past by striving in the future to lead a pure and holy life, and are bidden to have faith that not one of God's children is beyond the reach of His forgiveness.

Such a home, conducted as it is by a lady who is at one with us in religious belief, surely merits our heartiest support. And yet it is not so! The list of subscribers is terribly inadequate to so good a cause. There is room in the house for fifteen girls, but money is wanting to maintain them, for although they are not kept idle, still their earnings are not enough to cover expenses. Then there are more rooms wanting (for another infirmary, and nurseries); these, too, are waiting for funds. The workers are ready, but the lack of money keeps back the useful work. Can we not do something to change this? Should we not count it as one of our dearest privileges to help to save those who are lost and to bid our weaker sisters "Go and sin no more?"

My last week's experience is one that may, and indeed will probably be repeated by all who have to do with young people of the working classes, and therefore I feel that no apology is needed for thus pleading a cause which brings to a practical issue those Christian principles which in theory we admire so much.

I am afraid I have already passed the proper limit of a letter, and therefore will only add that any further particulars may be easily obtained by writing to Mrs. Hampson, 20, Compton Terrace, Islington, London, N., to whom, or to Mr. W. Shaen, 8, Bedford Row, London, treasurer, it is earnestly hoped, many contributions may be sent. MARIAN PRITCHARD.
October 28th, 1878.

COMING WEEK.

BURY.—BANK STREET CHAPEL.—Reopening of organ, and annual sermons by Rev. C. C. Coe, at 11 and 6.30.

HUDDERSFIELD.—On Sunday next, anniversary sermons, by Rev. John Thomas, B.A., morning at 10.45, evening at 6.30.

HULL.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. J. M. Dixon, on "Unitarian Struggles."

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—On Sunday, annual sermons, at 11 and 6.30, by the Rev. Dr. Laird Collier.

LONDON.—Lecture by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., on "Religion for to-day," on Wednesday, in the Luxembourg Hall. On Thursday, at the Town Hall, Hammersmith. On Friday, at the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms, Southampton-street, Peckham.

MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Tuesday, Beard Memorial Union meeting, when the Rev. Chas. Wicksteed, B.A., will read a paper.

MANCHESTER: CROSS-STREET CHAPEL.—On Sunday, at 6.30, lecture by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., on "Reason and Revelation not opposed."—On Wednesday evening, a mission service, at 7.30, in which the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., Chas. Wicksteed, B.A., and Dr. Sadler will take part.

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—On Sunday evening an autumn thanksgiving vesper service.

MONTON.—On Sunday, the Rev. Jas. Harwood, B.A., will commence his ministry. On Thursday, at 5, Welcome meeting.

PENDLETON.—On Friday evening, at 8, a lecture by the Rev. John Page Hopps, on "An Appeal to Jesus Christ against Belief in Eternal Punishment."

PLATT CHAPEL.—On Sunday, the first of a series of lectures on "Reasonable Worship," will be delivered by the Rev. Chas. T. Poynting, B.A., at 6.30.

Birth.

CLIFF.—On the 27th ult., at Old Frodingham, near Brigg, Lincolnshire, the wife of Philip Arthur Cliff, of a son.

Marriages.

BRADSHAW—BARLOW.—On the 23rd October, at the Unitarian Chapel, Chobent, by the Rev. M. C. Frankland, assisted by the Rev. C. C. Coe, of Bolton, Jonas J. Bradshaw, of Bolton, to Hannah, youngest daughter of the late John Barlow, of Chobent. No cards.

WATSON—KIDD.—On the 22nd ult., at Edina House, Milngavie, near Glasgow, by the Rev. Robt. Bell, M.A., Henry Chamberlain Watson to Jessie Burgess, only daughter of Archibald Kidd, Esq.

Deaths.

COLTMAN.—On the 21st ult., at Stourbridge, in the 88th year of her age, Ann, eldest and only surviving daughter of the late Mr. George Coltmán.

HOLLAND.—On the 30th ult., at Bowdon, Alice, eldest daughter of Francis W. Holland, aged 27 years.

KNIGHT.—On the 4th ult., William Millward, and on the 21st ult., Frank Lea, twin sons of the Rev. George Knight, of Sheffield.

THE UNITARIAN MAGAZINE, 24pp. Monthly. Price Twopence. Single copies post-free for Twopence-halfpenny in stamps. Orders to be sent to Rev FRANK WALTERS, 10, Cornuna-street, Glasgow.

Just published, gopp., neat wrapper, Ninepence,

CITY LIFE: SEVEN LECTURES on Business, Politics, Society, Recreation, Culture, Music, The Drama—delivered in the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, by Henry Woods Peris.—Johnson and Rawson, or (post-free) from the author.

New Publication.

THE PROPHETS AND THEIR INTERPRETERS. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH. Price 6d.

British and Foreign Unitarian Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

PAPERS for the TIMES on RELIGION, ETHICS, and CONDUCT. Sixpence monthly. No. 3 contains—Thoughts of Faith in True Religion; Women's Claim to Franchise; Machinery and Morals: What will a Republic do for Us? &c.—Prospectus free from W. Lewin, Tranmere, Cheshire. London and Manchester: John Heywood.

Just Published, Price One Penny,

THE BASIS OF RELIGION AND MORALS By WM. WHITWORTH, Author of the "Book of Natural Laws."

Published by Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London House Yard, Paternoster Row, London. Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate, Manchester.

THE CAUSES of Life, Structure, and Species.

By the Rev. Edward C. Towne, B.A., 70 pp.; 1s., post free. An Announcement of New Biological Discoveries. Tubbs and Brook, Manchester; Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., London.

HARRIET MARTINEAU'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY. With Memorials by M. W. CHAPMAN. 3 vols. Illustrated with PORTRAITS and VIEWS. New and uncut, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.; published at £1. 12s. Only a few copies for sale at this price.—Apply to HENRY YOUNG, 12, South Castle-street, Liverpool.

Just Published, Price 1s.

IS IT REASONABLE TO WORSHIP GOD?

The only authorised and verbatim report of two nights' debate at Nottingham between the Rev. R. A. Armstrong and Charles Bradlaugh, with a Preface by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG. Free thought Publishing Company, 28, Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Now ready. In small 8vo, pp. xvi.—240. Cloth, red edges. Price 2s. 6d. (to Congregations, 1s. 8d.)

A BOOK OF PRAYER: IN THIRTY ORDERS OF WORSHIP. With additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. Edited by R. CROMPTON JONES. Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

Now Ready. Price 4d., No. V. of

TEACHERS' NOTES: containing Hints for the Elder Boys; Lessons on the Title Page and Table of Contents of an English Bible; Moral Lessons from Common Things; A Piece of Chalk; A Piece of White Coral; The Hand; Sleep; A Leaf, &c. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Crown 8vo, 80pp, limp cloth. Price 1s. 6d.

MORNING PRAYERS in the HOUSEHOLD OF A BELIEVER IN GOD. By F. W. NEWMAN. London: Tribner and Co., Ludgate Hill.

THE THEOLOGICAL REVIEW: a Quarterly Journal of Religious Thought and Life. Edited by CHARLES BEARD, B.A. Price 2s. 6d. Ten Shillings per Annum, post free.

No. LXIII. OCTOBER, 1878.

Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THE TRUTHSEEKER, Edited by the Rev.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS, and published on the first of every month, is a free and unsectarian Review of all books and events relating to the development of religious life and liberty in the Christian Church. Every number contains original lectures and essays, together with reviews of present and permanent interest. Price Threepence.—London: Williams and Norgate, Covent Garden. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate.

Tenth edition, with six new chapters,

THE DESTINY OF THE SOUL: A CRITICAL HISTORY OF THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

By WILLIAM R. ALGER.

And a complete Bibliography of the subject, by EZRA ABBOT, Librarian of Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass.

Price Ten Shillings.

This work will be forwarded to any address at the price above named—carriage free, or the usual discount will be allowed to purchasers in the Bookroom of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.—Address Mr. Henry Y. Brace, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

NOTE.—In the Press, and will shortly be issued by the Association, The Prophets and their Interpreters. By Dr. G. Vance Smith. Price Sixpence.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!"

And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Pretty bindings. Price 9d.

Publishers: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., London.

* * * Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—

25 BOOKS FOR 12s. 6d.

If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News," for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

Now ready. Price 1s. 6d. Numerous illustrations.

YOUNG DAYS ANNUAL VOLUME FOR 1878. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Nearly ready. Illustrated. Cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.; gilt edges, 2s.

IDA MAYHEW.

By MRS. HERBERT MARTIN.

Author of "Daisy Root," "Rosy's Three Homes," &c.

Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Now ready, for November, Numerous illustrations.

YOUNG DAYS.

Contents: My Wee Lambie—Ida Mayhew—Nothing good shall perish—John Chinaman at work—A message—A dead hawk and a live one—The adventures of Whisky and Frisky—Pearls of thought—The generous cloud—Be kind, boys—Little Jack Frost—Puzzle Bag. The Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

SECOND HAND BOOKS.—The following

Works for cash (carriage not included) may be had from Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester:—

Theological Translation Fund Library, 15 vols., 2s. 9d. each. Kuonen on the Pentateuch, 1 vol., 1s. 9d.

The Worship of Baalim in Israel (Dr. H. Cort), 1 vol., 1s.

The Fourth Gospel (J. J. Taylor), 1 vol., 1s. 6d.

The Apocryphal New Testament (Hone), 1 vol., 1s. 6d.

Le Livre de Job (E. Renan), 1 vol., 2s.

Nouvelle Vie de Jesus (Dr. D. F. Strauss), 2 vols., 4s.

A New Way of Deciding Old Controversies (Basanistes), 1 vol., 1s.

Lectures by Henry Ierson, 1 vol., 6d.

Christian Examiner (American) 14 odd vols., 6d. each.

Christian Teacher, 1835 to 1844, 10 vols., 6d. each.

Monthly Repository, 1806 to 1836, 31 vols., 6d. each.

National Review, 36 numbers, 3d. each.

Prospective Review, 36 numbers, 2d. each.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, November 1, 1878.

EDITED BY

Vol. XVIII.—915.

Price 1d.

PACH

	PAGE.
Doing and Saying	404
Conversions to and from Unitarianism	404
Ministers' Benevolent Society	405
Manchester New College	405
The Mountaineer's Prayer	406
Orthodox Generosity	406
The late Rev. T. Lloyd	406
The Beard Memorial Union	406
A Mission Service	407
The Scottish Unitarian Association	407
Heywood : Farewell Meeting	408
News of our Churches	409
Correspondence	410

RATES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Ten lines and under.....	6d. a line.
After the first ten lines.....	5d. a line.
For 6 consecutive insertions, a reduction of.....	25 per cent.
" " " " "	50 per cent.
Half column.....	4s. 6s. od.
For all insertions of "Births" or "Marriages" a uniform charge of is.

Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

CORRECTIONS and ADVERTISEMENTS should be sent at once to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-st., Manchester.

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—WEEK EVENING LECTURES.—Each Lecture to begin at Eight o'clock

Wednesday evening, Nov. 13th, The Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS on "Religious Sects in England—the Church of Humanity."

Wednesday evening, Nov. 27th, Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., on "The Holy Catholic Church."

FLOWERY FIELD CHRISTIAN CHURCH.
Next Sunday there will be TWO SPECIAL SERMONS, for the Church Funds, by the Rev. G. H. VANCE, B.D. Afternoon at 2 45, and evening at 6 30.

A COURSE of FOUR LECTURES will be delivered under the auspices of the above Society as follows:—
At the Luxemburg Hall, Dalston (opposite the railway station), on the following Wednesday evenings:

November 6th, "Religion for to-day." By the Rev. R. A.

On Friday evenings, October 25th, November 1st, 8th, and 15th, they will be delivered at the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms, Southampton-street, Peckham.

The AUTUMNAL MEETING of the Society will be held at Taunton on Thursday, November 14th, 1878.

by the Rev. H. IERSON, M.A., of London, at the conclusion of which there will be an observance of the Lord's Supper Service, when the Address will be given by the Rev. JOHN WRIGHT, B.A., of Bath.

The BUSINESS MEETING will be held in the Chapel at the o'clock, after which a PUBLIC MEETING will be held at the same place, when the Chair will be taken by CHRISTOPHER J. THOMAS, Esq., J.P., who will be supported by the ministers of the district, and by a deputation from the British and Foreign Ministers and other friends intending to be present will oblige by communicating with the Rev. John Birks as early as possible.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties' Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS, PAINTERS'
VARNISHES, &c., &c.

DOING AND SAYING.

In the Exeter Diocese £100,000 has this year been raised for church purposes.

At the Winchester Diocesan Conference, the Bishop said he would give £100 to any one who would prove from the Bible that God meant to eternally damn the heathen—a doctrine which many of them were taught in their childhood.

Mr. [Donald Currie, who has been chosen as the Liberal candidate for the representation of Perthshire at next general election, in addressing a meeting of Liberal electors at Abyth, said that he would prefer a union of Presbyterian bodies to disestablishment, and counselled Dissenters to take up a conciliatory attitude towards the Church. Mr. Fraser-Mackintosh, M.P., addressed a meeting of electors at Nairn last week. With regard to disestablishment, he said that while a member of the Church of Scotland, if the people wanted to have the Church disestablished, he would bow to their feeling.

The Rev. E. E. Jenkins, secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, at the recent Conference on Foreign Missions, said that Christianity had not as yet effected an inroad upon the fanaticism of the Mohammedan race. As Mohammed built up his work by the sword it would doubtless perish by the sword. Throughout India numbers of Moslems were losing their faith in Islamism, but the fear of persecution kept them from embracing Christianity. Hindooism was losing its hold upon the rising generation, and was slowly becoming a relic. The progress of thought was occasioning an unrest among the masses, and the Theists of the Brahma Somaj had been preparing the way of the Lord.

The fact of history being so strongly condemnatory of Ultramontanism, it is the rôle of its advocates now to throw discredit upon all historical results. "History," says an unblushing scribe in the Weekly Register, "tells fibs with impunity, and its readers have to pay for its mendacity. It is because writers will not inquire of those who can teach them (to wit, the Jesuitically-trained priests of the Papal Church) what are the truths about which they but conjecture, that poor 'posterity' has to feed upon inferences;" and he declares it to be "happy for all Christians that 'the Church' is above [history]." Only those who are prepared to abnegate common sense at the bidding of authority can be expected to yield submission to such a dictum.

The London correspondent of the Western News, remarking on the refusal of Mr. Jolley, of Birkenhead, to permit a parishioner to partake of the communion who insisted on making certain genuflections when receiving it, says: One can scarcely understand the frame of mind which would lead a man temporarily to introduce the element of disunion into such a ceremony; but Mr. Jolley should see what the London clergy have to undergo, especially at the hands of the ladies. I watched a tall clergyman giving the chalice to a lady the other day. She had prostrated herself on the ground, and it was with the utmost difficulty he could reach her at all. When he did, she refused to take the cup into her hands, and he could only administer it to her at the imminent risk of spilling the contents. Can anybody really mistake this eccentricity for devotion?

Mr. E. S. Robinson, one of the Nonconformist Town Councillors of Bristol, presiding at the anniversary of a United Methodist Free Church, mentioned that he belonged to a congregation, near the Downs, situate in a district in which there were not many poor. Some of his fellow members, being anxious to be employed in Sunday-school teaching, looked round for the darkest, the most benighted and least instructed spot, where there was most need of work. This they found under the shadow of the cathedral, and there they established a Sunday school with 200 scholars—children for whom the eleven preachers and more than thirty cathedral officials had taken no care. Mr. Robinson expressed the hope that the time would come when the pulpit of that cathedral would be no longer closed against such teachers as Newman Hall, C. H. Spurgeon, and the minister who preaches before the Queen at Balmoral.

The Jesuits had a mission in Madagascar in the seventeenth century, but no results were left. The Protestant mission has had 16 years of planting time—1823 to 1837, twenty-five years of persecution, 1837 to 1862, and since then the harvest. In the first period the Scriptures were translated and education was promoted and the Gospel preached,—with what result is proved. The evidences of national elevation are now abundant in the clothing of the people, in marriage customs, and in commerce. There was not a European house of business in 1863, now there are many. Polygamy is extinct and divorce greatly diminished. Cruel laws have been abolished. Death punishment for trivial offences, with the selling of wives and children of criminals as slaves, have ceased. The law by which deserters were burned has been abolished. The practices of war have been immensely ameliorated. Such are the undoubted results of the triumph of religion.

It is computed, says the Rev. T. P. Hughes, representative of the Church Missionary Society at Peshawur, that 170 millions of the human race profess the religion of Mohammed. In Europe Mohammedanism has been declining for centuries. On the other hand, Islamism is spreading in Africa and India; but while it has gained in numerical strength during the past few years, it has lost and is losing its vital power. Downright infidelity is widespread among the professed followers of the prophet. Mohammed over-legislated, and it is impossible now for Moslems to be tied hand and foot by laws which suited Arabia 1,200 years ago. The whole Turkish Empire is practically closed against missionary effort among Mohammedans, and this is a country which owes its very existence to British money and British blood. Mohammedanism is spreading in Africa because there the natives are ready to embrace any religion which they regard as preferable to their own miserable superstitions; and if Islam becomes a great power in that land, it will be because Christians refuse to enter the open door.

CONVERSIONS TO AND FROM UNITARIANISM.

[A SERMON preached at Strangeways on Sunday morning, Nov. 3, by Rev. J. TOWLE MARRIOTT.]
"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."—Gal. v. 1.

Most of you, my friends, have often read or heard about the incoming of converts to the Unitarian faith from the ranks of Orthodoxy. This is a picture we have seen a good deal of, and which has ceased to move us with surprise when we come across newly-made copies of it. We think it a perfectly natural transition. Some of us have trodden in the way of it ourselves, and we know how simple and necessary a change it was from the evangelical dogmatisms to the large and holy trusts of the heart. Hence we are always expecting new accessions to our Church, and very practically do we work out the feeling in some respects. We do not create and support a sufficient number of colleges and training institutions to supply the needs of our ministry, because we know so well that orthodoxy itself has got a fair number of our future ministers in training. Let them alone and they will come to us in the right time; and come to us, if not equipped with all the fulness of insight and scholarship which distinguishes the best bred sons of Unitarian soil, yet possessed of a special training of their own, and perhaps peculiarly fitted to comprehend that deep eternal bond which, surely as the Lord our God is one Lord, holds in one mystic unity all the religions of men. After pointing out the danger of high birthright of any sort, and illustrating this by a reference to the hereditary possession of large wealth which often hides from men the real uses and sacredness of money, the preacher proceeded: Similarly it may happen, plainly does happen sometimes, that the religious faith that comes down upon us from its having been our fathers' before us, may incline us to [form very superficial notions about religion, its first real, divine message in our hearts and lives. Especially does this indictment stand against us, I think, when Unitarian Christianity is put into the witness box and made to speak. Its plain and simple beauty, its vital meanings, are often greatly lost sight of by its own heirs and heiresses; its union of good will with all earnest doctrine, not understood and little cared for. We may point out how the tide runs in this direction; we may take credit to our religion that it wins over to itself a large number of believers from other churches; but for goodness' sake do not accept that for the main proof of our superiority of faith and Church! Why should we go proving from the action of others, and those for the time being strangers, that we possess better creeds, and a better doctrine of humanity? Glorious as our faith is, in the footmarks it has left upon the past, and in its great affirmations to-day, the reason of its existence in us should be, its helpful personal power, its sweetness in the living heart. The proof that it is divine lies in the question—"Does it help and bless, or does it not?" And I repeat that those who are born to it, and led up to it from their infancy, despite their advantage in some respects, are peculiarly liable to take a shallow view, and form a lukewarm sort of acceptance of Unitarian or any other Christianity.

Now it does occasionally happen that one goes from Unitarianism into the system from which so many are coming over to us. I believe, indeed, that this happens less occasionally than we might suppose, only it is unostentatiously effected, and our eyes not always being wide open, we omit to take a note of it; but occasionally it happens in a conspicuous instance and with a loud noise. A blue light is burned, some imitation of thunder sounds, and with a bitter and tragic denunciation of those he leaves behind, the actor takes his last departure from the stage. When it occurs in this way we begin to think; we see, at any rate, that the rule of being converted hither has its exceptions; and that some men go, if many come. Perhaps the discordant note is struck only to deepen the harmony which it for the moment suspends. And that will be so if we pause and ask ourselves where the defect is, and wherein does this faith and form that we have held with such composure of spirit, fail to speak helpfully to those who once received it gladly and transmitted it, for comfort, to their brethren; what is the cause when they go from us instead of coming here?

Having said so much and eased my conscience, my friends, I feel the more free to speak about what we find this week occupying a good deal of space in the columns of our denominational organs. A son of the soil, a minister amongst us, whose father was also a minister amongst us, has seceded, and intends to enter upon holy orders in the Church of England. He has been led, in the providence of God, to see the truth of the principles of Evangelical Christianity. Now I would always follow such a procedure with deep respect, convinced as I am that, as a rule, it springs from a part of human nature the most solemn, and sacredly belonging to the innermost recesses of the Spirit where God alone can share the life of His child. Nor am I wishful to deny this altogether in the case just now forced upon our attention. But the person who is distinguished by taking this unusual course has himself spoken out so fully and strongly, has expressed his thoughts and feelings about his change with such confidence, and discoursed upon our follies with such a complete absence of reserve, that one is bound to look at things and to ask whether the speaker was not grossly self-deceived, both as to his past religion and surroundings, and as to his future career. The first thing brought heavily against us is that we talk about our being free while we are not: we are fettered by the common opinion; and, under a veil, we have our dogmas, like the rest of them; and the speaker, further on, said he was not going to lose any of his freedom in the English Church. Well, in regard to freedom, of course we can only deal with it comparatively. Absolute freedom, we know, is impossible in any human fellowship. Some common basis must hold men together, or they fall into mere individual particles, like a rope of sand. For simple confessions of faith and life in common, which may make the bond visible to us at once, I have always pleaded as a wholesome safeguard; and I willingly believe that some of us have mistaken freedom for an end instead of only the means to an end. But how can I believe that, in exchanging a ministry of open trust for one which is walled round about with no less than 39 written articles, and with one of the subtlest metaphysical creeds that were ever penned, there is no forfeiting of that natural independence which surely is dear to every self-respecting mind? Practically, perhaps, because the administration there is so relaxed, it may be found a freer atmosphere than the old; but that can only be so after one has deliberately received the assurance from his new friends, or his own heart, that the creeds and articles deny their office, and are warranted not to bind.

We are next told that we are not successful—that we do not touch the hearts of the people as others do. "I preached, I lectured, I went here and there with this modern Gospel. People came, they listened, they went away again—many of them came no more. I could not understand it then; I think I understand it now." That is no disgrace to a man; but is it, on the other hand, the proof that he is wrong in his religious ideas? I said awhile ago that the real proof of the beauty of our faith, and of the exalted character of our church, does not lie in people coming over to us, but in our own spiritual blessings which come in to sanctify our lives from the hand of God. On the same principle, I say, a religion is not condemned because its adherents are few, and people who come to look at us in curiosity pass by on the other side. If every cause had been deserted because it did not thrive, and grow, and bring forth immediate fruits under the hands that served it, where would now have been those grand but slow conquests that have silently, and in steps of long patience and holy toil, enriched the world? If success were the sole test of true prosperity, and only they whose work appeared in large returns which men could see were to be crowned with life to come, I question reverently whether the souls which I love the best, and cherish as my guiding souls, would not mostly have to go down into the pit! From another point of view, indeed, this Christianity itself (whether Unitarian or not) is an unpopular thing, and does not reach the masses—as our friend will again find out when he comes to the other end of his new spell of patience and work. Does he remember that his own words, but leading to the diametrically opposite conclusion, might well have been applied to the Christ whose disciple he still claims to be? "I preached, I lectured, I went here and there with his modern Gospel. People came, they listened, they went away again—many of them came no more." But the Christ remained—that failure never would have aided the suggestion with him to seek a change of ideas and forms by which more disciples might be won to sit at his feet!

Our variety of views, and the negative character of them, are also brought into contempt. We are told that there obtain all sorts of teachings amongst us, and that there is nothing to bind men together; then, that the Unitarian creed is a negative one. The two ideas can hardly be conceived as harmonious, but it is not fair, perhaps, to expect clearness beyond what may be found in the general drift of the discourse before us. There are, alas! too many denials; but our friend is too ready to find them. A better answer than I can write appears in one of our papers (the Inquirer): "If he means by this that it is a negation and nothing more, we affirm that the statement is a misrepresentation. We affirm the love of God to man; we deny His eternal hate. We affirm the divinity of man; we deny his total depravity. We affirm the divinity as well as the humanity of Christ; we deny his godhead. We affirm that God manifests Himself in divers ways; we deny that there is but one revelation of Him. We affirm the moral grandeur of much that is contained in the Bible; we deny that that collection of books is the only volume which contains all things necessary for salvation. We affirm the right and duty of private judgment; we deny the right of any man, or body of men, to set up any standard of infallibility, be it man or book, and bid us bow down to that. We affirm the supremacy of conscience; we deny any other authority than this. Is that expression of Unitarian faith a mere negation? It is an affirmation too."

But I want to ask one question, over and above all these remarks, and it is this: In exchanging old surroundings for new, in giving up the black gown to wear a white one, in going from where people believe one thing to where they believe a thousand other things, with a loud denial of his former doctrine on his lips, and an equally loud profession of his new love, in all this—do you imagine that a man can really change his religion? If we have reverently learned, as I hope we all have, to speak with a due sense of our imperfect knowledge, to leave some space for wonder and awe before the mysteries of life and heaven, confessing that no man has seen God at any time, nor ascended into heaven to measure its happy fields and count the number of the blest, do you think we make these things any less mysterious by going to where men lay claim to understand and describe them altogether? Our moving from place to place, and creed to creed, does not alter one of the eternal facts above us, nor does it really alter our belief in them. For the same brain will go with us in our heads, and the same heart will beat in our bosom. Transform the trappings and the suits of religion as you may, quit the place of heresies and go into the temple which is outwardly privileged and the boasted habitation of a sound faith; yet it is not another and higher religion until your mind becomes more sound than it was and your affections are made truer to the spirit of divine charity. The new exteriors, I will not deny, may help you a little to rise to higher things within, but also they may tend to put back the life and light of God in the soul. And the instance which to-day teaches you and me a lesson, though I would not speak of it unkindly, seems far more calculated to produce the latter effect in its subject—my pen had almost written—in its victim. For it is a bad beginning in any new course of life when you must enter upon it with bitter thoughts about the course that there comes to an end; in religion especially, bad to dwell upon the worst features of our sojourn in the now empty house, and forget the holy hours one spent upon its altar and round its hearth. When a man must go to another church, at the bidding of deep convictions, he is accustomed then to recall the kindness, the strength and joy he used to find in the shelter which he thinks he has outgrown; if he has really held the faith in loving grip, felt its thoughts in his own spirit, I decline to believe it possible for him to part from it with other than words of tender and regretful farewell. He must see, too, that he does not completely give up the early religion, all religions in their deepest significance being one, in spirit and life—one in many ways. I said I believe there are many who go out from us and settle down easily in Trinitarian systems; but who are they? They are those who have not felt these simple realities personally, or touched them with their own hands. They teach us in their going that the faith is only valuable when it is intensely loved for the prize which our Christianity surely is; they form a warning against our being shallow when we utter the memory of God's great goodness; and, despite their own desire, call us to deepen within us the fibres which never took root in them. They make us think of the parable of good seeds that fell among stones and thorns on impoverished ground, and when the sun was up they withered away; and God helping us, they quicken our faithfulness to the work which is given us to do, in a simpler trust to the Highest for His blessing, either now or after many days.

MINISTERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this society was held at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, on Thursday, October 31st. A letter was received from the president, Mr. Hopgood, regretting that he was not able to be present at the meeting, and expressing the interest that he felt in the welfare of the society. Mr. J. A. Kenrick, vice-president, took the chair, and letters of apology were also read from the Rev. John Wilson, one of the vice-presidents; the Rev. James Taplin, and Mr. Mott and Mr. New.

The treasurer's report gave a favourable view of the state of the finances. The report of the directors is subjoined.

Mr. Hopgood was re-elected president, and the Rev. John Wilson and Mr. J. A. Kenrick vice-presidents. Mr. Kenrick and Dr. Russell were requested to continue in office as treasurer and secretary, and Mr. Bolton and Mr. H. F. Osler as auditors. Mr. G. H. Kenrick was elected trustee in the place of the late Mr. Arch. Kenrick.

The following is the annual report submitted to the meeting:—

On the occasion of each annual meeting the directors have spoken of steady increase in the usefulness of the society, and not unfrequently have referred to the special evidence they had received, in communications from beneficiary members, of the help and comfort which the society has been privileged to confer. The year now ended has been in no degree behind its predecessors in this respect. A considerable increase has been made in the grants—the amount this year exceeding that of last year by the sum of £120. In two instances, in the course of the past eighteen months, a contribution from the funds of the society has been again made, for the purpose of affording the recipients an opportunity of recovering lost health by relaxation and travel, during a period of temporary retirement from the active duties of their profession. In one of the cases the directors have had the gratification of receiving an assurance of the benefit which the minister has derived from the help afforded him in so timely a manner; and they have the satisfaction of believing that, through the means which this society places at their disposal, they have been enabled to restore a respected minister to a considerable share of activity and usefulness. In the other instance, in which the grant was made last year, although the result has been less satisfactory, the contribution afforded relief from anxiety, and enabled the recipient to derive greater advantage from his respite from labour, than it would otherwise have been possible for him to receive; he has now returned to ministerial work, and the directors trust will yet feel the good effect of his relaxation.

The directors have again to acknowledge, with expressions of sincere gratitude, liberal additions to the yearly grant, in gifts of money made for immediate distribution. The president, Mr. Hopgood, has augmented the annual grants by a donation of £100, his present gift being the fourth in yearly succession. Mr. S. Sharpe, in like manner, has made a third yearly donation of a similar sum. The £200 thus placed in their hands, together with £10 given by the treasurer, Mr. Kenrick, for a particular purpose, the directors have divided among the recipients, in accordance with the desire of the generous benefactors, and it is hardly necessary to say how highly so welcome an addition to the grants has been appreciated.

The total amount of the grants made during the past year is £1,050, forming, with the addition already referred to, the handsome sum of £1,260, by far the largest amount hitherto disbursed among the beneficiary members.

The following table shows the grants made in each successive year since the formation of the Ministers' Benevolent Society:—

Recipients.			Recipients.
In 1855...	£20 to	1	In 1867...	£450 to	15
„ 1856...	50 „	3	„ 1868...	470 „	15
„ 1857...	60 „	4	„ 1869...	490 „	15
„ 1858...	95 „	5	„ 1870...	650 „	16
„ 1859...	165 „	7	„ 1871...	770 „	18
„ 1860...	185 „	7	„ 1872...	770 „	18
„ 1861...	260 „	9	„ 1873...	830 „	20
„ 1862...	270 „	9	„ 1874...	930 „	22
„ 1863...	330 „	11	„ 1875...	880* „	21
„ 1864...	390 „	13	„ 1876...	850* „	20
„ 1865...	330 „	10	„ 1877...	930 „	21
„ 1866...	330 „	11

* Together with £100 donations for immediate distribution.
† And £100 given as above.
‡ And £225 given as above. The secretary is responsible for an error of £10 in this amount, as stated last year.

Three legacies have been reported to the treasurer during the year; viz.: one of £300 from the late Miss Tingcombe, of Bath; one of £200 from the late Miss Carpenter, of London; and one of £300 from the late Mrs. Odgers, of Bath. The usual congregational collection has been received from Horsham, amounting, this year, to £4. 1s. A collection from this congregation has been received annually since the year 1854.

Four recipients have been placed on the books during the year, one of them receiving a grant to provide for a temporary occasion only. A grant made last year, under similar circumstances, has not been renewed, the minister having returned to his duties for the present. One recipient, the Rev. W. R. Hughes, has been removed by death; he was attacked by disease, while yet in early life, and his chief dependence during a protracted and painful illness, was upon the assistance which he derived from this Society; his wife and family will look to the same source of help in their sad bereavement.

The present number of recipients is twenty-four, of whom fifteen are widows. Eight new beneficiary members have been added, making a total of one hundred and fifty-two.

The directors announce with much regret, that it will be the duty of the members at the annual meeting, to elect a new trustee. Since the last annual meeting the Society has lost a valued friend by the death of Mr. Archibald Kenrick, who held the office of trustee since the first annual meeting of the Society in 1853.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.

ON Wednesday, October 30th, the Rev. Dr. Martineau delivered the inaugural lecture for the Session 1878-9 to a crowded audience in University Hall, Gordon-square. The address commenced with a brief reference to the recent memorial addressed by the authorities of the College to the President of the Council, which stated that the College is founded for the free study of theology. That of course implied belief in a God and religion. Comparative theology was the study of religion on its human side, but theology implies more than this, the study of the nature of God which must go on and adapt itself to different ages and nations. Religion and morality considered metaphysically and ethically had a different origin, but in Christianity they blended and became one. The lecturer then reviewed the theories of Matthew Arnold, the philosophy of Mill, and the recent Essays of Frederick Harrison, and showed that they failed to solve the deepest question of theology and life. Quoting the language of earnest religious aspiration he showed how impossible it was to translate it into the language of Agnosticism or Positivism, and concluded a remarkable address with an expression of intense faith in a personal God. It is due to Dr. Martineau to say that the above does not pretend to be even an outline of his address, which, we are glad to announce, will be published in a few days.

ABERDARE: OLD MEETING.—The first of a series of four lectures, illustrative of Unitarian principles, was delivered here last Sunday evening, by the minister, the Rev. W. James, B.A. The lectures had been announced by bills exhibited in places of resort in the neighbourhood, the result of which was that the first subject, "Why I am a Unitarian," attracted an audience that completely filled the chapel. The next lecture, on "The Nature of Salvation," will be delivered on Sunday week. It is hoped that some degree of the interest awakened will be maintained during the continuance of the course.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT IN JAPAN.—Several months ago an application was received by the Mayor of Manchester (Mr. Alderman Grundy) from His Excellency Kusumoto Masataka, prefect of Yeddo, Japan (through Mr. F. V. Dicking, of Yokohama), for certain information relative to the municipal government of this city. The Mayor forwarded a number of documents and a variety of general information bearing upon the subject; and in reply His Worship has received from His Excellency the Prefect of Yeddo a communication written in the flowery style of Oriental correspondence. The communication is enclosed in a beautiful Japanese casket, adorned with gold and silver flowers and other objects in relief.

MOUNTAINEER'S PRAYER.

LUCY LARCOM.

GIRD me with the strength of Thy steadfast hills !
 The speed of Thy streams give me !
 In the spirit that calms, with the life that thrills,
 I would stand or run for Thee.
 Let me be Thy voice, or Thy silent power,—
 As the cataract or the peak,—
 An eternal thought in my earthly hour,
 Of the living God to speak.

Clothe me in the rose-tints of Thy skies
 Upon morning summits laid;
 Robe me in the purple and gold that flies
 Thy shuttle of light and shade;
 Let me rise and rejoice in Thy smile aright,
 As mountains and forests do;
 Let me welcome Thy twilight and Thy night,
 And wait for Thy dawn anew !

Give me of the brook's faith, joyously sung
 Under clank of its icy chain !
 Give me of the patience that hides among
 Thy hill-tops in mist and rain !
 Lift me up from the clod; let me breathe Thy breath;
 Thy beauty and strength give me !
 Let me lose both the name and the meaning of death
 In the life that I share with Thee !

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

ORTHODOX GENEROSITY.

It is no new thing to hear of Orthodox Generosity stopping short of Unitarians. Another case in illustration of the rule is just now afforded us, hailing from Derby. Mr. BEMROSE, the retiring mayor, is not one of the mayors who belong to our household of faith. But he is a man of liberal hospitality, and, during his civic year, it is said, has shed much lustre on the office and the borough. As his year of office drew to a close, he determined to invite—according to the newspapers—all the Sunday-school teachers of the town to a party in their honour, to be held at the Drill Hall on Monday week. This was a very graceful proposal, and the prospect of accepting the invitation of the Mayor was no doubt deeply appreciated by those engaged in Sunday-school work—a race whose self-denying and beneficent services as a rule do not win much recognition in high quarters. Mr. BEMROSE, who, as we are told, has himself been an earnest worker in the cause of Sunday schools, is to be congratulated on the happy idea of identifying his presence with them on the auspicious public occasion referred to. From many points of view, too, the idea was successfully carried out. We gather from a local report that, “the invitation of his worship was so largely responded to that about seventeen hundred persons were present at the Drill Hall on Monday evening, of whom we believe more than one half were Dissenters. The gathering was quite unique in character, and one could hardly look upon the vast assemblage without feeling what a powerful engine the Sunday school is in improving the moral and religious condition of the people.” The speeches were of a very practical character, one among them being given by Sir CHARLES READ, the Chairman of the London School Board, who addressed himself generally to the subject of religious education. Altogether, it is evident, the gathering must have been of exceptional interest and power.

We should have been glad if the evening had not possessed the additional feature of exclusion; but such a fact, now, as often before, has to be put into the other scale. Like most men, the MAYOR OF DERBY casts a shadow; and his shadow, unfortunately, followed him into the festive place, and was thrown long and dark across the success of the proceedings. Two denominations were distinguished by being left outside in the October cold, and these were the Swedenborgians and the Unitarians. The blessing was not for them. At their heresies the MAYOR felt obliged to draw the line. Not receiving the usual invitation card, and feeling naturally that “a man's a man for a' that,” and that even Unitarians come under some religious denomination or other, Mr. JOHN GREEN, the superintendent of Friargate School, wrote to the agent saying that, despite the promise that all denominations were to be called to the feast, neither he nor any of his co-helpers had received tickets. To this letter reply was sent, “pro the MAYOR,” that “Your school was not amongst the invited on Monday next,” and explaining that the newspapers had conveyed an erroneous impression in saying all schools were to be invited. Upon this an exchange of sentiments passed between Mr. GREEN and the MAYOR, who wrote, among other things—“I put it to you whether, considering your theological tenets; and the whole tone and character of the meeting, I should have been acting conscientiously and according to the true principles of courtesy, in asking your attendance, or whether you would have been at ease in accepting the invitation.” Some correspondence appears in the newspapers on the subject, and in one of them the matter is commented on in an excellent editorial paragraph. The writer regrets that “a grand and truly catholic idea has been in a measure marred by a spirit of something like bigotry, which we thought would hardly have been exhibited in these days by a gentleman who has the honour to occupy the post of chief magistrate, and who, as such, represents the whole town. . . . Such an exclusion implies a great deal more than we care at present to indicate; but we cannot help expressing our deep regret that this untoward and unhappy incident, which it will be seen has aroused a very angry feeling, should have marred what was otherwise a grand conception.”

Of course it is a delicate question to say how a mayor should dispense his hospitalities, and at what bounds his kindness may be allowed to stop. Of the conscientiousness of the motive implied in the little narrative we have laid before our readers, we feel no doubt. The MAYOR OF DERBY has not yet learned that Unitarian Sunday school teachers have part and lot in the Christianity of Christ; and when the occasion is his own, he has a perfect right to leave them out, and thus express his antipathy to their views. Yet all this makes the matter all the more significant. We can understand men if they turn from us in anger, and when they are asserting the rivalry of the creeds; but when men are swayed by the impulses of natural generosity we are wont to believe them better than their creeds. We have so often rejoiced to see the charitable heart, with sweet forgetfulness of doctrinal logic, rise into a truly catholic spirit, that we perhaps began to count on it too soon. Narrowness shows itself more plainly where, like a blot on the white page, it stands out of a man's generous mood and mars his better deed. Then it is more painful to us, because it seems to go more deep. And it is in this divided feeling of commendation and regret that we refer to Mr. BEMROSE's generousities, which with one hand encouraged a great and holy cause, and with the other conspicuously put under a ban one or two earnest sections of its helpers. Many of those who were present and enjoyed the good things, surmounted by the smile of their kindly host, must by this time, we think, have felt the unpleasant reflection that his eyes saw distinctions which the “other, larger eyes than ours,” do not see; and that their neighbours in the same labour of love might, with common advantage, have been privileged to share in the welcome.

The late Rev. Titus Lloyd.

ANOTHER venerable and much respected minister has been called to his long home, in the person of the Rev. Titus Lloyd, of Nottage and Wick, who died October 23rd, in his 84th year. On the previous evening he had gone to bed in his ordinary health, and apparently in better spirits than usual, but on the morrow about ten he was found dead and cold, having passed quietly away in his sleep. Mr. Lloyd was a gentleman who was very much respected not only among the members of his own flocks, but also by all who knew him, to whatever denomination they might belong, and his sudden demise has cast quite a gloom over the neighbourhood in which he resided. The old familiar form that had gone in and out among them for so many years will be long missed.

Mr. Lloyd was born in the parish of Bridell, near Cardigan, in May, 1795, and was the son of the Rev. Evan Lloyd, who became minister of Nottage and Wick in January, 1808, and died July 30th, 1847. In an obituary notice in Yr Ymfynydd for 1847, we find that Mr. E. Lloyd was a member of the Pembrokeshire militia in 1797, when the French effected a landing at Fishguard, and was present when they surrendered to Earl Cawdor. After he came to Glamorganshire (1808) he did a great deal in the way of mission work, and his name is frequently found in the early numbers of the Monthly Repository.

Mr. Titus Lloyd probably began to preach about 55 years ago, but was not regularly ordained until some years later. His ordination took place at Wick when his father and the Rev. J. E. Jones, of Bridgend, officiated, but in what year we have not been able to ascertain. During the long years of his ministry he proved himself a faithful and devoted servant of Christ, and won the affection and esteem of his congregation. Though Wick is situated no less than nine miles away, he seldom, under any circumstances, failed to be at his post. During the last year or two he has been assisted by his eldest son, but so late as the Sunday before his death he did duty at Bridgend, a distance of six miles to and fro. His mortal remains were interred on Saturday in the same grave as his wife, in the burial ground attached to the chapel at Wick, the following ministers taking part in the funeral service—the Revs. George, Aberdare; James, Aberdare; Evans, Gellionen; Davies, Cefn; Davies, Allt-y-placa; and Jones, Lampeter. On the Sunday morning a funeral sermon was preached to a large congregation at Nottage chapel, by the Rev. R. J. Jones, Aberdare, from Daniel xii., 3.—“They that turn many to righteousness [shall shine], as the stars for ever and ever.”

THE BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

ON Tuesday evening a meeting of this Union was held in the Memorial Hall. In the absence of the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., president, the Rev. JAS. BLACK, M.A., vice president, took the chair, and there were present the Revs. Chas. Wicksteed, B.A., T. Lloyd Jones, John McDowell, Wm. Harrison, W. G. Cadman, John Moore, Dr. Marcus, Messrs. E. C. Harding, E. Golland, Thos. Diggles, J. H. Reynolds, Jas. Bennett, W. Hadwen, D. Noble, Jas. Odgers, John Hadfield, and J. H. Reynolds, jun.

The CHAIRMAN explained that Mr. Gaskell's absence arose from a slight cold and a wish to keep his strength for the duty he had to perform the following evening in the mission service at Cross-street Chapel. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. WICKSTEED then read a paper, his subject, as announced, being “An Attempt to Define the Actual Historic Attitude of the Roman Catholic Church towards the Translation and Circulation of the Scriptures.” He showed that in the early centuries the practice of the Christian Church, and for many centuries afterwards that of the Roman Catholic Church, was to encourage and promote the reading of the Scriptures. The more modern attitude of the Roman Church was an afterthought; the reading of the Scriptures being prohibited, or limited to persons duly certified by the bishop, or by the priest and confessor, as a precaution against the reformed doctrines. Such prohibition had emanated rather from local than general authorities. There was no decree of any council on the subject. He had seen it stated that such a decree had been passed by the Council of Toledo, but he had found no trace of it in examining the best authority on councils. The committee which sat after the close of the Council of Trent, however, had issued restrictive directions as to the use of the Bible. The lesson to be learned from the action of the Roman Church in this matter was that while she preserved the appearance of liberality in cases where she had no power to exercise compulsion, she was now, as she had always been, ready when she had the power, to use the most tyrannical means for securing her authority. Mr. Wicksteed's paper was enriched with an account of the exhortations of early Fathers, especially John Chrysostom, as to the duty of studying the scriptures, and by comprehensive references to historical authorities in connection with the several points of his subject.

Dr. MARCUS said that he had listened to the paper with deep interest and had learnt many things which were new to him, as that about the Committee of Trent. He felt much alarm at the position of the Roman Catholic Church. It might be true that the Church of Rome had never issued any direct and absolute prohibition, but its influence had been so used as practically to amount to an absolute prohibition. And as a church she could not change, and would need, therefore, carefully to be watched.

Mr. D. REES asked what the attitude of the Church of Rome was towards the circulation of the scriptures in such countries as Spain?

The Rev. T. LLOYD JONES moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Wicksteed for his exhaustive paper, which Mr. E. C. HARDING seconded. This being carried with acclamation, Mr. WICKSTEED replied, thanking the audience for the kind reception given to his paper, and stating in answer to Mr. Rees' question that the action of the Catholic Church in Spain was undoubtedly restrictive.

A MISSION SERVICE.

ON Wednesday evening, a mission service was held in Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, in connection with the Manchester District Unitarian Association. The seats on the floor of the chapel were comfortably filled. The service was opened with the hymn "All people that on earth do dwell," sung to the Old Hundred, followed by a prayer, by the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., after which he delivered an address. In former times, he said, it had been a charge against Unitarianism that it was coldly intellectual, too much given to negation, and indifferent to the condition of the masses lying outside of church fellowship. So much intellectual work had Unitarian ministers to do in clearing the ground for a free theology, that perhaps there was some little truth in the accusation. The time had now come, however, when, while they continued to address the judgments of men, they should seek to enlist their feelings on the side of Christian truth and piety. The aged might give counsel, men of business of their means, the poor could give of their wisdom in devising means to the end, and the young could give of their labour. It is the duty of all to do something, so that at last when called upon to answer what sacrifices they had made they might not be speechless. A canticle having been sung, the Rev. C. Wicksteed, B.A., delivered an address on the uplifting and protective power of the Church—the term church being taken in its widest sense, as representing the aggregate of those means by which Christian society seeks to create a pure spiritual atmosphere, to cherish every noble purpose, along with an accordant life. Our forefathers spoke much of the "means of grace"—a very good expression which we might vary, but on which we could scarcely improve. If we are not looking to a rock that is higher than we, striving after a higher and completer life, we are surely deteriorating. What is to save us; to keep us abreast of our best and highest? Nothing but the living in the constant presence of holy and heavenly influences. We in these days are losing the high estimate that used to be put on "means." The protective and uplifting power of the services of the church is too much neglected. Mr. Wicksteed then spoke of the great privilege of the Christian minister, who, in realising the truth which he had to proclaim, might seem to be at times on the Mount of Transfiguration, from which he returned feeling the uplifting power of religion, and enabled to live a less ignoble and selfish life. At other times, when he came to the pulpit cheerless and desponding, he felt his heart revived by the hymn and the uplifting word of the Scriptures. This ought to be true of the worshippers also. Mr. Wicksteed concluded an impressive address with asserting strongly his belief in the "means of grace," and the culture of the social feelings. He believed the Mission to be engaged in a holy work. God speed the Mission, and this Mission Service! This address was followed by another canticle; and then the Rev. Dr. Sadler, in earnest words, pointed out the need of renewals of the inward life. There was first of all a need of renewal from day to day. Good influences are around us all, from which we may derive spiritual nutriment. In books and in our memories we can associate with wise and high-minded men, whose example will make us discontented with our selfish lives. Every day we should seek this refreshment. But there was need of another kind of renewal. Custom had the effect of turning our best exercises into routine. Piety was apt to degenerate from oft-repeated repetitions, and men, therefore, needed fresh stirrings up of their desires after an ideal of holiness. Dr. Sadler pointed to the transforming influence which had often been brought to bear upon men by a single incident, citing the examples of the Carmelite Lawrence, Dr. Channing, Theodore Parker, and J. S. Mill.

At the close of the service, which lasted till after nine o'clock, an offertory was taken in aid of the funds of the Association, and realised about £8.

SCOTTISH UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

DISCUSSION ON THE NAME "CHRISTIAN."

ON Sunday week the Rev. Henry Ierson, M.A., Secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, preached two sermons in St. Mark's Unitarian Chapel, Edinburgh, on behalf of the Scottish Association. That in the morning was on "The Unity of God," and that in the evening on "The Unitarian Position." Both services were well attended, and the discourses were listened to with keen interest as the powerful words of the preacher came home to the hearts of the hearers. We are pleased to record the fact that the evening discourse is to be printed for the benefit of a wider public than listened to it.

On the Monday afternoon, at three o'clock, the subscribers' annual meeting was held in the same place, when the reports from the various churches were read by the secretary (Mr. A. L. Knox), which represented a fair year's work well done under difficult conditions. The report from South St. Mungo-street, Glasgow, stated that in spite of bad trade, the loss of members by death, migration, and emigration, the numbers and condition were no worse than last year. The library had been considerably enlarged and a catalogue printed, a social improvement society and discussion class founded, and the Sunday school somewhat improved. The report from Aberdeen was hopeful, and indicated a considerable improvement in the congregation since the settlement of the Rev. G. T. Walters, and showed that all the related institutions were working well. Paisley reported faithful work well done, and some internal improvement, and some gain in public estimation, though not much growth in numbers. The members are devoted and faithful, the Sunday services well attended, and the week-evening lectures resulting in much good being done. Perth reported an improvement in the attendance on the services, and that prejudices are gradually going down in the minds of the people of the district. Dundee reported that, considering every circumstance, progress is being made, and that exertions are being made to pay off the annual ground rent of £35, which, when accomplished, would enable the congregation to be self-supporting.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was then proceeded with: President, Rev. R. B. Drummond, B.A., of Edinburgh; secretary, Mr. A. L. Knox; treasurer, Mr. John Tuckwell; vice-presidents, Revs. F. W. Walters, William Mitchell, G. T. Walters, Wm. Bennett, Messrs. John Pullas, A. Adamson, J. Bethune, D. Jobson, James Shepherd, W. Rankine, W. G. Milligan, J. Warren, and Wm. Glen.

A discussion then ensued, on the motion of Mr. JAMES PATERSON, to remove the word "Christian" from the name of the Association, so that in future its title should be "The Scottish Unitarian Association." In support of his motion Mr. Paterson contended that there was only another Association in connection with the body which called itself Christian, and he thought it was needless. It was not that he was in antagonism to the word, but as it was a constant theme with other churches to complain that no church had yet attained the ideal of Christianity, he thought it could hardly be contended that this Association had done so, and we should not retain a name to which we had not come up. If we were really, truly Christian, then it would be right, but in the circumstances, not. Besides, the Association was originally and simply known by the name Unitarian, and he wanted to return to the original description.

The Rev. W. BENNETT seconded the motion. He hoped no feeling would be roused by the matter being brought forward. He only wanted the question ventilating. To call ourselves Christians was opposed to use and wont, as other churches did not call themselves Christians, but simply Presbyterian, Baptist, or Congregational. It seemed as if we were grasping after the name, as if we were afraid we should not be allowed the name unless we called ourselves by it. He himself had been twitted on account of its being on the front of his church. Let us cultivate the Christian spirit, and never mind the name. Unitarian was a wider name than Christian, as the latter excluded quite a number of good men who were Theists, &c., and by dropping the name we should enlarge the scope of our aims. The plain fact was, that the term Christian was a remnant of the old superstition which regarded Christ as more than man, and for Unitarians to call themselves Christians was an incongruity. Unitarian was a far higher name, and to qualify it by Christian was to limit and lower it.

The Rev. WILLIAM MITCHELL, speaking in opposition to the motion, said that he saw no reason for giving up the name. He had not found that it at all interfered with freedom of thought or expression in any way. It did not pledge us to any dogma of any kind. As for its limiting and lowering the life of the Association in calling ourselves after the name of a man, he was not aware that Burns's clubs limited and lowered the poetic aims of their members, as they were free to range through all the realms of poetry as well as others. As for their not having attained the Christian standard, that was a reason for retaining the name, as it left us something to aim at, something to strive up to. Besides, to give it up was to cut ourselves off from the past—from the line of heroes and martyrs who had glorified the name, and made it a sacred possession for all times. Surely we were not going to sever ourselves from a history whose children we were. But the term was not the calling ourselves after the name of a man. Christ was not the personal name of Jesus of Nazareth, that dearest and highest of all the names among men, as the embodiment of the grandest piety, purity, and holiness—it was the name of his office, that of one consecrated by God to holiness, and surely they were not going to deny that it was a good and glorious thing to be devoted to holiness and the service of a holy God.

The Rev. HENRY IERSON asked permission as a visitor to say a word or two at this point. He felt strongly on this matter, and it was no use denying it. In reference to the other associations spoken of not being called Christian, it was taken for granted that they were Christians, and he knew no instance where this fact could be questioned. And it was another matter altogether from taking the name when once it had been adopted, for that would indicate a denial of the principle. His own experience in connection with the Freethinking Religionists of the country made him strongly in favour of the principle and name of Christianity. And as the mover of the motion was in favour of the broad principles of Christian sympathy which had led Professor Newman to join the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, he thought it was hardly worth while raising the question.

Mr. W. HORTON, of Glasgow, felt strongly on the matter, and declared that if the Association was not Christian he had no business to be a member of it.

Mr. JOHN TUCKWELL read from old reports of the Association to show that it had always been called by its present name.

After a little more conversation on minor points, Mr. Paterson withdrew his motion, and the meeting passed on to the next business, which was a motion by Mr. KNOX for some alterations in Rule iv. of the Association, and which was adopted unanimously. The meeting then came to an end.

PUBLIC SOIREE AND SPEECHES.

On the evening of the same day a public soirée was held in the same place, the President (the Rev. R. B. Drummond, B.A.) in the chair, and there were present the Revs. W. Mitchell, W. Bennett, A. Webster, H. Williamson, H. Ierson, F. W. Walters, and G. T. Walters. Mr. Hyndman was also present as representative of the Irish Unitarian Association, and others. About 150 sat down to tea, and afterwards the numbers were considerably increased.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, spoke of the aims of the Association, and, referring to Mr. Lecky's remarks on Unitarianism in his History of England in the 18th Century, said they could not claim to be an important sect in the way of possessing great wealth, having numerous adherents, or wielding great political influence; nor could they claim to be an aggressive sect in the sense of building new churches or engaging in large missionary enterprises—they had not the means; but he did not think they had been backward in attacking error wherever it was found. He would, however, be a very sanguine and zealous person who could please himself with the prospect of Unitarianism absorbing every other organisation, with perhaps a few Calvinists clamouring outside for admission. The Association laboured for the ultimate triumph of that religious liberalism and liberal religiousness, that spirit of true religion freed from the narrowness of sect and the trammels of dogma which was at this moment leavening all the churches. Mr. Drummond then referred to a passage in the Life of George Combe, remarking that the reaction which Mr. Combe prophesied was now in full swing. The clergy of the present day, he said, felt that if they would retain their influence they must keep up with the advancing intelligence of their flocks. The object of the Association was to forward in every way they could the great liberal movement, which was certain to go forward with or without their aid, and to guide it to great and beneficent issues; to maintain the sacredness of individual conviction, and to assert the utmost liberty of speech, while they reserved that tone of reverence which was ever due to great questions.

Mr. D. JOHNSON, of Dundee, spoke to a vote of thanks to the Rev. Henry Ierson. In thanking him for his able discourses of the previous day he said that he had no need to criticise or eulogise those discourses. Dealing as that in the morning did with the fundamental principle of our faith, he was sure that it would help those who heard it to realise the comfort and support such a faith could give in the dark and gloomy hours of life, and leave no regret in the minds of any in the hour of death that they had done their best to advance truth and overthrow error. The sermon in the evening showed that we Unitarians are the last of a long line of Protestors. As others had protested against error in other forms, so we protested against salvation by faith alone, against the common doctrine of atonement, and other falsities. Mr. Johnson went on to praise the power with which our position had been stated, and ended by saying that Unitarians in Scotland were an isolated body, and complained that our ministers did not exchange pulpits sufficiently, and thus draw the congregations more closely together. It was, therefore, a great treat when a man of the ability of Mr. Ierson paid them a visit.

The Rev. HENRY IERSON, in responding to the vote of thanks, expressed his gratification in being of service to the Association. Any one could see easily that building up a Unitarian congregation in Scotland was a tough work, there being so much to contend against. He asked the audience to look upon him as the representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and he would speak to them as such. He always looked with keen interest upon the movement in Scotland. He would not say that the committee in London had felt no disappointment in connection with the growth of congregations there, for, however bright the prospect when the sun of promise shone, somehow a Scotch mist was sure to intervene occasionally and cut off the prospect. But what was the way to carry on the movement? Some people dream that the world would get liberated apart from anything they would do. In fact, some who considered themselves very advanced talked downright nonsense. Some in reading scientific books found that the theological notions of creation, and what not, were false, and they got the idea that the clergy knew all about it, and that they had been juggling in the pulpit. What was the result? That they lost all faith in ministers, churches, and religion altogether. And the way in which books like Supernatural Religion had been answered looked like this in the view of many. Thus is the people's faith in religion being destroyed. Is it safe to trust to these influences of scepticism merely? Others thought that liberal preachers in the Established Church would bring all right. But is it in the nature of things that these things should be dealt with in a straight forward way in St. James'-street pulpit, or Westminster Abbey? The liberal clergy were not only looking at truth, they were also considering their vicarages and livings, and consequently whatever concessions were made, they always came out to be good orthodoxy after all. Only Free Christians could teach a free Christianity, and dare to speak the truth all round. Last century a broad church movement took place, and some hundreds of the clergy actually petitioned Parliament to be relieved from the strain upon their consciences of signing the 39 articles. But when Parliament refused to relieve them they stayed in their vicarages, and left no mark behind—all but two or three, of whom Theophilus Lindsey was one, and they had become the fathers of a number of free churches. If I had some of these gentlemen present, said Mr. Ierson, I would talk to them plainly, and point out to them the false position they occupy. It is not safe to leave the liberalising of the times to the haphazard of science, or these falsely placed clergymen. We are not so paltry a power as some people imagine. We are in the line of martyrs and heroes of the past, and we are doing a greater work than some people imagine. And if we mean what we say about the brotherhood of man, we surely have a great practical work to do. In the New Testament the religious side is mostly taken for granted, and the essence of the teachings of Christ and his apostles is that we do what we can to make real this brotherhood with all the power we have. Can we reproach other churches unless we are doing what we can to uplift mankind? If we are advanced in our views let us prove it by practical earnestness. The speaker then referred to the fact that it was in that church that he heard the first Unitarian sermon he ever listened to, and contrasted his feelings then and now. He concluded by contending that in doctrine, in theology, we are not only not like the orthodox, but in utter contrast to them, but he trusted in spirit, in reverence, and in piety, we were the same at bottom.

The CHAIRMAN then read a letter from Mrs. Soule, of Dunfermline, apologising for inability to be present, and called upon the Rev. HENRY WILLIAMSON to give a welcome to the visitors. The speaker began by recalling the past to the minds of his hearers, when George Harris and others had to do battle for the faith in Scotland. They had left this impress on the hearts of men, and constantly was he meeting with men who traced back their conversion to the Unitarian faith to Mr. Harris. He then dwelt upon the good work which Mrs. Soule was doing in Dunfermline, and believed that by unremitting labour she would build up a good cause in that town. He pointed out how, by establishing churches in different centres of population, our people when they have to migrate from one place to another might find a religious home in connection with their own faith, who else would be lost to us. He then tendered a hearty welcome to the visitor from Ireland.

Mr. HYNDMAN responded in a speech full of humour, and maintained that Unitarianism, while insisting on the great essentials of faith, yet did not insist on unanimity of opinion. Therefore we are bound to mutual toleration and amiability towards one another.

The Rev. GEORGE T. WALTERS said that other churches had taught men that they were poor and miserable creatures, having no hope, save through faith in a crucified Saviour. Those churches were built upon a foundation of sand. The one firm foundation upon which to build religious faith was the living and throbbing heart of humanity. Was not the living God exerting His energy to-day? Did not the divine breath still flow through men, inspiring them with high thoughts and noble purposes? Other churches preached a Living Past and a Dead Present. The mission of our churches should be to proclaim to men that God's word was ever being written and ever being spoken. Our mission should be to persuade men to let the dead past bury its dead, and to act in the living present by the power of that eternal spirit that ever seizes upon the willing mind and makes it a mouthpiece for the utterance of God's unfailing word of truth, liberty, and love. The true mission of a church in the present day was to preach the soul, to preach humanity, and to preach the living God, whose presence was with us evermore, and whose voice might yet be heard speaking through nature and through man.

The Rev. WILLIAM MITCHELL said that we have around us orthodoxy officially as narrow, bitter, and hard as ever, and yet it is breaking up visibly before our eyes. We see in the confusion of men's minds that they do not know where to look for support when what had upheld them in the past was giving way beneath them. Now this was a sad state of things, for when religion decayed, morality, on which the social fabric rested, would be sure to decay too. By religion he did not mean some phantasm called the religion of humanity, but a trust in and love of God our Father, to whom we were immediately responsible, and with whom we could consciously commune. When this religion decayed, however enlightened the mind and bright or keen the intelligence, the power was apt in time to pass from conscience. And many at the present day were repelled so strongly by theology, that the reaction was carrying them beyond us to Secularism, for unfortunately, in most cases, they had no chance of hearing the claims put forth of a faith that was at once reverent and rational, and free and spiritual at the same time. After dwelling on this matter at length, the speaker pointed out that, while it was the work of this Association to direct the thought of those around us who are waking up to the errors of orthodoxy into a rightful channel, the Executive had not the means furnished them by which they could do more than they are doing, and a great opportunity is thus being lost. He entered into a statement of the financial condition of the Association, and showed how, by every member of the churches in Scotland doing each a little, what could be done, and closed with an earnest appeal to those who were present to begin the work.

During the evening the proceedings were enlivened by the singing of several fine choruses, and the performance of pieces of music by the choir of St. Mark's Church. The proceedings ended with the usual votes of thanks.

BIRMINGHAM: HOSPITAL SUNDAY.—On Sunday week collections were made in the various churches and other places of worship in Birmingham on behalf of the Queen's Hospital, to which institution the proceeds this year are to be given exclusively. The following are the returns of the Unitarian Churches: Church of the Messiah (heading the list), £320. 10s.; Old Meeting House, £136. 2s. 7d.; Church of the Saviour, £130. 4s.; Newhall Hill, £24. 0s. 4½d.

HEYWOOD.

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. JOHN FOX.

ON Saturday evening, the 26th ult., the members and friends of the Unitarian Chapel, Heywood, had a social tea meeting for the purpose of presenting to the Rev. J. Fox, their minister, a testimonial as a small token of their esteem. Mr. S. Frith presided. The presentation consisted of a beautiful photograph of the chapel, very neatly framed in the Oxford style, and bore the following inscription:—"Unitarian Chapel, Heywood. Presented to the Rev. John Fox, on the occasion of his leaving Heywood for Newark, he having been their first minister, and having laboured acceptably among them for over 14 years." In addition to the above Mr. Fox was also presented with a purse of gold, subscribed by members of the congregation, containing £20.

The proceedings were commenced with a glee by the choir, after which

The CHAIRMAN, in a brief address, said they had met for the purpose of presenting their respected minister, Mr. Fox, with a testimonial for the valuable services he had rendered among them for the last 14 years. He then called upon Mr. John Chadwick to make the presentation.

Mr. CHADWICK said that when he looked back to the time when Mr. Fox came among them, and to the meeting now, he thought they had been very successful indeed. It brought to mind the time when they used to meet in "Coach-turning," where perhaps not more than half-a-dozen persons would come to listen to the Unitarian sermon. They certainly had made very great progress since that time. They removed from there to the little school in Mossfield, and, after a little time, they built the present church they now occupied. Of course as time went on it was found necessary that they should have a minister of their own, and the choice fell upon Mr. Fox. Since that time, continued the speaker, I am happy to say, he has been of very great service to us. Mr. Fox is a gentleman that has risen from a humble to a very honourable position, and I can esteem him all the more for it. I am sure it is a very great credit to him, and also a credit to us to have had such a man among us. Of course we shall be called upon to appoint a successor to Mr. Fox, and the probabilities are that we shall not get one to serve us so well as he has done. He has been a very useful man among us, and has conducted himself very creditably. I have come to the chapel many times on Sunday mornings with a heavy heart, but I have been able to go away revived and strengthened by the words of Mr. Fox; and now (addressing Mr. Fox) on behalf of the congregation, I would sincerely ask you to accept this photograph of the chapel, and this purse of gold as a small token of the appreciation in which your services have been held among us. The photograph may serve you to reflect upon as the sphere of your former life. You can point it out to your friends as the place where you served the first 14 years of your ministry, and not only that, it will show them the high esteem in which your services were held. I can assure you it is given with the best wishes and prayers of the congregation that God may preserve your life, and fit you as in years gone by, to be a true and faithful servant of the Lord. We do sincerely hope and trust that your life may long be spared, and wish you every success in the sphere you are about to enter. (Loud applause.)

Mr. Fox, who on rising to acknowledge the testimonial was received with loud cheers, said:—Mr. chairman, ladies, and gentlemen: It is just possible for the heart to be too full for the mouth to speak at all. This is one of those cases. This is rather a painful than a pleasant meeting for me. I know that I am leaving many dear friends, some of whom I have been associated with ever since I came to this place; others have come since I have. A man cannot, after having been associated with dear friends for nearly 15 years but feel, especially if he has on the whole been happy, that it is a hard and painful thing to part. I have thought for some time past that this would be a painful parting. With regard to these testimonials I can assure you that the picture you present to me will be treasured as long as ever I live. It will serve to remind me of many happy days with many dear friends. I shall be glad to give it a place in my house, and shall be proud to point it out to my friends who come to visit me, that it is the chapel I was minister at for 14 years, and one to which I was closely attached. I am glad of the manner in which the chairman and Mr. Chadwick have spoken of my services among you. I am glad to know that my services have been of some good to you. It very often happens that ministers do not always understand whether they are doing good or not. Ministers are in that respect often in the dark. I am very glad that Mr. Chadwick has felt strengthened by words I have spoken. I think this is the highest testimonial a minister can receive as to the value of his services. I shall always feel glad to hear of the welfare and prosperity of this congregation. I have done my best in lecturing to attract the outside public, and sometimes I have succeeded in hearing congratulatory remarks, often by strangers who have never been associated with us. I have often told you that the school was the nursery of the congregation. I am glad to see so many of you here to-night, and I would advise you all to keep to the school. I hope this will be the case in the future more than in the past. I would earnestly ask you to think on what Mr. Chadwick has said, and to resolve earnestly henceforth to attend school regularly, and let no paltry excuse keep you away. Allow me, in conclusion, to thank you for the photograph, and for the expressions of regard you have shown toward me to-night. It will recall in the future happy memories of the past. (Loud cheers.)

Afterwards a few words were said by Mr. William

Chadwick, Messrs. J. Partington, T. Barrett, J. Mitchell, S. Kay, W. Healey, sen., E. Ellis, J. Standing, J. Dewhurst, and T. Rhodes, all expressive of their approval of Mr. Fox's labours among them, and wishing him a long, happy, and prosperous life.

The meeting was enlivened by glees from the choir, songs and recitations from Messrs. S. Rhodes, J. Henderson, and Master T. Rothwell. A vote of thanks was accorded to the chairman for presiding, and to the choir for their services; and a glee from the choir brought the meeting to a close about half-past ten.

On the 16th ult. the ladies of the Unitarian congregation provided a most excellent tea to which they invited Mr. and Mrs. Fox for the purpose of presenting the latter with some token of their affectionate regard. Mrs. Fox had been a zealous labourer in connection with the various institutions of the congregation, and more especially with the ladies' sewing class, which she had established, and from the members of which she had not had a single disagreeable word. After tea Mr. William Wild, on behalf of the ladies, in a few very touching and appropriate words, presented to Mrs. Fox a handsome gold watch and chain. The inside case of the watch bears the following inscription:—"Presented to Mrs. Fox by the ladies of the Unitarian congregation, Heywood, October 16th, 1878." Mr. Fox briefly responded on behalf of his wife, and thanked the ladies for the kind manner in which they had recognised her services, and assured them that this token of their regard would be very precious to his wife and also to himself as long as they should live, and would be a precious heirloom to their children after them.

On the 22nd ult. another excellent tea was provided by the adult female scholars of the Sunday School, to which Mr. and Mrs. Fox were again invited. After tea Miss M. A. Wild, on behalf of the adult class, presented to Mrs. Fox a very handsome square album, beautifully illuminated, containing portraits of the scholars, to which many of the congregation were subsequently added. The album bore the following inscription:—"Presented to Mrs. Fox by the senior female scholars of the Unitarian Sunday School, Heywood, as a token of appreciation of her kind efforts on their behalf. Britain Hill, Heywood, October 22nd, 1878." Mr. Fox, on behalf of his wife, thanked the young people for their very handsome gift, and assured them it would call up in their minds many happy memories in connection with the school and the friends they were leaving behind. He exhorted them to remain firm in their attachment to the Sunday School, and also to try to promote, to the best of their power, the welfare of the congregation.

The Heywood Advertiser, alluding to the departure of Mr. Fox, says of him that, independent of the fact that he has built up his own church until it has become self-supporting, he has ever been ready to lift up his voice against the iniquity around us, and as a good Radical to take his share of responsibility in advocating civil and religious liberty. His labours have always been in the direction of creating a healthy public opinion, and to this fact may be ascribed in some degree the mental healthiness which pervades his own congregation. Much brotherly feeling was exhibited at Saturday's meeting, and if Christianity consists in showing brotherly love one towards the other, it may fairly be said that the Unitarians belong to the fold of Him whose great aim and teaching was in the direction of righteousness in daily life. We take this opportunity of adding our own testimony to the useful life Mr. Fox has lived among us, and hope that he will find a church in his new sphere of labour which will reciprocate his efforts.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. W. Parry, lately of the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen, has accepted an invitation to become the minister of Cwmawrdu Chapel, Carmarthenshire. The services there have been for many years conducted under great inconvenience by the Rev. J. Davies, Allt-y-placca.—Mr. John Moore, late student of the Home Missionary Board, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to the pulpit at Swinton, and his duties will commence on the first Sunday in December.

AINSWORTH.—On Sunday last the annual choir sermon was preached by the Rev. George Fox, of Park Lane. There was a large congregation, and a collection was made as some acknowledgment of the services freely rendered by the voluntary choir.

ABERDEEN.—On Monday evening, November 4th, a social meeting was held in the schoolroom for the purpose of welcoming the Rev. Rev. H. Ierson, secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, who, having been preaching the annual sermons of the Scottish Association in Edinburgh, had taken the opportunity of paying a friendly visit to the various churches in Scotland. The schoolroom was crowded. Tea was served at eight o'clock, after which Mr. James Shepherd presided. In the interval of an attractive programme of singing, &c., a vote of welcome to Mr. Ierson was proposed by Mr. Adams. Mr. G. T. Walters, minister of the church, seconded, and said he had been much pleased with the progress that the cause had made in Aberdeen during the last ten months, and urged the congregation and friends not to relax their efforts, but to strive to build up a strong and powerful church for rational worship. Mr. Ierson, on behalf of the Association and himself, thanked those present for the very hearty welcome which they had given him. He was sure from what he had seen during the last ten days that the work that was being carried on by Unitarians throughout Scotland was a good, sacred, and successful work. The address, which was stirring, was listened to with great interest, and frequently applauded.

BRADFORD: LAISTERDYKE UNITARIAN BRANCH SUNDAY SCHOOL.—On Sunday, Nov. 3rd, evening services were commenced in the above school, under the auspices of the West Riding Unitarian Mission Society. The opening service was conducted by the Rev. Geo. Wooller, of Thorne, who took for his text 1 Sam. xvii., 29—"And David said, what have I now done? Is there not a cause?" If actual numbers were alone an indication of success, the promoters would have every reason to be satisfied with the result of this first service, the room being nearly filled. The greater part of the audience, however, consisted of children belonging to the Sunday School, attracted probably, many of them, by the novelty of the service; and of the 23 or 24 adults present, only a very small proportion were residents of the neighbourhood.

COLNE.—The Colne and Nelson Times gives a report of an able and exhaustive lecture on "Eternal Punishment," delivered by the Rev. William Matthews, to the Free Christian Congregation, in the Cloth Hall. The lecture is calculated to do good service in the neighbourhood.

CROFT, NEAR WARRINGTON.—On Sunday last a congregational tea meeting was held to welcome Mr. John Mather, formerly of Astley, as a teacher and superintendent amongst them. After tea Mr. T. P. Jones, of Manchester, occupied the chair, and spoke of the abilities of Mr. Mather as a superintendent, a teacher, a singer, an organist, and a preacher, and was highly pleased that they had got amongst them so able a young man. Mrs. Whittle, on behalf of the congregation, welcomed Mr. Mather amongst them, and spoke at some length of the condition of the school and congregation, and urged upon every teacher and member to support their new superintendent. Mr. Mather having replied to their welcome, reviewed his career at Astley, and hoped that whatever his abilities might be, they would be turned to good account.

CHELMSFORD.—On Sunday week the services of the Chelmsford Unitarians, who have migrated from the Corn Exchange, were held for the first time at the new premises in Legg-street. A site on which at a future time to erect a chapel having been secured, a building lately used as a workshop has been converted into a temporary mission room, and although at present of somewhat unpromising external appearance, it has a clean and bright interior. At the entrance is a lobby with door leading into a small vestry, with access to the ground at the rear. Another door opens into the room about 18 by 27 feet, with raised platform at the far end, on which is placed the reading-desk and harmonium. A neat dado of light and dark wood alternated is carried round the walls, in which are four large double-headed windows. Warmth and gas light are provided by a college stove, a four-light pendant, and brackets in the end wall. Over these will be painted a scroll and text, "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." A formal opening has not taken place, as the whole of the work is not complete. Besides the usual Sunday services and Sunday school the room will be used for week night services, lectures, and social meetings.

CRIBYN.—The quarterly meetings of the Welsh Unitarian ministers were held at the above place on Wednesday and Thursday, October 2nd and 3rd. On Wednesday night the Revs. J. Evans, of Gellionen, and R. C. Jones, of Lampeter, preached to a crowded congregation. On Thursday morning, at 10 o'clock, the Rev. R. C. Jones, of Lampeter, conducted the service, after which Mr. James, of Aberdare, preached an eloquent sermon, who was followed by Mr. Thomas, of Capelygroes. In the afternoon the Rev. Mr. Davies, of Penrhif and Panteg, and Mr. Thomas, of Llandyssil, preached. The meetings were crowded both morning and afternoon. The next meeting is to be held at Llandyssil.

HUDDERSFIELD: FITZWILLIAM-STREET CHURCH.—The Anniversary Sermons of this church were preached last Sunday morning and evening, by the Rev. John Thomas, B.A., minister. The evening service was a musical one, in which the orchestra of the Philharmonic Society in connection with the school took part. The attendance at the morning service was only moderate, but at the evening was, as usual, crowded. Indeed, large numbers were obliged to go back again, it being impossible to accommodate them either standing or sitting. The offertory music consisted of the Romance from Haydn's Queen Symphony. The concluding music was a Marche Religieuse by J. L. Battmann. In addition to these the hymns were accompanied orchestrally. There was a sacred song, solo, and chorus. The collections at both services amounted to £10. 0s. 7d.

KENDAL.—Invited by the committee of the Ladies' Book Society, Unitarian Chapel, Kendal, a happy party of about 120 assembled at the Mechanics' Institute on Thursday, the 24th inst., where there was no lack of interesting objects for inspection. Two valuable microscopes called for special attention, and their power was wonderingly admired without intermission, save when the company were desired to be seated whilst some member or friend of the congregation gave a song. Several stereoscopes—including a revolving one—and graphoscopes, with a quantity of pentographs, were a great attraction. The committee were indebted to friends for flowers and illustrated books, these being arranged on a number of tables about the hall, and gave quite a pleasing, homelike appearance. Towards the close of the evening the Rev. Jas. Macdonald gave a Shakesperian reading to very attentive hearers. The names of those who helped so cheerfully with either time, means, talents, or goods, would take up too much space, but they appeared amply repaid by the success of the soiree.

LONDON: DOMESTIC MISSION.—We are informed that the Committee of this Society have received from their valued missionary, Mr. Corkran, a letter expressing his intention to resign his office at Midsummer next. Mr. Corkran has now nearly completed his thirty-first year of labour among the poor of Spitalfields, and many a happy home in that district may trace back its beginning to the wise counsel and friendly help given by him in the time of need. Although Mr. Corkran finds himself obliged to retire from the office which he has so long held, he hopes to be able still to render some assistance to his successor. The manner in which he has discharged his duties, and the truly Christian spirit which he has spread round him need no comment of ours. The Committee will have great difficulty in finding a fit successor to one who has proved himself so admirably qualified for the arduous but noble task of the office of missionary.

LEEDS: HUNSLLET.—On Sunday, October 27th, the annual prize distribution took place, when the parents and friends of the scholars met in the afternoon in such large number that necessitated the filling of the aisles of the church with seats. Grosvenor Talbot, Esq., of Southfield, Burley, presented the prizes to the successful scholars, and it is gratifying to know that these exceeded in number that of any previous year. Recitations were given by a number of the scholars, which seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by the congregation. In the evening a service of song, entitled "Elijah," was given by a number of the scholars, when a large congregation again assembled. The readings were given by the Rev. M. S. Dunbar, M.A., and the singing conducted by Mr. George Clarke. The collections realised considerably more than usual.

LONDON: UNITARIANISM AND THE PEOPLE.—The Hackney and Kingsland Gazette reports that "on Wednesday evening, the 23rd October, the first of a series of four lectures on Unitarian theology, under the auspices of the London District Unitarian Society, was delivered at Luxemburg Hall, Dalston Junction, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, of Liverpool, entitled "What has Unitarian Christianity done for the People?" Mr. David Martineau presided over the large audience, and explained the reason why these lectures were being given; they were for the spread of those great moral truths which the Unitarians had been the means of revivifying from the darkness and superstition in which they had been interred for centuries. The lecture, which was a most thoughtful and interesting one, was raptly listened to, and at the close several most pertinent questions were put, all of which were satisfactorily answered by the rev. lecturer. A report of the lecture will appear in an early issue." The lecture was also delivered at Hammersmith and Peckham. Last week the Rev. J. Page Hopps lectured to large audiences at the same places, on "The Religious Value of the Unitarian Faith." Mr. Hopps dwelt chiefly on the Unitarian conception of God, Christ, Salvation, and the Future Life.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The Rev. J. J. Wright has been delivering a series of six Sunday evening addresses on "First Principles." Many strangers have attended each service, some of whom have joined the church. The special subjects taken were—1. "First Principles in Business." 2. "First Principles in Politics." 3-4. "First Principles in Science." 5-6. "First Principles in Religion." These useful addresses are to be followed up, we understand, by biographical illustrations of the above Principles, in a series of six lectures on "Men Worth Knowing." The Social Union met on Monday evening. The special topic of conversation was value and wealth.

LIVERPOOL: RENSCHAW-STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The annual report for the year, November 1877-78, has just been issued. It states that the number on the register on October 27th, 1878, was 116—boys 60, girls 56; highest morning attendance, Sept. 15th, 1878, 52; average morning attendance, 41; highest afternoon attendance, Whitsunday, June 9th, 1878, 102; average afternoon attendance, 74. The attendance of the scholars for the past twelve months shows a very marked increase on that of former years, both as regards number and regularity, more especially in the afternoon school. The service for children on the last Sunday afternoon in the month is much liked, and well attended by the scholars. The prizes for 1877 were distributed by Mr. Beard on February 8th. Mr. J. H. Ellerbeck kindly attended with his magic lantern, and amused the scholars for some time. The annual treat to the scholars of the Sunday school was this year held on September 14th. Through the kindness of Mr. C. W. Jones, the children were entertained by him at his house; all enjoyed themselves thoroughly. Most of the elder boys on leaving the day school have been apprenticed to various trades, some to members of the congregation, who are able to give very favourable reports of their conduct and progress. Mr. J. T. Ellerbeck has kindly undertaken to support one of the elder boys at the night school of the Institute during the coming winter months, and Mr. G. E. Evans (the superintendent) has also sent two scholars to the drawing classes connected with the Science and Art Department. At the request of several of the elder scholars who are for various reasons unable to attend night school regularly, the superintendent is conducting a free class for grammar and arithmetic every Monday evening in the schoolroom. It is with much pleasure the teachers are able to report that, with but very few exceptions, the scholars are teetotallers, many being members of various bands of hope. The teachers will be very glad to receive any books, second-hand or otherwise, suitable for the Sunday school library.

MANCHESTER.—On Wednesday week the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., presided at the distribution of the Oxford local examination, and the Bishop of Manchester gave the prizes away.

OLDHAM: PARENTS' AND SCHOLARS' TEA PARTY.—The annual tea party in connection with the Unitarian Sunday School, Lord-street, Oldham, was held on Saturday afternoon last, when about 150 persons sat down to tea. The meeting was presided over by Councillor Samuel Ogden, president of the school. Mr. Robert Kenyon, one of the superintendents, said that to carry on a Sunday school successfully, they must have the support of the parents, and if that could not be got it was impossible to carry out the work. The Rev. F. H. Jones said that he, as minister, wanted more than a personal acquaintance—he wanted a personal friendship with the persons of the congregation. Of lotteries, he said, they were neither more nor less than gambling, and he would not under any circumstances give his support for any purpose of that description. He would not risk one halfpenny for a thousand pounds. Gambling was a great curse to society. They met there not as members of the congregation; but as persons connected with the Sunday school. They had got here in Oldham a division of the school and congregation, and he thought that was a very bad thing. As minister he drew no distinction between the members of the congregation and those of the school. Councillor Ashton also spoke, and the proceedings closed with the usual votes of thanks.

PAISLEY: UNITARIAN CHURCH.—A soirée of the church here was held on Friday evening last, in the Chapel, George-street, which was filled, the audience including a number of friends from the sister churches in Glasgow. The meeting was presided over by the minister of the congregation, the Rev. Wm. Bennett, by whom, as also by the Rev. H. Ierson, the secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the Rev. Frank W. Walters, of the St Vincent-street Church, and the Rev. W. Mitchell, South St Mungo Street, Glasgow, able and stirring addresses were given on the characteristics of Unitarianism, and the present position and prospects of the Unitarian churches, and the influence these are exercising on the other churches in the country. The speakers concurred in repudiating the sectarian spirit which refuses salvation to all beyond a given pale; and whilst admitting that the Unitarian churches are not increasing so rapidly either in number or in membership as they desired, they contended that the liberal tendencies being exhibited in the other denominations of late were in some measure the outcome of the testimony borne by the Unitarian churches for perfect religious freedom, and proof that they are doing a good work in connection with the advancement of a higher and purer theology than is at present embodied in the standards of the orthodox bodies. In rejoicing over the manifestations of dissatisfaction in the Established, Free, and U.P. Churches with hard and fast line creeds, the speakers were also agreed in desirating a greater honesty and more willingness on part of the members, and especially that the leaders of the Broad Church party should acknowledge and take the consequences of their entertaining doctrines more or less opposed to their professed faiths. The programme was varied with services of tea and fruit, and vocal and instrumental music. The choir, under the leadership of Mr. Brown, gave several part songs very effectively, and solos were rendered in good style by Miss M. Adamson, Glasgow, Mrs. Brown, and Miss Kilpatrick, and Messrs. Brown and Fleming—Miss Robb, Glasgow, and Mrs. Brown playing the accompaniments. The soirée, which was altogether a very pleasant and successful one, was brought to a close (after awarding the usual votes of thanks) about eleven o'clock by the singing of some verses of Pope's Universal Prayer.

PRESTON: BRUTAL ATTACK ON THE REV. J. G. EVANS.—On Sunday evening, about half-past eight, as the Rev. J. G. Evans, minister of the Unitarian Chapel, Percy-street, was proceeding from the house of Mr. H. C. Walton, Walton's-parade, to his home on West Cliff, he was attacked by two young men, who were lying in wait in a lonely part of the road. One of them threw a clinker in his face. It struck him over the left eye, inflicting an ugly wound. Mr. Evans, who fortunately happened to have with him at the time a heavy walking stick, struck one of the men, knocking his hat off. The other man then ran away. A struggle then ensued between the remaining man and Mr. Evans, the two closing together. Eventually the assailant ran away, and Mr. Evans proceeded to his home severely hurt about the face. Information of the outrage has been given to the police, but no clue to the offenders has been got, although a reward of £10 has been offered. Mr. Evans, who has not been long in the town, cannot conjecture a reason for this brutal attack. He supposes it to have been made with the object of robbery. It is thought probable that the assailants had mistaken their man.

MANCHESTER.—Mr. Thomas Rawson, the well-known organist of Strangeways, has undertaken to adapt the Service of Avoidance in the Rev. P. Dean's new liturgy to music.

SUNDERLAND.—On Friday, the 25th of October, the members of the Unitarian Congregation met in the chapel to give expression to their respect to Mr. Lucas and family, who are leaving the town for Darlington. Coffee was served at seven o'clock, and a meeting held afterwards, over which the Rev. William Elliott presided, and in a short address spoke of his long and intimate friendship with Mr. Lucas. During 25 years he had had every reason to regard him with increasing respect and affection. Mr. Brown, the oldest member of the congregation then presented to Mr. and Mrs. Lucas a valuable time-piece, bearing a suitable inscription. Mrs. Chapman and Miss Hemsley, on behalf of the teachers and scholars of the Sunday School, then presented to Miss Clara C. Lucas, a large beautiful album as a token of their esteem and affection. The following gentlemen also spoke in terms of the highest regard of Mr. Lucas and his family:—Messrs. Wilkinson, Taylor, Johnstone (treasurer), Hemsley, Fothergill, Street, Stirling, Gardener, Hunter, Potts, Macnab, Manning (secretary), and Moor. Mr. Lucas was received with the warmest demonstration of affection. He thanked the congregation for the kindness which they had always shown to him and his family. They had placed great confidence in him, and they had thus enabled him to render them some service during the last eight years. It had been a great joy to him to labour with them on behalf of that simple Christian faith which they held, and which produced the most blessed fruits in the hearts and lives of men who placed themselves under its guidance. In all he had done and all he had said he had sought only the highest welfare of the church and every member connected with it. The valuable present given to him and his family on this occasion would be treasured by them as long as they lived, and would always remind them of the dear friendships formed at Sunderland. He concluded a very earnest address by trusting that, as a congregation, they would unitedly strive to diffuse everywhere the principles and the blessings of the religion of Jesus.

TAMWORTH.—The Re-opening Services of the Tamworth Chapel on Sunday last, by the Rev. E. Birks, and on Sunday week by the Rev. D. Maginnis, were very successful, numbers attending the evening services, mostly consisting of strangers to Unitarian worship, but who, nevertheless, paid the most marked attention throughout. The Tamworth Herald very fully reports Mr. Maginnis's sermon.

YEOVIL.—A tea and entertainment were given in the Unitarian Chapel on Monday evening, October 28th, in acknowledgment of the good services rendered to the congregation by Mr. H. E. Bunce, of Frome, who has acted as pastor for the last two years. About 60 sat down to tea. An entertainment followed, which consisted of about 30 pieces, comprising songs, duets, solos and choruses, recitations and readings. Mr. Bunce, in a short address, expressed his pleasure at the manner in which his services seemed to have been appreciated by the congregation. He was not a regular minister, but in response to an invitation in 1876, he conducted a harvest thanksgiving service in the chapel, and was so pleased with the manner in which he was received, that he promised to supply the pulpit for three months, which he did. After that, he attended for a short time rather than see the chapel closed, and he had been there ever since. He was willing to continue until the congregation were in a position to have a qualified minister, when he would be happy to resign his trust. The Rev. F. R. Young, of Swindon, who was minister of the chapel some years ago, said he did not believe Christianity was dying out, as many people had alleged, but thought it was only just beginning to show its power. He advised them to cling to the Lord Jesus Christ of the New Testament. The Unitarians had of late been greatly abused, but he wished them by their example to show that they were not so bad as they were made out to be. In conclusion, he said he would be happy to attend and conduct a service on any day they might name. The hymn, "Jesus shall reign where e'er the sun," brought a most enjoyable evening to a close.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

MR. KNAPTON'S RETIREMENT.—We have received a number of letters on Mr. Knapton's retirement, for which we regret we cannot find room this week. Most of the writers but echo the opinions which have already been expressed.

WELSH UNITARIAN CENSUS.

To the Editors.—It was announced last year that Sunday, November 4th, was fixed as a census Sunday, that is, for all our Unitarian congregations to be counted, and so several of our Welsh congregations did so, and what I have to ask is, what has become of them? I have never seen any account since. I shall be glad if anyone will do the kindness of giving some information. I am yours faithfully, DAVID EVANS.

A CORRECTION.

To the Editors.—The columns of your impression, October 25th, contain a report of the recent meeting at Blackpool. The short speech attributed there to me is pure invention. I certainly did advise our Blackpool friends to start a Sunday school, but not a word besides the least resembles anything I said. This is not a case of clumsy reporting, but of deliberate invention on the part of the reporter, and as such seems to deserve a protest.—I am, yours truly, H. SHAEN SOLLY. Padiham, Oct. 30th.

[The Blackpool Herald has this to its credit.—EDS. U. H.]

ORTHODOX TEACHING AT BOARDING SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—In confirmation of your "leader" on this subject, which appeared a few weeks ago, may I state the following facts? A gentleman not connected with the Unitarian body, but holding liberal theological opinions, sent his daughter to a large, and well-recommended school in the neighbourhood of Manchester. He made no stipulation on the question of religion, and raised no objection to her attendance at church along with her schoolfellows. But he now finds that, under cover of what the lady-teacher calls "lessons on religion," his girl is being indoctrinated in the worst forms of the evangelical school—and her young mind is at once puzzled and poisoned with orthodox views of the Trinity, the Atoning Blood, and Eternal Torments for all who (like her parents) hold heretical opinions. Again, whilst the father is a Liberal in politics, he also finds that his child is being lectured on the vulgarity and wickedness of Radicalism, and the beneficent government of Lord Beaconsfield, in the course of weekly lectures, called "colloquial history"—the text being generally found in the leading articles of the Daily Telegraph. And it's not a little extraordinary that, in attendance on these perverting and mischievous instructions, are children of some of the most pronounced and active members of the Liberal party in Manchester! Surely a strange supineness, and a "plentiful lack" of parental oversight! We are often cautioned by certain good friends against the injustice done to Sunday-school and other pupils, by teaching the principles of Unitarianism, even in their freest and most progressive guise. Would it not be quite as much in the interest of mental freedom and sound views, sternly to discountenance this vicious system of cramming a child's mind with bad metaphysics and spurious theology? But, with a strange inconsistency, the professors of even advanced theories of religion are sometimes found sending their children to schools infected with the rankest orthodoxy, whilst they decline to place them under Unitarian teachers, lest they should become narrow and sectarian in their sympathies!

Nov. 5th, 1878.

HARRY RAWSON.

COMING WEEK.

BURY: BANK STREET.—On Saturday, parents' party.

FLOWERY FIELD.—On Sunday, at 2.45 and 6.30, special services by the Rev. G. H. Vance, B.D., in aid of the church funds.

HULL.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. J. M. Dixon, on "What we have to say for ourselves."

LONDON.—Lecture by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., on "Religion for to-day," on Wednesday, in the Luxenburg Hall. On Thursday, at the Town Hall, Hammersmith. On Friday, at the Rosemary Branch Assembly Rooms, Southampton-street, Peckham.

MANCHESTER: CROSS-STREET.—On Sunday, Annual Sermons for Lower Mosley-street Schools, at 10.30 and 6.30, by the Rev. Richard Pilcher, B.A.

MANCHESTER: EMBDEN-STREET.—On Sunday, School Sermons at 10.45 and 6.30, by the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A. On Monday, congregational tea party.

PENDLETON.—This (Friday) evening, a lecture by the Rev. John Page Hopps, on "An Appeal to Jesus Christ against Belief in Eternal Torments," and on Wednesday evening, at 8, a lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, on "Religious Sects in England—the Church of Humanity."

STRANGWAYS.—On Sunday morning and evening the Rev. J. T. Marriott will preach. On Monday, annual congregational soirée.

WESTERN UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN UNION.—On Thursday the autumnal meeting at Taunton, Service on the Wednesday evening previous. Preacher, Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A., at 7.30. At the close the Lord's Supper. Preacher at 11.30 on Thursday Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., following business meeting; after which collation.

Birth.

GRUNDY.—On the 3rd inst., at The Sycamores, Royston, the wife of E. H. Grundy, Esq., of a son.

Deaths.

COE.—On the 4th inst., at the residence of her son, Highfield, Bolton, in the 89th year of her age, Ann, widow of the late Clement Coe, of Islington, Norfolk.

NAYLOR.—On the 3rd inst., at The Knoll, Altrincham, aged 76, Martha J. Naylor, daughter of the late Benjamin Naylor, of Altrincham.

PEARSON.—On the 29th inst., at his father's residence, Ardwick, after a long and severe illness, Isaac, youngest son of Nathan and Anne Pearson, aged 31 years.

STANLEY.—On the 1st inst., at New Orleans, in his 63rd year, Henry Hope Stanley.

TAIT.—On the 27th ult., at 3, Mackie Place, Aberdeen, Eliza Paterson, beloved wife of James Tait, aged 35 years. Friends will please accept of this (the only) intimation.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.

Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale.

We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to 24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester.

H. OGDEN & SON, MANUFACTURERS OF USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 23, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, November 8, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—916.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doing and Saying	412
Scottish Notes	412
Books and Authors	412
American Notes	412
Thoughts on Religion	413
A Layman's View of Mr. Knapton's Secession	413
A Children's Hymn	414
The "Quarterly Review" on Protestantism	414
Eternal Punishment	414
German Protestantism	414
The Eleventh Protestantstag	415
Monton: Welcome to the Rev. Jas. Harwood	416
Larne: Welcome to the Rev. Jas. Kennedy	416
Religious Value of the Unitarian Faith	417
News of our Churches	417
Correspondence	418

CHARGE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Ten lines and under.....6d. a line.
After the first ten lines5d. a line.
For 6 consecutive insertions, a reduction of.....25 per cent.
" 73 " " "50 per cent.
Half column.....£1. 6s. od.
For all insertions of "Births" or "Marriages" a uniform charge of 1s.
Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

ARDWICK.—SCHOLARS' FESTIVAL
Sunday, November 17th. Morning, 10.30, Mr. JOHN HEYS will preach. Afternoon, at 2, JOHN DENDY, Jun., Esq., will preside at the Recital. Evening, 6.30, Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A., will preach. Collections.

STOCKPORT UNITARIAN CHURCH.—
On Sunday next, the 17th inst., the Rev. R. LAIRD COLLIER, D.D., late of Boston, U.S., will preach. Morning at quarter to eleven o'clock, and evening at half-past six. Special Collections at both Services in aid of the Church Funds.

WALSALL.—ANNUAL SERVICES.—On Sunday next, Rev. P. DEAN, morning, and Mr. GEO. ST. CLAIR, F.G.S., evening. Monday night, CONGREGATIONAL TEA MEETING, at half-past five. Tuesday night, at eight, SERMON by Mr. J. A. PICTON, M.A., of London. Midland friends cordially invited.

LONDON AUXILIARY SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The THIRTIETH ANNUAL MEETING of this Association will be held at Stamford-street Chapel, Blackfriars, on Monday, Nov. 18th, 1878, when reports on the present condition of the Schools will be submitted and considered. Rev. Professor J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., in the chair. Tea at Half-past Six o'clock: tickets, 6d. each. Chair to be taken at Seven o'clock.

UNITARIAN LECTURES AT BOOTLE, LIVERPOOL.

The following COURSE of FOUR LECTURES will be delivered in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, near Liverpool, by the Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS, on the undermentioned Tuesday evenings in November and December, 1878:—
Tuesday, Nov. 19.—"The Position of Unitarianism Stated."
" 26.—"God."
" Dec. 3.—"Jesus Christ."
" 10.—"Man and Man's Salvation."
Each Lecture to begin at Eight o'clock.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

The ANNUAL CONVERSAZIONE will be held in the Memorial Hall, on Saturday, 23rd November. Refreshments from 5.30 to 6.30. For particulars of Entertainment see programmes and bills. Tickets, ninepence each, may be had from representatives of schools in Union, or the Secretary, WM. H. MELLOR.

24, Shakspeare-st., Ardwick.

SWINTON.—FAREWELL TEA PARTY to the Rev. WM. HARRISON, on Monday, November 25th. Tea at 6.30: tickets, eightpence each.

BLACKPOOL.—It has been decided to have a CHRISTMAS TREE at Blackpool. Contributions will be very thankfully received from friends in inland towns who take an interest in the progress of the UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH at the above place.—Money or articles may be sent to Mrs. Helm, Abingdon-street, or Mrs. Camm, 39, Queen-street.

DOB LANE NEW CHAPEL.

The Building Committee earnestly appeal for further Subscriptions, to enable them to complete the building, protect the graveyard, and procure an organ. To accomplish this, they will require about £300.

This appeal is urgently presented by Halliwell Thomas, Newton Heath, minister; Harry Rawson, 89, Market-street, Manchester, trustee; Luke Pollitt, London House, Newton Heath, treasurer; John F. Allen, Hulme Hall Lane, Miles Platting, secretary, by whom further subscriptions will be advertised.

The Committee thankfully acknowledge the following donations:—

	£	s.	d.
Silas Leigh, Monton (2nd subscription)	10	0	0
James Etchells, Chester (2nd subscription)	4	0	0
Thomas Thorpe, Monton	3	3	0
Thos. Broadbent, Monton	2	2	0
Hugh Dean, Newton Heath	2	2	0
Walter Dean, Newton Heath	2	2	0
John Dean, Newton Heath	2	2	0
Edmund Leigh, Monton (2nd subscription)	2	0	0
— Hughes, Miles Platting	2	0	0
Samuel Ogden, Oldham	1	0	0
Mrs. Leigh, Timperley	0	10	6
George Mitchell, Miles Platting	0	10	0
James Barwell, Birmingham	0	10	0

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—WEEK EVENING LECTURES.—Each Lecture to begin at Eight o'clock.

Friday evening, Nov. 8th, The Rev. JOHN PAGE HOPPS on "An Appeal to Jesus Christ against Belief in Eternal Punishment."

Wednesday evening, Nov. 13th, The Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS on "Religious Sects in England—the Church of Humanity."

Wednesday evening, Nov. 20th, Rev. CHAS. WICKSTEED, B.A., on "The Bible—the Idol of the Protestant—the butt of the Rationalist—and the object of Discriminating Reverence to the Christian."

Wednesday evening, Nov. 27th, Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., on "The Holy Catholic Church."

Wednesday evening, Dec. 4th, Rev. H. E. DOWSON, B.A., on "Unitarianism a Positive Faith."

Wednesday evening, Dec. 11th, Rev. WILLIAM BINNS on "Milton's Paradise Lost and Regained."
All Seats Free. The Offertory.

WHITCHURCH FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

SALE of WORK, TEA MEETING, and PUBLIC MEETING, Tuesday, December 10th, 1878. Among others the Rev. J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., of London, and the Rev. JAMES BLACK, M.A., of Stockport, will attend and give Addresses.

The Rev. W. Carey Walters begs to acknowledge with sincere thanks the following contributions received in aid of the Fund for the Reduction of the Church Debt:—

Sir J. C. Lawrence, Bart., M.P., London	£5	0	0
R. N. Phillips, M.P., Bury	5	0	0
W. Rathbone, M.P., Liverpool	5	0	0
Edward Caddick, Birmingham	5	0	0
H. J. Cook, Liverpool	5	0	0
Mrs. Sarah Martineau, London	2	2	0
Fred. Nettleford, London	2	2	0
Misses Hampson, Evesham	2	0	0
S. S. Tayler, London	1	1	0
Sos. Oliver, Stalybridge	1	0	0
Jos. Clepham, Newcastle-on-Tyne	1	0	0
W. P. Greenway, Junr., Dudley	1	0	0
John Whitehouse, Dudley	1	0	0
Mrs. W. Clark, London	0	10	0
Miss Whitfield, Leamington	0	10	0
W. S. B., London	0	2	6

Further contributions are earnestly requested.

AS DAILY GOVERNESS.—A Young Lady, well educated, and a good musician, with some years' experience in teaching, wishes for an Engagement in the neighbourhood of Liverpool.—For address, apply to Messrs. Ellerbeck Brothers, Bold-street, Liverpool.

SUPERIOR AMERICAN ORGAN TO BE SOLD, cheap, with 12 stops, two manuals and pedals, by Mason and Hamlin.—Address E, Herald Office, Manchester.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—For Prospectus apply to Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, Principal.

CROYDON.—School for Girls.—Miss Biddell, who has passed in honours the Cambridge and Kensington Examinations, receives Boarders: home comforts: terms 40 to 60 guineas.—2, Ailsa Villas, Wellesley Road, next Free Christian Church. Half-term commences November 4th.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.

Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., of the Universities of London and Heidelberg, assisted by Mr. G. H. HENSON, University of London, thoroughly prepares Boys for college, the local examinations, or for business. The school possesses an unusually complete provision of apparatus and specimens for the teaching of science. No means is neglected which the experience of fourteen years has shown to conduce to the progress and interest of pupils in their studies. Good cricket ground and playground.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties' Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

THE UNITARIAN MAGAZINE, 24pp. Monthly. Price Twopence. Single copies post-free for Twopence-halfpenny in stamps. Orders to be sent to Mr. R. STEWART, 13, Queen-street, Glasgow.

Just published, gopp., neat wrapper, Ninepence, CITY LIFE: SEVEN LECTURES ON BUSINESS, Politics, Society, Recreation, Culture, Music, The Drama—delivered in the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, by Henry Woods Ferris.—Johnson and Rawson, or (post-free) from the author.

NEW PARLOUR DRAMA FOR CHRISTMAS.
Now ready, in cloth, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

THE PRINCE'S TRIUMPH: A Drama for Home Representation. By A. M. Y. Hirst, Smyth, and Son, Gower-street, W.C., publishers to London University College.

DR. SCHENKEL'S "CHARACTER OF JESUS."

To the Students of the Local Classes in Theology in connection with the Manchester New College:—The "Character of Jesus," by Dr. Schenkel, one of the works given for examination in these classes, the selling price of which has been hitherto 4s. 6d., is offered to the Students, with the Translator's consent, at Two Shillings per copy. Any number will be forwarded carriage free at this price, on application by the teachers, or single copies may be had by an order with the teacher's signature appended. British and Foreign Unitarian Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

PAPERS for the TIMES on RELIGION, ETHICS, and CONDUCT. Sixpence monthly. No. 3 London and Manchester: John Heywood.

Hirst, Smyth, and Son, 137, Gower-street, London.
NEW PARLOUR DRAMA FOR CHRISTMAS.

Now ready, in cloth, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

THE PRINCE'S TRIUMPH: A Drama for Home Representation.

N.B.—New Books at 1d. in the shilling discount for cash, free by post. Parcels of £2 and upwards at 25 per cent discount.

Now ready. In small 8vo, pp. xvi.—240. Cloth, red edges. Price 2s. 6d. (to Congregations, 1s. 8d.)

A BOOK OF PRAYER: IN THIRTY ORDERS OF WORSHIP. With additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. Edited by R. CROMPTON JONES. Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

Just published, price 1s.
DR. JAMES MARTINEAU. IDEAL SUBSTITUTES FOR GOD CONSIDERED, in an Opening Lecture delivered October 30, 1878, at Manchester New College, London, 93rd Session, by JAMES MARTINEAU, LL.D., D.D., Principal of the College.

Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London: and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THE TRUTHSEEKER, Edited by the Rev. JOHN PAGE HOPPS, and published on the first of every month, is a free and unsectarian Review of all books and events relating to the development of religious life and liberty in the Christian Church. Every number contains original lectures and essays, together with reviews of present and permanent interest. Price Threepence.—London: Williams and Norgate, Covent Garden. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!" And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Pretty bindings. Price 9d. Publishers: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., London.

* * Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—

25 BOOKS FOR 12s. 6d.

If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News," for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE. Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale.

We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to

24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester.

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET SCHOOLS.

THE BRITANNIA BUILDING SOCIETY MEETS on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in every Month at Lower Mosley-street Schools from 7.30 to 8.30. FIVE PER CENT INTEREST ON LOANS.

Shares may taken up and Loans Paid daily to HENRY PAULDEN, Secretary, 1, Cooper-street, Manchester.

H. OGDEN & SON, MANUFACTURERS OF USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, } MANCHESTER.
MANUFACTORY—CORNBROOK, }

PAPERHANGINGS.

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE:
93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS, PAINTERS VARNISHES, &c., &c.

DOING AND SAYING.

A chapel, built by the American Baptists at a cost of £4,000, has just been opened in Rome. The ministers of all denominations and the members of the Young Men's Christian Association took part in the first service.

The expensive customs at our entertainments are outrageous; as an instance, Miss Faithful mentions in her lecture on "Modern Extravagance," that the banquet given to the Prince of Wales on his return from India cost no less than £27,576.

A Manual of the Church and State Question in Scotland for the use of Politicians, which has been in preparation for some time, and which will contain the views of the Scotch, if not of the English, leaders of the Liberal party, will appear contemporaneously with the opening of the next parliamentary session.

The Women's Suffrage Society are calling upon such women as have distinguished themselves as authors, artists, doctors, school-mistresses, to express in a few lines their conviction that the suffrage ought to be extended to all unmarried women who are ratepayers. The society is publishing these in the form of leaflets, and it has already obtained answers from a large number of women whose names are honourably before the world.

The Wesleyans have resolved to raise a special fund of £200,000, of which £40,000 are to be devoted to foreign missions; £19,000 to home missions; £40,000 to the extension of Methodism; £25,000 towards building a new theological institution in the midland counties; £28,000 to educational purposes, including the establishment of middle-class boarding schools; and £32,000 to schools for the education of ministers' children. This is a most laudable effort.

At a meeting in Liverpool, the other day, Father Nugent gave startling testimony, which would be new to many of his hearers, of the necessity for special local effort in the matter of female inebriates. Eight out of every ten of the prisoners in the Liverpool borough gaol came there, said Father Nugent, directly or indirectly through drunkenness, and the number of women committed each year was from 4,000 to 5,000, the gaol at Walton being actually the only prison in the world in which the number of women prisoners exceeds the number of men.

A rather important Church preferment has been made by the Prime Minister. The socially, though not pecuniarily valuable incumbency of St. Peter's, Vere-street, formerly held by Professor F. D. Maurice, has been conferred by the Prime Minister on the Rev. W. Page Roberts, vicar of Eye, Suffolk. By this appointment the Broad Church traditions of the chapel are maintained. Mr. Page Roberts is a very able preacher, the author of some remarkable sermons, entitled Law and God, and is a man of large private means. He is, moreover, a Liberal. It is probable his social influence and position has had a good deal to do with his present preferment.

The vicar of Granborough, in Buckinghamshire, the Rev. C. W. Stubbs, is one of the few clergy of the State Church of England who have had the courage to raise their voices in the interests of the down-trodden agricultural labourers. In a work recently published by him on Village Politics, he spoke of the prophets under the old dispensation as being "in many respects the equivalent of the modern so-called agitator," having been, "rather than the priests, the first to hit the blots of the present and to grasp the new truths of the future." He declares that the State clergy "have been only too ready to preach submission to the powers that be," and have rarely dared to demand of the powers that be, justice, and of the wealthy man and the titled, duties."

According to a writer in the Contemporary Review on "What is going on at the Vatican," one result of the pilgrimages to Rome has been to diffuse among Romanists in different parts of the world the conviction that the Papal "prisoner," as he was impudently designated,

"was not so badly treated after all." In Rome the Antonelli scandal has had its influence. The writer declares that he is "personally acquainted with several wealthy Catholics, who, after having subscribed liberally to the Peter's Pence Fund, stopped short, and refused to give another farthing, declaring that they saw no reason why they should curtail the comforts or prevent the indulgence of the lawful and graceful tastes of their own families, merely to see their gifts made the subject of legal bickerings between the illegitimate children and the legal heirs of a Cardinal Secretary of State."

It is a melancholy result of ten years of public-house legislation, magisterial activity, and Permissive Bill agitation, that the amount of intoxication in the country has rather increased than diminished. Yet Lord Aberdare, who should know, could give no better account of the past to a great Church of England Temperance meeting over which he presided last week at Oxford; and Lord Coleridge's charge to the grand jury at Bristol supports Lord Aberdare's statements. It is impossible not to agree with these high authorities, that Acts of Parliament will not go far towards making men sober. But it is sad that so little impression has been made on the general condition of the country by the more rational method of counteracting the attractions of drink by the establishment of coffee-houses, and by spreading a taste for music and higher pleasures—the method now so largely adopted by the Temperance Societies.

The Bishop of Manchester, speaking at a meeting on the Higher Education of the Blind, said he saw that blindness varied according to the climatic and other circumstances of countries. In Egypt the proportion was one to 300, and in England it was about one in 1,000, so that estimating the population of England and Wales at 25,000,000, there would be 25,000 blind persons in England and the Principality, a considerable portion belonging to the upper classes of society. In a pamphlet issued by Mr. Foster, head master of the Worcester College for the Blind, it was stated that we had in this country 250 blind youths who were, or shortly would be, eligible for education at institutions for the blind. The college at Worcester was a sample of the good work which was being done, and which might be done more extensively in this direction. They had had in that college 47 pupils, nine of whom had gone to the universities. From the careers of pupils they saw that the professions of the church and the law were open to the blind, and he did not see why the profession of medicine should not be open to them also, although he could hardly conceive their becoming surgeons. He could easily understand that in many diseases a blind man might have a more sensitive touch and ear than many of our sighted doctors. He did think it was a remarkable trophy won by the Worcester College that since 1869 it had received 47 pupils, nine of whom were not only graduates at the Universities, but had achieved distinction there.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE REV. F. L. ROBERTSON ON SHAM RELIGIOUSNESS.

THE REV. F. L. ROBERTSON, preaching to a numerous congregation in St. Andrew's Parish Church, Glasgow, said they would find the very men who had been at the Communion table, and who professed through faith to be grafted into Christ, dressed in the garb of religiousness, wearing the name of Christ, and marching under his banner, they would find them dirtying their hands and staining their souls with mean, base trickeries, lies, and dishonourable acts, which the veriest worldling, who cared not one farthing for God or Christ, would for his honour's sake utterly abhor. Did they wonder, then, that many were inclined to flout at religion as worthless, as a hollow sham and an empty mockery? The religion by which men, however debased and stained they were, thought to save their souls hereafter from the burning flame and the gnawing worm, having no sense of the love of right or the horror of wrong, was, he declared, a sham and a mockery; but the religion by which men who did not make any pretence to superior sanctity nor flaunt their religious garments in the market place gained inward goodness, personal honour, and unflinching courage, which would enable them to die rather than stain their character or blemish their name, was a glorious reality.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

Young Days. Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

THE volume for 1878 is quite equal to its predecessors in general appearance, and we are sure it deserves the encouragement of all our people. We wonder why this publication has not a circulation of at least 20,000 to 30,000 in our own body. It richly deserves all this, and more. Our London friends have done our Sunday schools good service in issuing this publication, and we would once again remind our friends that this annual volume is an excellent book for presentation, and is sure to be welcome to young children.

Evenin' News, and other Stories. By John James Wright. London: S. W. Partridge and Co.

MR. WRIGHT'S little book will be received with pleasure by our Sunday scholars and other young readers. Several of the tales appeared first in our columns, and were always welcome. We feel sure that Nat Burton with his "Evenin' News," and Tom Rodney are still remembered by many boys and girls who read of them in the Herald. Nat will, no doubt, be the favourite, as he deserves to be; but Tom, who was so fond of his little sister and yet caused her so much pain by his carelessness and doing things in a hurry, has left a lesson good for all of us, in these days of hurry bustle, and want of thought. Snatches of verse, easy to learn, are printed between the tales. Mr. Wright's style in addressing children is well known in many of our churches and schools, and will have already recommended his book of stories. We add our own commendation, and wish it a large circulation.

The Prince's Triumph; or the Three Riddles:

A Drama for Home Representation. By A. M. Y. London: Hirst Smyth and Son. As the Christmas books are beginning to appear, this little drama, prepared originally for a Christmas party, comes in season. The plot is founded on Schiller's "Turandot," and is carried out very simply and effectively. The style in which the drama is composed will be seen in the following passage from The Story Teller's prologue:—

A long, long time ago, or "once upon a time," (As fairy tales begin), a King of Athens dwelt, Who had a lovely daughter. She was as good as fair, And loved by all. Once from a cruel war Against a neighbouring tribe the king returned The conqueror, and in his train he brought A maiden tall and stately,—one who held In her own land a rank almost as great As Princess Ione. And now that she Was brought a captive here, her high-born spirit felt The yoke unbearable. Like as it ever must, The war had spoiled her nature, and her thoughts Were all on vengeance set. It was in vain Ione sought to be a loving friend: Adelm could but see in her the child Of her lost country's foe; and so her heart Was dead to kindness. But, to win revenge, She feigned to love the princess; and so well Did she enact her part, that she became The trusted friend at last.

AMERICAN NOTES.

Rev. J. T. Sunderland has accepted a call to Ann Arbor, Michigan.

The salary of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, has been raised from seven thousand to twelve thousand dollars per annum.

The other Sunday Prof. Swing had Mr. Beecher for a hearer at McVickers's Theatre, in Chicago. At the end of the sermon Mr. Swing announced that he had a dear friend in the congregation who would make the closing prayer, which Mr. Beecher, rising in his box, forthwith proceeded to do.

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

THE VOCATION OF UNITARIANS.

REV. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

WE Unitarians have two grave tasks before us: a great task and a greater still. The great is this: to hold fast our faith in the Living God. And the greater task is this, to diffuse that faith among our brother men. How shall we do these things? I am well persuaded one true way lies before us, and one way only. By true and faithful living. Our trust in God may be—I believe it is—entirely reasonable, aye, the only truly reasonable attitude of soul. But it is fatal to rely on our poor reasoning powers either to sustain it in ourselves or to propagate it in our fellows. But so has the good God fashioned our spirits that when we spend our days and years in loyalty of life, then brightens within us the ray of our faith. He has so harmonised the departments of our being, that when we obey his law, then we behold his face. God only knows how much, how often, each one of us here has been moved to doubt and fear by the fearful force of that potent time-spirit that not only flings down the edifices of the creeds which human hands have built, but even tears up by the root the trees of faith which God himself has sown and reared. But this we all know surely, that, quite aloof from the brightness of our reasoning, we then see God most when we serve him best, we then feel most secure in the arms of his everlasting love when most we forgot our own hopes and fears in the love of our human kind.

Yes, we of the free churches—so I believe—we who have cast aside the mythologies of the sundry creeds, have, in a measure we cannot compute, the charge of the religious faith of England. We are called—whoever else are called—to be Saviours of religion. We are to float the ark of faith upon this earth all flooded with the rains of unbelief. But only one way is there to keep our ark from foundering in these tumultuous waters, and that is by pure and noble character. We have, I think, a little mistaken what God wants of us. It is not theistic dialectics. It is the single eye, the steadfast hand, the tender heart, the prayerful soul. These are the armament of the true Church of God. When is it that the great waves of infidelity, of unfaith, have swept over this human world? It has ever been when men and women had lost the simplicity of their manners, smiled on luxury and self-indulgence, abandoned the vigour of duty, dallied with specious vice. Rome loosened her faith in the brave old gods, the belief in which was so much nearer religious truth than the later polite eclecticism, when pro-consuls were making Rome the home of Asiatic effeminacy; and lost it altogether when prætorians turned the city into the metropolis of violence and lust. Rome once more became, under the cloak of orthodoxy, the centre of utter unbelief when the poverty and simplicity of the preceding centuries were followed by the covetous splendour of the epoch of renaissance. France swerved from her Catholicism into the wildest Atheism when the court of the Bourbon had abandoned itself to gilded vice. Our own England sees to-day these three phenomena simultaneously: an enormous diffusion of material comfort among the populace, a multiplication of marital infidelities among the aristocracy, and a loosening of the older religious faith in every stratum of society.

What then is our calling if we are to maintain the faith? It is to simplicity and purity of life. It is to the losing of ourselves in the great Spirit of God that bathes our fair world all around. The temptations to a lower tone of life than the very highest are many, subtle, and insidious. But if we yield to them, then farewell to all our hopes of restoring to men true religion. The holy grail of our search, the jewelled faith in the love of God, can be grasped by pure hands only. Not the Lancelots of the world, men of alternate base and noble passions, but only the pure Sir Galahads can hope to hold it up to shine with its blessed radiance on the faces of mankind. We of these free churches have our contests between old school and new, between rival movements of thought and learning. I do not underestimate the momentousness of these contentions. But I say: it is not on these things that hangs our good or ill-success in keeping alight the sacred torch of faith which so many winds and waters strive to quench.

Brethren! it is a plain matter, this awful responsibility of ours. It is the godly life, unmarred by jealousy, undebased by ambition, untouched by rivalry, the pure, lowly, steadfast life, devoted and devotional; in morality beyond reproach, in spirituality raised above the levels of envy, impatience, and disputatiousness, it is this and this alone that can make of us the true champions of the faith, the worthy successors of patriarchs, prophets, martyrs, of saints, and of evangelists, who have handed the living word all down the long avenue of the centuries. The temptations to a mixed life—a life in part worldly, secular, untouched by the Holy Spirit—are enormous in our day. Even a minister may go on from year to year a successful pulpiteer, a successful philanthropist, a successful reformer seemingly, with spirit stagnant in him, unstirred by the breath of God. He must have an ear acute for the whispering of the Holy Spirit who would rise to the high life we are called upon to lead. Yet I know not who may so arise, if we may not. We have a faith that reverences every motion of the Holy Ghost, and is unbound by any traditions of human ordinance. We have a God unshadowed by the lies and calumnies of trumped up theologies. We have a Christ whom we can interpret as our spirits need, and see reflected in a thousand saints and sages of every age. We have a Bible which is not clasped between any narrow covers, but receives within its sacred canon every holy utterance which has ever re-echoed the truth of God. We are untrammelled by any creed that would check the loftiest aspirations of our hearts, or intervene between God and our souls when they seek each other out. Surely, then we, if any, may lead the simple and sincere, the pure and truthful life, which makes sure the knowledge of God, and infuses the contagion of religious faith among his children. Be sure there is no argument so dissuasive from religious belief as the concealed self-satisfaction or even the microscopic dereliction from the path of honour or the spirit of jealousy and self-seeking detected in the professor of religion. Be sure there is no argument so persuasive to religious faith as the countenance fashioned by beauty, in spite of rugged features, by the Holy Spirit, the lip on which hovers the kiss of God, the eye which glows and softens with the reflected lights of heaven, the smile which tells with eloquence surpassing speech of a heart at one with the good and true and a life led in communion with the Father of mankind. I believe that it is offered to us in the providence of God to be among the chief helpers in sweeping back the great wave of atheism that is gathering up its waters visibly before men's eyes, offered to us as possessors of the most reasonable religious faith, the broadest and freest charity known in the religious world. But I am persuaded that only by that demonstration of the spirit which consists in a life manifestly lived in the hourly love and fear of God, can we achieve the sublime and glorious mission which the age, mankind, and God unite to proffer us.

A LAYMAN'S VIEW OF MR. KNAPTON'S SECESSION.

WHATEVER Unitarian or other ministers of free religion may have to say with reference to the attack upon their faith which appeared in the Herald on November 1st, in the farewell address of the Rev. W. Knapton, I hope you will allow me to offer some defence of the principles of that faith from a layman's point of view. The candour and marked ability of the address will no doubt secure for it considerable attention, and, if its lesson be rightly read, may be the means of arousing all of us to renewed exertion on behalf of the principles which we hold dear. It is much to be regretted that the Bradford congregation should have refused Mr. Knapton the use of the chapel in which to state his reasons for resignation. The Unitarian public are, however, greatly indebted to you for the liberality which has enabled them to read for themselves this trenchant attack upon their principles and practice. Despite the fundamental error which pervades it, there is much in it which we may freely and gratefully accept as just criticism upon our shortcomings.

Mr. Knapton would make it a grievance that he has not been allowed, or rather that the tacit understanding under which he undertook the duties of a Unitarian minister did not permit him to continue his ministry after a radical change in his theological views, and impugns thereupon the reality of the boast of Unitarians that they have a free pulpit. It must be admitted that if by that phrase is meant freedom to preach Roman Catholic doctrines on the one hand, or on the other hand a dogmatic Atheism, then the church, not expressly, but tacitly, allows no such liberty. Why should it be expected to do otherwise? Our constant cry of rejoicing is that we have escaped from the prison house of dogmatic belief into the free air of reverent search after truth. We have had laid before us the stern duty of "proving things," and have accepted, not without many imperfections in practice, the not less important command to hold fast to that which is good. Is the pulpit therefore not free? In the words of Mr. Knapton himself we do not retain our ministers as the advocates of any creed, or of any set of religious doctrines whatsoever. No, we ask them to assume the leadership in order to help us to realise a higher sense of duty and a nobler life, "to make undying music in the world," and believe that theological creeds, so far from being a help, are a hindrance to the realisation of the true life of the spirit. We are not willing therefore that any man should lead us back into the house of bondage, whether it be known as the authority of church, book, or creed.

Is it therefore surprising that the Unitarian "creed" should be a negative one, and ought we to be abashed at its attitude? Towards the creeds of all other churches as expressed in articles and confessions its position must be negative. That is the very reason for its existence. It gives a bold denial to what it believes false in those creeds, but it none the less affirms truths of vital importance. It denies the Trinity, it affirms the existence of a power which makes for righteousness, how to be understood or defined none can say; it denies the total depravity of man, it affirms that for all men there are possibilities of virtue, happiness and spiritual salvation; it denies the atonement, it affirms the duty of self-sacrifice; it denies the doctrine of eternal punishment, it affirms there is no escape from the evil consequences of sin, and that if the spiritual life of man be unending, its career must be one of constant progress in virtue and knowledge. It affirms the absolute, the imperative duty of every man to be loyal to his best instincts, to work for the good of his fellow creatures, to Live in pulses stirred to generosity

In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
For miserable aims that end with self.

It cannot therefore be true that the religion of Free Thinkers is nothing but a system of negations. It desires to retain all that is good in the old, whilst casting off that which it thinks is false, that which impedes the growth of the full spirit of man. And if at times the negative aspect of this faith would appear to have undue attention, it results from the combative attitude of the orthodox churches, which, decrying good works, make man's salvation depend upon creeds which they can neither explain nor defend. No, it is a religion of profound faith and excellent hopes. Looking back upon what man has been, it looks forward with joy and confidence to what he yet may be. It is on the side, and always has been, of political and social freedom, of universal education, of merciful and equal laws, of the brotherhood of man, of free commercial intercourse; and its public men have ever been ready with time and money in promotion of all those measures which lift the people to a higher level of duty and well being. That Unitarians do not support their institutions as they ought is doubtless true; but I question whether other churches have not a similar charge to urge with respect to their own members. We are small in numbers, yet the amount of money subscribed yearly per head is by no means inconsiderable. Let us, however, accept the rebuke and recognise the duty of giving more liberally, so that our institutions may be sustained in full efficiency and in order to attract the ablest men to the ranks of our ministry.

To look, however, for the fruits of Unitarian principles within the church exclusively is to do those principles a singular injustice. I think their bitterest foe would be ready at once to acknowledge that the men who hold them are the foremost in every good work, in town councils, on local and school boards, on committees for the promotion of measures for the public good, that there is no community of religious people which furnishes so large a proportion of efficient workers for the common welfare. Can, therefore, the principles which produce such men be bad? When Mr. Knapton has the temerity to ask what would have been the moral and spiritual condition of Bradford, and we may presume of any other large town, if it had been left to the moral and spiritual power of the Unitarian Church, we might well try to imagine what would be the state of things in this country if the earnest, never wearying efforts of Free Religious thinkers had been withheld. I say it fearlessly, without the slightest wish to disparage men of other faiths, that such are and have been the very salt of the earth. The impotency of the principles of free religion forsooth! Their potency is seen in the long roll of noble men and women, the disciples of that faith, who have spent themselves for the good of their fellow citizens in this land. The spirit of the grand old words of Micah is an all sufficient answer to those who would plunge us into the metaphysical subtleties and perplexing inconsistencies of creeds and confessions. "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

J. H. REYNOLDS, JUN.

MAIDSTONE.—On Sunday last Mr. Alderman Ellis was elected mayor for the third time. The ex-mayor, Mr. Alderman Haynes, also belongs to our congregation here.

HULL: BOWLALLEY LANE MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY.—The opening meeting of the winter session of this society was held on Wednesday evening, the 6th inst. The inaugural address was given by the president, the Rev. J. M. Dixon, after which came music, readings, and recitations. Notwithstanding the very unfavourable weather there was a large attendance, the school-room being well filled, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

CHILDREN'S HYMN.

REV. J. C. WILLIAMS.

THE eagle is free to soar to the sun,
The river is free its bright course to run,
And free are the winds, the breeze, and the blast,
No fetters can bind, no chains hold them fast.

CHORUS.

For freedom pray, and for freedom toil,
Freedom from error and sin:
Truth's temple doors throw open wide,
That the free may enter in.

And free is the mind to search after truth,
To glean, as of old in harvest glean'd Ruth,
To gather from book, from mountain, and flood,
Knowledge of nature and knowledge of God.

For freedom pray, &c.

The works of God's hands all speak of His might;
The brightness of day, the darkness of night,
His goodness proclaim—His wisdom declare,
Inspiring our trust, our praise, and our prayer.

For freedom pray, &c.

And free is the soul to bow and adore,
At whatever shrine its worship to pour,
Where best it can feel the ONE PRESENCE near
To strengthen or teach, to comfort or cheer.

For freedom pray, &c.

For freedom, oh God, we bless Thy GREAT NAME,
By birthright 'tis ours—that birthright we claim;
In spirit unbound, we draw nigh to Thee,
Great Father of all—great God of the free.

For freedom pray, &c.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

THE "QUARTERLY REVIEW" ON PROTESTANTISM.

THE current number of the Quarterly Review contains an article on the subject, "Is the Church of England Protestant?" It begins by adducing evidence of the tendency among modern High Churchmen not only to ignore, but to dispute the Protestantism of the Church of England; in fact, to divide Christendom into "Catholics" and "Protestants," and then to range the English Church on the former side against the latter. The writer's principal evidence is gathered from the new leading organ of the party, the Church Quarterly Review, and after citing various passages from recent numbers, he observes that "the language quoted completely justifies the charge of Romanising tendencies brought against the extreme High Churchmen of the present generation." The Quarterly fears that "the true relations of the Church of England with Protestantism and the Protestant Churches are completely obscured to the mind of a large number of the clergy; and there is consequently great danger lest the laity should be persuaded that their Church does not really possess the Protestant characteristics which are necessary if they are to retain their confidence in her." It is asked if the battle of Protestantism is to be fought over again. If it could be substantiated that the Church of England is not Protestant, but Catholic in the Anglo-Catholic sense, "it would not deserve to stand as an Establishment for the space of a single Parliament." The article closes as follows: "A startling disillusion would await these priests, if ever the experiment of disestablishment were to be tried. They would find that the laity, once driven to protect themselves from clerical usurpations, would take good care that the Protestantism which they cherish in the Prayer-book, as in the other formularies of the church, was enforced on her ministers with a stringency never yet approached. The High Churchmen of the day are endeavouring to read into the Prayer-book the corruptions which it was its very object to shake off, and they attempt to explain away the Articles in accordance with this perversion of historical truth. Should the laity have the opportunity of making their voice heard, they would finally prevent, at whatever cost, any such juggle with facts. It is impossible, however, within our space to enter into the collateral controversies thus suggested. We trust we have sufficiently shown that the Church of England bears upon its face the most unmistakable marks of being a Protestant—no less than a Catholic—church, and that, until the rise of the un-English school of theology now so prominent, it was united—alike by its history and by the principles of its greatest divines—with Protestant interests and Protestant principles. It is conceivable that the Ritualists and their High Church allies may seduce a considerable body of the English clergy from loyalty to those principles and interests. But, in proportion as they succeed, they will produce an impassable gulf between the Church of England of the Reformation and that of the present day, and a similar and a more disastrous division between the English clergy and the English people. When the clergy abjure Protestantism, they will abjure all sympathy with one of the primary movements of English life; their church will cease to be the Church of England, and they will sink into the condition of an Ultramontane priesthood amidst a contemptuous laity."

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT IN AMERICA.

At the semi-annual session, just held, of the New York Synod of the Reformed Episcopal Church, there was a suggestive discussion on the question indicated in the heading of this note. The debate occurred on a long resolution presented by Mr. T. WOODHULL, of New York. Mr. WOODHULL's motion substantially was that, in view of the recent general discussion of the subject of eternal punishment, the belief of the Synod is that the eternal punishment of those who die in their sins is a tremendous truth taught in the Word of God, and in view of the failure of the General Council to take action on the subject, that the Synod earnestly request the General Council to formally recognise the doctrine at its next meeting. Mr. WOODFORD, temporarily resigning the chair to a delegate, vigorously opposed the resolution, declaring in general terms his disbelief in the existence of hell, and announcing his determination to withdraw as an officer from the body in the event of the adoption of the resolution. After several delegates had spoken in favour of the resolution, the Rev. Mr. GRAY requested the Synod to join in prayer before deciding the question. The Rev. Dr. J. H. HOWARD SMITH, Emmanuel Church, Newark, while expressing his belief in the doctrine, hoped that individual laymen would be allowed a great deal of latitude in regard to its acceptance, and that their rejection of it would not affect their membership in the churches. He urged that the resolution be withdrawn. The Rev. Dr. SABINE hoped that the resolution would not be withdrawn. Its adoption would be simple fidelity to the Word of God, beyond which he would not dare to go. A motion proposing that the resolution should lie on the table was lost, as was also one to postpone further consideration of the question. The Synod then adopted the resolution, those opposed to it refraining from voting. Will they now secede from the Synod?

I love the world the more because I know it is God's world, even as a dry leaf, given by a lover, is dearer than all pearls from whoso loves us not.—Theo. Parker.

GERMAN PROTESTANTISM.

WE are indebted to a lady who has resided for some time in Germany, for the following interesting sketch of the state of religion in that country:

The present unsettled state of society in Germany, and the interest excited in England by the religious and social troubles of the empire, lead me to offer you a brief account of the religious condition of this country. This will also give me an opportunity of expressing how keenly I now feel the worth of the work which is being done by our Unitarian churches in England. After witnessing the blighting influences of the German State Church system, more especially when conducted, as it is in Prussia, with almost military rigour, one turns with relief to our Liberal Christianity, which offers to minds of various types a congenial religious home.

One perceives also from such a standpoint, how useful our denomination has been in serving as a consistent exponent of Protestant principles, and vindicating the possibility of the union of an enlightened faith with full spiritual freedom. It may perhaps comfort some of those who have doubts as to the utility of our Liberal Churches, that here it is readily acknowledged that the want of such a bulwark as they have formed against unbelief and indifference is one of the chief causes of the present disappointing condition of religion in the empire.

It is not pleasant to be forced to the conviction that the ministrations of the Protestant clergy in most parts of this country have scarcely any controlling or elevating influence on the people. Not only is the number of their hearers generally small, but as pastoral visiting is almost unknown their social influence is extremely limited. The strict regulations which were in force up to a few years ago, in respect to baptism, confirmation, and other religious rites led the masses to regard the clergy as State officials, paid to maintain what was commonly called "Police Christianity." The middle classes also harbour a grudge against the clergy on account of their frequent opposition to political and educational reforms. And in literary and professional circles there is much free and easy criticism of the pulpit for its denunciations of scientific discoveries and liberal thought. Thus the Orthodox clergy have not merely lost the respect and support of many intellectual men, but a spirit of scepticism and of antagonism to all religion has widely diffused itself throughout society. And this is not to be wondered at when it is remembered that for nearly forty years religious teaching and popular opinion have run in almost opposite directions. During all that period the State Governments have sought to restore belief in the old Lutheran doctrines as a means of securing political obedience and checking the growth of Radicalism. And in their foolish dread of free thought they have admitted few men of liberal opinions to places in the church, and fewer still to seats in the higher church courts. And it is to be deeply regretted that many of the clergy have been subservient enough to shape their creed and policy according to the dictates of those in power. In England such a course would have been less prejudicial to the interests of organised religion than in this country, for the Germans have very little of the peculiarly English capacity of listening for years to sermons without asking themselves whether they believe in the theology expressed therein or not. Besides their higher literary taste, and their close acquaintance with the masterpieces of their own literature make them very impatient of being fed with the husks of the mediæval theology. In consequence the dogmatism of the Augsburg Confession finds its adherents chiefly in those sections of society where clerical influence and Conservative tendencies are strongest, and there Orthodoxy often assumes a most uncompromising and even fanatical aspect.

German Protestantism also suffers greatly from its cold and unattractive ritual. In this respect it is frozen into much the same mould as that in which it was cast in the Reformation age. In this most musical country the church music alone is primitive and poor, the prevailing mode of singing being a kind of monotonous chanting from hymn books of a very venerable appearance. The alternate singing of one clause of a sentence, with a few bars played upon the organ, prevents any sequence of thought, and checks any hearty uplifting of the voice in praise. Only in a few favoured churches which possess a fine orchestra and choir, is the music of a more ambitious kind, and in some of these the grandest sacred compositions are beautifully rendered. At such services the attendance is nearly always large, but some difficulty is found in preventing the congregation from dwindling away before the beginning of the sermon. In other respects the ritual is capable of great improvement. The prayers are often unimpressive, and the sermon, always delivered extempore, is frequently poor in thought and style.

Thus the Protestant churches of this country, as regards their organisation, their doctrinal standpoint, and what is curiously styled "the public practice of religion," are unequal to the needs of the time, and unfitted to become centres of moral power and spiritual influence. Far less are they fitted to heal the divisions between class and class, or to calm and reconcile the combatants in the present keen struggle between the proletariat and the more fortunate classes.

The most hopeful sign in German Protestantism is the Liberal movement in the various churches. Here and there throughout Germany are to be found able and enlightened preachers whose teaching is quite abreast of the knowledge and culture of the day. Bremen has a group of these of which any city might be proud. Even Berlin has several of this school, in spite of the reactionary policy which has been at work of late in high quarters. The widely scattered members of this Liberal Party find a rallying point and centre of operations in the Protestanten Verein, which can claim for itself the credit of being one of the best abused institutions of Germany. This association, which has about 120 branch societies, is now most earnestly striving to promote a healthy revival of religious life amongst the people, to apply religion as a healing influence in the country's present troubles, to uphold the rights of conscience in matters of faith, and to promote the harmony of all churches in the unity of the spirit. Under its auspices books and pamphlets in defence of Liberal Christianity, or explanatory of theological and ecclesiastical questions are widely distributed, while its seven religious papers uphold its principles in all parts of Germany. This brief notice of its activity brings me to a convenient resting place, and the remaining portion of the subject, namely, the effect of the present decline of religion on the life of the people, will be dealt with in my concluding letter.

THE ELEVENTH PROTESTANTENTAG IN HILDESHEIM.

I.

OCTOBER 8TH TO 11TH, 1878.

[THE following report has been submitted to the committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association by the Rev. ANDREW CHALMERS, of Cambridge.]

Permit me, in presenting my report of the recent Protestantentag, to thank you for the privilege of attending and taking part in its proceedings, as the representative of your Association. It could not be other than gratifying to be entrusted with this responsible duty at such a time as the present, when the Protestanten Verein specially deserves and requires the sympathy and support of our Unitarian churches. Never before, since its foundation, has its position been more critical, and its work more difficult to accomplish. The reactionary policy of the Prussian ecclesiastical authorities, the strife of parties, and the grave social troubles of the Empire, have exposed the members of the Verein to much undeserved persecution, and made heavy demands on their patriotism and their faith. Under such trying circumstances they naturally value most highly every evidence of fraternal feeling on the part of their English allies. It is therefore scarcely necessary to state that the assurances of your interest in their work, and the good wishes for its success which you desired me to express, were warmly welcomed and highly appreciated. In return they desire me to convey to you their heartfelt thanks and kindest greetings, with the hope that the union between the two Associations may be more and more closely cemented by the consciousness of common aims and work, and the bond of true Christian fellowship. The great kindness shown to me personally by members of the Verein, in Hildesheim and other places, may also be regarded as an additional proof of the strong desire that is felt for a close alliance between the liberal Protestantism of Germany and England. In reference to this my thanks are specially due to the gentlemen whose hospitality I enjoyed during the meetings, and to friends whom I visited in Bremen, Wolfenbüttel, and Osnabrück.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL SITUATION IN GERMANY.

Ecclesiastical affairs in Germany are at present so disturbed and complicated, that a brief sketch of the situation is almost necessary for the full understanding of the late proceedings in Hildesheim. But such an outline of recent events cannot, unfortunately, be given without a feeling of painful regret. One recalls involuntarily the days of Germany's grandest triumphs, and contrasts them mournfully with the present days of her disgrace. Little more than seven short years lie between her glory and her shame. The outburst of patriotic fervour and religious enthusiasm which animated her people in the struggle with France, and hastened the consummation of German unity, has long since spent its force.

Religious patriotism has given place to petty self-seeking, and faith in God to blank, cold materialism. Military supremacy is maintained regardless of grave national suffering. Widespread and bitter discontent has created keen hostility between the proletariat and the more fortunate classes. Twice within a brief period the assassin's hand has been raised against a ruler who, whatever be his errors or his failings, has always sought to act as the Father of his people. And the Government, irritated by this outrage, embarrassed by financial difficulties, provoked by Ultramontane stubbornness, and alarmed by the ubiquitous "red spectre" of Socialism, seeks to cut the Gordian knot of the Empire's difficulties by a harsh, repressive policy.

In every such crisis religious liberalism is exposed to danger, along with political freedom. And the Protestanten Verein has lately found that its proceedings have been looked upon with a suspicious eye, not merely by its ordinary opponents, but by not a few in influential quarters in Prussia. Elsewhere, the rights and privileges of liberal Protestantism have not thus far been curtailed or threatened. The Protestants of Alsace remain in the enjoyment of the large measure of freedom formerly allowed them by the French Government. In Baden, Wurtemberg, Hesse Darmstadt, and Thuringia, the Liberals hold the secure position they have won for themselves in the various State Churches. The same may be said of the Palatinate and the Free cities of Bremen and Hamburg, while in Saxony the Liberals are at last organising themselves against the spurious Protestantism upheld by the Dresden Consistory. In most of these provinces the clergy are simply bound to maintain the principles of the Reformation, and are under no rigid obligation to make their preaching square with the letter of the Augsburg Confession, or the creeds. Consequently, a heresy case has come to be regarded as an anachronism, and usually ends in the unpopularity of its promoters, and the glorification of the accused.

THE CHURCH IN PRUSSIA.

Unfortunately, this favourable condition of things does not apply to Prussia, or the former Kingdom of Hanover, whose State Church after the annexation was allowed to retain a kind of independent existence. Hence the anomaly of men being constantly inducted to pastorates in the Middle and South German States, whose heresy would draw down the fulminations of the Brandenburg Consistory.

The enlightened Christian teaching enjoyed by hundreds of village congregations is prohibited as far as possible in Prussia, and especially in Berlin, the so-called "City of Intelligence." The doctrines which Schleiermacher preached in that city sixty years ago, with universal acceptance, are to-day under the ban. And the very same Government which by the May laws compels theological students to pass through a scientific and literary training, is at present doing its utmost to keep Protestant clergymen from preaching in accordance with that very culture on which it insists. Prussia thus appears before the world—fighting Rome with one hand, professedly in the interests of liberty and enlightenment, while casting its shield over Protestant obscurantism and bigotry. Its Government is certainly paying a high price for the unquestioning support of the old Lutheran party, and a short account of the circumstances will show how completely it is stultifying itself.

About five years ago a new Constitution for the Prussian Church was carefully formulated by Dr. Falk, Cultus minister, and Dr. Hermann, President of the Supreme Church Council. This was based on the Protestant principle of self-government, and was designed to enable congregations to manage their own affairs. The church committees, and district and provincial Synods which the Constitution called into existence, would no doubt have worked successfully had not the old church courts been left much as before, with nothing to prevent friction between the old machinery and the new.

The Conservative party in the church, aided by the Consistories and the patrons of benefices, have known how to take advantage of this defect. And the history of the Prussian Church during the last four years has afforded many striking illustrations of the difficulty of wresting the keys of authority from any privileged class. All the power of vested interests, the dead weight of unenlightened bigotry, the subtle tactics of the court theologians, and the free use of the Emperor's name, have been turned to account in this conflict. And all honour and gratitude are due to the leading members of the Protestanten Verein for their energetic and consistent guardianship of liberal interests. Without their efforts the concessions made by the Constitution would before now have been almost entirely neutralised or withdrawn. And it is little to the credit of the Prussian Liberal party, in and out of the Landtag, that the Verein has had to fight this battle so slightly supported by moral or material help. And the same may be said of the Liberals of Hanover, where the higher church authorities have lately attempted to ride rough shod over Liberal Protestantism in the interests of Guelphic Particularism. And to this lamentable indifference, and not to any want of courage or fidelity on the part of the Protestanten Verein, is due the fact that our co-religionists in Northern Germany find their position that of an ecclesia pressa, their leaders exposed to ill-feeling and reproach, and their right to continue in the State Church actually called in question. This right, it is only just to state, is so clear and defensible, in view of the broad terms of subscription, that the Liberals are fully justified in maintaining their position against an ecclesiastical beaureaucracy, and a class of opponents who of late have sought the weapons of their warfare in the flesh and not in the spirit.

THE PROTESTANTENTAG.

As the proceedings at the recent Protestantentag were shaped to a large extent by the circumstances referred to in the foregoing sketch, it will not be necessary to enter largely into details. On the evening of October 8th, about a hundred members of the Verein met in the Assembly Rooms for social intercourse, the committee being hard at work in another part of the building arranging the more private business of the Association. Amongst the well known supporters of the Verein who were present at this reunion, were Professor Pfeiderer, of Berlin; Dr. Manchot, of Bremen; Pastor Klapp, the travelling lecturer of the Verein; Senator Schläger, of Hanover; Pastors Hossbach, Lisco, and Schneider, of Berlin; Pastor Richter, of Mariendorf; Dr. Techou, of Berlin; Dr. Spaeth, of Breslau; Professor Seydel and Dr. Brinkau, of Leipzig; Professor Fresenius, of Wiesbaden; Pastors Albrecht and Kambl, and Professor Schmidt, of Basel, as representatives of Swiss Protestantism; Herr Exter, representing the Great Verein in the Palatinate, which numbers 18,000 members; Pastors Knappert, Maronier, and Böhringer, from Holland; Pastor Engelmann, of Strasbourg; and Dr. Seiber, of Copenhagen.

On the morning of October 9th, the business meeting of the delegates was held, at which the financial position of the Verein and other matters were carefully discussed. It was acknowledged that the present commercial and social troubles of the Empire had somewhat crippled its resources and hindered its progress; but, in spite of many obstacles, the membership (including, of course, that of the small local Vereins) numbered 7,328 at the time the annual report was printed. Eight new local societies had been founded in the past year. Numerous courses of lectures had been delivered, large numbers of pamphlets distributed, while the seven newspapers of the Verein had upheld its principles, and promoted its aims in all parts of Germany. The favourite scheme of appointing a travelling lecturer for the Eastern provinces of Prussia had to be set aside, for the present, in view of more pressing requirements.

The first public meeting was held in the Concert Hall of the Assembly Rooms, on the afternoon of the same day, under the presidency of Dr. Techou, member of the Prussian Parliament. In his opening address he presented a striking picture of the present unsatisfactory condition of Protestantism in Prussia, and defined the concessions necessary for a reasonable system of self-government. He also addressed a few appropriate words of welcome to the delegates from Switzerland, England, Holland, and Alsace.

Herr Richter, also a member of the Prussian Parliament, then delivered an able address on "Freedom of Teaching and Congregational Rights." Alluding to the vexatious oppression of liberal pastors in Hanover, the late heresy case in Schleswig Holstein, and the Hossbach and Kalthoff cases in Prussia, he strongly urged the necessity of a combination of all true Liberals against the common danger. He then submitted a set of theses for the approval of the meeting, commenting on each in turn. These afforded ample evidence of the reasonableness of the claims made by the Liberals both as regards church organisation and the freedom of the pulpit. The points most carefully stated and discussed were those which had come into question during the late ecclesiastical crisis. These were the right of congregations to elect their own minister, the right of representation in disputed settlements, the denial of the authority of the State in matters of doctrine, and the freedom of professors from ecclesiastical control.

Professor Pfeiderer, of Berlin, followed, in advocacy of the utmost possible simplification of the present cumbrous organisation of the German churches, and pleaded for the recognition of the binding power of the Gospel of Christ, as infinitely superior to the artificial restraints of State control. The theses being adopted, a powerful speech by Dr. Manchot, vindicating the position and aims of the Protestant Verein, and showing the groundlessness of the charges brought against it by its opponents, brought the proceedings to a close.

MONTON.

WELCOME TO THE REV. JAS. HARWOOD, B.A.

ON Sunday morning, Nov. 3rd, the Rev. James Harwood, B.A., successor to the late Rev. T. E. Poynting, entered upon his ministerial duties as pastor of the Unitarian Church at Monton. The morning service was opened with the "old hundred."

Before Jehovah's awful throne
Ye nations bow with sacred joy.

The text was taken from the 2nd Epistle to the Corinthians, xvi., 3:—"But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." The congregation was large. At the close he asked for their love and confidence, though he could not expect to find ready for him that place in their hearts which his predecessor had by rare gifts and graces won. In the evening there was again a very large congregation. Mr. Harwood took his text from Acts v., 20:—"Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life;" and from 2nd epistle of Corinthians, chap. xiv., 13:—"We have the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe and therefore speak." In the course of his sermon he said that if he were asked his ideal of a Christian minister he should certainly say one who had the power of raising men's aspirations towards God, and making them feel the glorious susceptibilities of human nature and the beauty of holiness. The singing at both services was good.

RECOGNITION TEA MEETING.

On Thursday evening, Nov. 7th, a tea meeting was held in the school for the purpose of giving Mr. Harwood a welcome amongst them. Tea was served in one of the class-rooms at five o'clock, and at half-past six o'clock a public meeting was held in the large school-room. Mr. Henry Leigh presided, and there were also present the Revs. G. H. Wells, M.A., Charles Beard, B.A., W. Binns, Charles Wicksteed, B.A., Charles T. Poynting, B.A., J. Black, M.A., and others. During the evening members of the choir at Monton sang a selection of music.

The CHAIRMAN said: We are met together this evening to celebrate an event of the deepest interest to us all. About three months ago the Rev. Jas. Harwood, B.A., was unanimously invited by the Monton congregation to become the minister of their church; he was pleased to accept their invitation, and we now desire to offer to Mr. and Mrs. Harwood a most cordial and heartfelt welcome, and earnestly hope that their union with us may be a long and a happy one. Mr. Harwood is called upon to succeed one whose high intellectual and spiritual attainments gained for him the esteem of all, and who, as the years rolled on, endeared himself more and more to the hearts of his congregation. His gentleness and warm sympathy won for him their deepest love, and can never be forgotten. His influence over the young, in whom he took such special interest, can never die, but must bear fruit in after life. We feel sure that in Mr. Harwood we have chosen a successor who will carry on the noble work of our late dear minister; his high abilities, his deep interest in the work of the Sunday-school, which is the nursery of the church, and his kind and genial manner will, I feel sure, soon win for him the love and affection of us all. In conclusion, I desire, on behalf of the Monton congregation, to offer to Mr. and Mrs. Harwood a most sincere and hearty welcome to their new home, with every good wish for their future health and happiness, and the earnest hope that they may long remain with us. (Applause.)

Mr. DENDY, as secretary of the invitation committee, said he could and might speak hopefully, that in their friend (Mr. Harwood) they would find one who was willing and able to help them in their work, and who, as time passed on, would become one of them. He believed Mr. Harwood was pre-eminently qualified to carry on the work of their late minister. They lived in an age of critical moment in the history of the Christian church, for theological and spiritual confusion never so widely prevailed as at present. Taking hold of the right hand of Mr. Harwood, he wished him success, happiness, and health in his labours amongst them at Monton.

The Rev. G. H. WELLS, of Gorton, as second senior minister in the district, gave Mr. Harwood the right hand of fellowship on behalf of those ministers. Mr. Harwood, he said, came amongst them not as a novice but as a tried minister. They would have in Mr. Harwood a friend who would support them in the varied ministerial, educational, and social duties in which they were engaged. He hoped that God would preserve and keep Mr. Harwood amongst them.

Mr. HARWOOD, in acknowledging the hearty welcome given to him, thanked those who had spoken so kindly. It was a great gratification to him to be surrounded by many old friends, as well as by those whom he hoped to count as friends in the future. The present was a critical moment in the history of the Monton church, for the congregation, in seeing a fresh occupant of the pulpit, could not but be reminded with fresh force of their loss in Mr. Poynting's death. It was also a critical moment in his own life, for, in accepting the invitation to Monton he had had to leave a congregation with which his connection was of the happiest kind, and of his feelings to which he dare not trust himself to speak. Mr. Harwood claimed that the liberty enjoyed by our ministers was something more than "an empty boast," as had recently been asserted. So long as a congregation and its minister were in sufficient sympathy with each other to enable them to worship and work together, no court of law, no conference, no trust deed, could require their separation; while so soon as that sympathy failed, it was desirable that the connection should cease. In speaking of the work of the ministry Mr. Harwood contended that preparation for the public services must take the first place, and ought not to be sacrificed to anything else. At the same time he acknowledged the importance of the pastoral duties. He thought it better to concentrate attention on a few things and do them as well as he could, rather than to dissipate energy over a larger number without doing anything thoroughly. He was specially interested in the Sunday-school, and hoped it would not be allowed to suffer from lack of teachers; the school work must necessarily be left to a large extent in the hands of the congregation, and to secure its efficiency he must look to the help which had been kindly promised. He asked the congregation to give him its sympathy and support, for it would be his desire to justify whatever confidence might be extended to him, and to devote himself heart and soul to the work to which he had been called.

A FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH THE HOPE OF THE FUTURE RELIGIOUS LIFE OF ENGLAND.

The Rev. WM. BINNS said: Is a free church really the hope of the future religious life of England as the sentiment you have asked me to speak about takes for granted? I think so; and so do you. Nay, I am sure so. But put the question to the great religious organisations, outside ourselves, if any can be called outside us, who are catholic enough to embrace them all? The oldest church in Christendom (the Roman) will not say so. The modicum of freedom claimed by Dr. Dollinger and the Old Catholics ended in their excommunication; and the two chief converts Rome gained from Oxford, during the present century, Cardinal Manning and Dr. Newman, both regard a free church with the same bitterness that Lord Shaftesbury regarded Ecce Homo. But let it be confessed to their credit that neither of them would use the profane language of the saintly peer. Ask Presbyterians, and Professor Robertson Smith is a sufficient reply. Ask Independents, and the hubbub about the innocent Leicester Conference is the answer we get. Ask Wesleyan Methodists and the veteran missionary, Mr. Impey stares us in the face, though in rejecting eternal punishment he only shared the heresies of John Wesley in his ripe old age. Ask the Church of England, and neither the High, Low, nor Broad section will give you an affirmative reply. Mr. MacConnochie would disestablish, but he would not relax orthodoxy. The Bishop of Peterborough would allow latitude as to facing towards any point of the compass, but there he stops. And Dean Stanley and Matthew Arnold, and the cultured members of the Establishment, so long as they do not move for the repeal of the act of uniformity and the abolition of subscription, cannot be said to come up to our ideal. Yet, for all that, I believe in a free church. It is my hope for the future, and I lift up my voice and prophesy that the future will possess it, and that the spiritual posterity of our own little flocks will inherit the kingdom. I will explain what I mean. We may describe the ideal free church of the future by three negatives. First, it will be subject to no State supremacy. Christianity began to decline as a living power when Constantine imperialized it. Every onward impulse since has been a coming out of a state Egypt. The schisms and heretics, so called, have been the best pioneers of progress, and they have all been pious rebels against State despotism. And the Church of the Future will be as free from the control of prime ministers as literature and science are now, and as we are, from the manipulation of Lord Beaconsfield. There will be no Benjamin's mess in it through Public Worship Regulation Acts or similar interferences with what human souls deem needful to life. Second, there will be no sacerdotalism. That has been the bane of Christianity as it was the bane of Judaism. The prophets had to fight stoutly against the sons of Levi. Science has had to struggle against priestly dogmatism. The laity have always had to wrest spiritual liberty by main force from the grasp of a sacerdotal caste. There is no instance on record where the caste has willingly made all men partakers of its privileges. We are fighting the battle yet. In the Church of the Future the victory will be completely won. Third, and there will be no finis. How can there be? We trace in the history of the human mind, in its thoughts of God and the worship it owes to God, a record of incessant change—which has been in the main a change for the better—of narrower views yielding to wider, and of breaking clouds revealing the boundless blue of the skies between them and beyond them. In the good time coming the religious laws of the Medes and Persians, by which multitudes now swear, will have melted into the infinite azure of the past, if I may borrow a phrase of Professor Tyndall's; the Westminster Confession will be an interesting ecclesiastical curiosity; and there will be nobody left to whom we may apply Carlyle's satirical verse—

The builder of this Universe was wise,
He made all suns, all systems, planets, particles;
The plan He shaped his worlds and æons by
Was—Heavens! was—thy small nine and thirty articles.

This negative description leads me to the other and pleasanter side of the matter—the affirmative. I foresee a Church of the Future arising, a church of which the pregnant germ is already here. And I will mention three affirmative characteristics by which it may be known. The first will be that its members will consist of aspiring souls voluntarily gathered together, feeling their spiritual kinship, receiving grace from the same infinite source, it may be in different measures, according to their different natures, but each quickening each, and in the midst of their variety conscious of their mystic unity. There may be sects among them, but they will manage to get on without anathemas. As no one will be petted and pampered at the expense of the rest, there will be no room for envy and jealousy. And they will combine to express the national religion in the shape of national righteousness—which will be the best expression it has had since Joseph of Arimathea planted the Glastonbury thorn. In this way the Church of the Future will be the soul of the State, and not a State machine. The second characteristic will be the priesthood and the prophetic function of all the people. The finest incident I remember in the Old Testament is where Moses says, when news was brought him that laymen were prophesying outside the camp, "Would that all the people of the Lord were prophets!" I am persuaded that religion will increase in power, in intensity, and in clear vision, and particularly in practical application, in proportion as the distinction between parsons and people is broken down, and we come to look on the parsons simply as laymen performing special functions, which are equally obligatory, where the fitness exists, on all other laymen. Who can measure the good that would be done if a lawyer were occasionally called on to preach a sermon on casuistry, or a merchant on honourable commerce, or a tradesman on just weights and measures, or a working man on giving a fair day's work for a fair day's wages? But the Quaker doctrine of the spirit is the best illustration of what the Church of the Future will witness. Instead of sacerdotalism there will be inspired men and women, and prophets will occupy the pulpits, and not be absent from the pews. The third characteristic will be the illustration by the church of the law of development or evolution, not exactly, perhaps, as Mr. Darwin or Mr. Herbert Spencer might interpret it, but in some better fashion still, ordained by the perfect God, and worked out by men created in His potential image for immortality. What it will lead to I will not venture to predict. Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard; neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things God hath in store. If you like the picture I have painted, or rather suggested an outline of, paint it afresh in your worship and your lives, and make your own church one of the first fruits of the new creation.

After an interval occupied in conversation, the Rev. CHARLES BEARD spoke. A vote of thanks to the chairman was proposed by the Rev. J. BLACK, and was carried with acclamation.

LARNE: WELCOME TO THE REV. JAMES KENNEDY.

ON Tuesday week the Northern Presbytery of Antrim met at Larne to install the Rev. James Kennedy (late of Rademon, County Down) to the pastoral charge of the Old Congregation at Larne, as assistant to the Rev. Classon Porter, and as successor to the late lamented Rev. William C'Cullough. The introductory services were conducted by the Rev. William Smith, after which Rev. E. Crooks, Ballyclare, preached an excellent sermon from John xiv.—"Ye believe in God: believe also in Me." Rev. Alexander Gordon discoursed on the ecclesiastical ordination of the Presbytery, showing the Christian foundation of the Presbytery and the principles of religious freedom which it embodied. Rev. C. J. M'Alister having ascertained that the congregation adhered to the call given to the Rev. J. Kennedy, and that Mr. Kennedy adhered to his acceptance of the call, invited him to make any statement that he might desire to make. Mr. Kennedy, in happy terms, expressed the sentiments which he entertained, and the principles which he trusted would guide him in his mission at Larne. The Rev. Classon Porter then offered up the installation prayer, and the Rev. C. J. M'Alister delivered the charge to the minister and congregation. The proceedings terminated with prayer and the benediction.

THE DINNER.

The congregation entertained the new minister and the Presbytery at dinner in the M'Garel Town Hall at three o'clock. The Rev. Classon Porter presided. Besides the ministers present at dinner there were the following gentlemen:—Messrs. W. H. Bingham, Rademon; Robert Cleland, Rademon; H. R. M'Robert, Ballynahinch; Lowry Martin, Rademon; John Crawford, chairman Larne Town Commissioners; Dr. Hunter, Larne; Messrs. David Nelson, John Maxwell, Alex. Fleming, Hugh Bailie, Robert Gibson, Wm. Henry, John M'Ninch, Larne; John M'Ninch, Ballyboley; Robert M'Ninch Ballyboley; Robert M'Ninch, Kilwaughter; Peter M'Gregor, Robert R. Lusk, John Gault, William Gault, Ballyclare; James A. Wiley, Ballyclare; Robert H. Bailey, Dunadry; Daniel Blair, Francis Mahon, William Alexander, Daniel P. Hunter, Samuel Hunter, William Pinkerton, John M'Ninch, Kilwaughter; David Gray, Carneal; Samuel Magill, Thomas Beggs, John Wallace, James Nelson, Kilwaughter; John Rock, Samuel Rock, Hugh Nelson, Patrick Gingles, W. Workman, William Gingles, &c.

After dinner the CHAIRMAN proceeded with the usual loyal sentiments—"The Queen and the rest of the Royal Family," and "The Lord Lieutenant and Prosperity to Ireland." He then proposed the health of the Earl of Antrim. Some people said his Lordship was a young man, but that was a fault which, if he lived, he would overcome. He was glad the Earl of Antrim's health had been proposed, for his Lordship deserved it. The CHAIRMAN had great pleasure in proposing the health of Mr. William Agnew, of Kilwaughter Castle, the good landlord of many, and the friend of us all. Mr. HAY briefly acknowledged the toast and sincerely thanked the company for the manner in which it had been honoured.

The CHAIRMAN next asked the company to drink in solemn silence to the memory of the late Rev. William M'Cullough. The toast was solemnly honoured.

The CHAIRMAN then invited the members of the Old Presbyterian Congregation of Larne and Kilwaughter to join in drinking the health of the new assistant minister, the Rev. James Kennedy. (Applause.)

The Rev. J. KENNEDY, in reply, thanked the representatives of the congregation for the warm greeting and cordial reception which they had given him. He expressed the hope that, as time rolled on, and as they became more intimately acquainted, the feelings of friendship and goodwill which they had now exhibited towards him would increase and intensify. (Applause.) It was well understood that he was attached to a particular form of theological belief; he was a Unitarian, but he was also a Christian, and ready to recognise good wherever found, and was prepared to co-operate with others in the advancement of the cause for which their Lord and Master laboured, suffered, and died. It was in that spirit that he rejoiced to recognise the presence there of members of other churches. He, however, made it the end and object of his life to secure the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace and love; and he hoped he would so live as that those who differed most widely from him would have no reason to look down upon him or think less of him for his creed. He again thanked them for the warm manner in which they had received him. (Applause.)

The CHAIRMAN next proposed the health of Mr. Kennedy's County Down friends, many of whom were present. The Rev. D. GORDON (Downpatrick) and the Rev. W. NAPIER (Clough) responded on behalf of the clergy, and Mr. BINGHAM (Rademon) replied for the laity. He was one of those who opposed Mr. Kennedy when he came to Rademon, but before six months the minority who were against him were amongst his warmest friends and admirers.

The CHAIRMAN next gave "Their English friends," and the Rev. W. E. MELLONE (Kidderminster) and the Rev. W. SHARMAN (Plymouth) replied.

The CHAIRMAN then proposed "Their friends of other denominations." The Rev. Mr. STEWART, Presbyterian minister of Ballycarry, replied in felicitous terms, and the Rev. Mr. DE COURCEY, Methodist minister of that town, also responded to the toast. He said that those like himself connected with other churches were glad to unite on that auspicious occasion, and give their congratulations to a future minister of a congregation there. (Applause.) Marked exclusiveness and pronounced bigotry on the part of Christian denominations towards each other tended, he thought, to widen existing breaches between them—(applause)—whereas, if they were influenced as they ought to be by that charity of that Gospel the spread of which they desired, and which was kind, it would tend to bridge over a great many existing differences, cement them in the bond of friendship, and tend also to bring them more fully together on occasions in which all good people should be combined in their opposition to evil.

The CHAIRMAN next gave the toast of the "Non-subscribing Association of Presbyterians in Ireland," and the Rev. DAVID THOMPSON (Mountpottinger, Belfast) responded.

The CHAIRMAN then said that, on the part of the congregation of Larne, he must take the liberty of saying that during a ministry of forty-four years he found they had troubled the Presbytery as little as any congregation within its bounds. (Applause.) He thought that was a very good sign of the congregation—when it gave very little trouble to the Presbytery. As their mouthpiece, therefore, he proposed "The Northern Presbytery of Antrim," coupled with the name of the Rev. C. J. M'ALESTER (Holywood), their worthy Moderator.

The Rev. C. J. M'ALESTER said it was not necessary that he should say a word in explanation of the principles or in recommendation of the character of the Northern Presbytery of Antrim, nor was it needful that he should refer to the origin of that Presbytery. They looked back to the year 1726, and thought of the noble men who then upheld the cause of non-subscription as their own forefathers, and they believed in the Northern Presbytery of Antrim they represented most fully the principles which they maintained; and these principles in a single sentence were simply the recognition of Christianity as a divine revelation, and the maintenance of religious liberty. (Applause.) It was not to be expected that men everywhere who professed Christianity would agree with their peculiar views. They believed them to be thoroughly Christian; but, at the same time, they recognised the right of every man in the world to think for himself and express the opinions which he held. (Applause.) It would, therefore, be most unjust to accuse them in any way of bigotry or intolerance. (Applause.) Indeed, the Non-subscribing Presbytery of Antrim had been exceedingly favoured. Small in number, they had had two leaders—not that they ever dictated, but always helped them—whose names, that of Bruce and Porter, were quite historic in connection with the cause of non-subscription. (Applause.) At the time of their secession the Bruces were distinguished not only for their scholarship, but also for their wisdom; and then they had a man likewise distinguished for wisdom, a cultivated gentleman with wonderful capacity and ready scholarship, the Rev. John Scott Porter. (Applause.) He was still living, and still able to guide them and to counsel them, and he trusted God would grant that he might yet live with them for years to help them and to advise them. (Applause.) And there was also one of these historic names which for a lengthened period had connection with non-subscription in the General Synod of Ulster, the Remonstrant Synod, and the Presbytery of Antrim, and it was suggested by that of their chairman. They had been a great deal aided in their Presbytery by his wisdom and by his counsel, and they had been greatly assisted by the encouragement of their old Presbyterian minister of Larne. He would now do two things. First, to suggest to this valued friend that he would employ the leisure he would now enjoy in drawing up a history of Non-subscription in the North of Ireland, for which his peculiar tastes and his great abilities admirably and specially fitted him; and, secondly, to ask them to drink the health of their most worthy and esteemed chairman. (Applause.)

The health of the chairman was then drunk with enthusiasm. The "Officiating Ministers of the Day," coupled with the name of the Rev. Alexander Gordon (Belfast), and other toasts, followed.

A congregational soirée, in honour of the newly-installed minister, took place in the evening.

RELIGIOUS VALUE OF THE UNITARIAN FAITH.

THE second lecture of the series promoted by the London District Unitarian Society, was delivered in Dalston, Hammersmith, and Peckham, by the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS, on "The Religious Value of the Unitarian Faith." The lecturer opened by saying that he wanted his hearers to observe the exact wording of his subject—"The Religious Value of the Unitarian Faith." That faith might be looked at from several points of view—in relation to history or morality, or metaphysics or logic, or to the use of reason. Thus it might be argued for as a new and natural departure on the development of man, or as a good working faith for the cultivation of a pure and elevated morality; or as giving a good account of as much as is known of the human mind and its relation to the Cause of all things; or as logically tenable; or as being in harmony with intelligence and common sense. But the point of view he had chosen was higher than all these, as it fixed upon the "religious" value of the Unitarian faith as the test of its truth and utility. This course was also needed, for though it was often admitted that the Unitarian faith was logical and reasonable, and sufficed to sustain a high form of morality, it was asserted to lack spirituality, and therefore to be deficient from a religious point of view. He proposed to show that its religious and spiritual value was very high; that, in fact, it might fail to master and sway on that very account, being based upon religious ideas and leading to religious hopes too spiritual, and rich for us at present, so that if Unitarians are themselves spiritually deficient or religiously poor, it was not their glorious faith that was to blame. The lecturer then proceeded very fully to explain what that faith was. The Unitarian believed in God as his heavenly Father, and in the holy spirit by him shed abroad in the hearts of his children. That idea was the keystone of all his faith, the foundation of his belief, and the test of opinions. The Unitarians believed in Jesus the son of God, our brother, the purest and best known to us, who best illustrated the sublime fact of sonship to God. That was the bright indication of our own; the best revelation of the Father's mind and heart, and in a very real sense the Word of God. The Unitarian believed in Jesus as a saviour, but regarded salvation as a deliverance from present ignorance, superstition, mistrust of God, and sin. The only sacrifice Jesus offered to God was that of a pure and obedient spirit, and the love and goodness of a holy life. Salvation was not the consequence of a transaction between God and Jesus, but a fact to be accomplished in every believing soul. Salvation through Jesus was the reception of that power and spirit from him that broke down sin, cast out enmity, and brought humanity back with godly sorrow to its Heavenly Father. All this was independent of any church or creed, and with the Unitarian culminated in his faith in a future life, intensely real in its sensations, duties, and employments, and in which God's tender mercies would be still over all His works, because His justice would be as perfect as His love, and His love would be all perfect and eternal. The Unitarian's faith, taken as a whole, arose from profound religious reverence and trust. His very denials, that had led to his being looked upon as iconoclastic only, were struck out of him by contact with what he felt to be irreligious and irreverent, and every one of them was based on a glorious affirmation. The religious character and value of the faith could be best seen by an analysis and examination one by one of the great conceptions of God, of man, of Jesus, of life here, and life hereafter, that were included in it. The lecturer then proceeded to point out the religious value of the doctrines of the unity of God, the brotherhood of Jesus, that salvation was a personal thing, and that the future life was the orderly and natural outcome of the present. The religious value of the doctrine that God is the actual inspirer of his children now, was, the lecturer said, greater perhaps than any other, inasmuch as it involved the momentous question whether living men and women had the witness in themselves, or whether they were shut up to the testimonies and experiences of days gone by. God, the lecturer contended, was as near to his creatures now as he ever was to any. In this belief was the glory of the Unitarian faith, inasmuch as it brought men nigh to God, broke down the artificial and arbitrary distinctions between ancient and modern times, and restored to devout souls the glorious faith that in God they live, and move, and have their being. Concluding a long lecture, in the delivery of which the speaker was frequently deeply moved, and which was listened to throughout with great attention, Mr. Hopps said that the Unitarian faith gave every proper motive for exertion, yet saved from horrible despair, its influence might be felt for good not only in everything relating to the religious life, but in view of the daily problems of daily life. Some might not be able to see as he did, but let all be honest to themselves and to God, assured that He at least would love the honest seeker after Him, to whatever conclusions he might come.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

LEEDS: MILL HILL CHAPEL.

THE Rev. Charles Hargrove, B.A., on Sunday morning last preached a sermon, having reference to Mr. Knapp, of Bradford. Taking as his text, Amos iii., 3—"Can two walk together except they be agreed," he said that a recent event, the change of religious opinions of one of our ministers, though an event in itself not worthy of special attention, yet demanded consideration from a statement made by that minister respecting the relation of Unitarian ministers and their congregations. "It was stated that we claimed absolute freedom for our pulpits, and we boasted of unbridled liberty. He ventured to say that to talk of our claiming absolute freedom was nonsense. We had liberty it was true, but we had limits. In every society, be it secular, Unitarian, or Roman Catholic, there was and always must be, some limit, viz., the limits of general agreement and common sympathy. A minister may receive his salary, but unless his views are in agreement with those of his congregation, he may occupy their pulpit, but is no longer their minister. A minister is a servant, and for him freedom is impossible. He is not a lecturer listened to because of his wit or eloquence, or great learning, but because he ministers with free acceptance. Our ministers are free, our churches are free, or how could they change as they have done from time to time in their doctrine? We have then exceptional freedom. If a man come to believe in a trinity, or an atonement of blood, we have no quarrel with him; if unhappily, most unhappily, he comes to believe in no God at all, we do not judge him; and if he attends our service and finds some joy in it, we may think it inconsistent, but we are glad of the inconsistency. We do possess exceptional freedom, and our ministers have no test imposed upon them but the test of their own usefulness. It had been said we meet week by week to hear the opinions our minister had formed from reading and study, but he (Mr. Hargrove) asked, "Was this the true character of our minister's work, and did we meet simply for this purpose?" Rather did we come to worship, prompted by an instinctive feeling towards One higher than ourselves, and to hear the expression of thought higher than we are able to rise to. It is a good thing for us to meet together, one day out of seven, master and servant, rich and poor, before our Common Father, to be reminded of higher things while we are mean and low, and hear eternal things while time seems to dash us down. Our minister utters what we fain would speak, and in the services his life's work is devoted to he lifts us nearer God.—On Monday evening the old scholar's quarterly meeting was held, Mr. Hargrove in the chair, when Mr. C. E. Freeman read an excellent paper on "Work." A discussion, sustained by the chairman and Messrs. Wm. Child, H. Ives, Gamble E. Prince, and Geo. Dobson, followed the reading of the paper.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL RESIGNATION.—The Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A., has resigned the pulpit of the Oat-street Chapel, Evesham, and starts immediately for San Remo for the improvement of Mrs. Odger's health. Letters, &c., may be addressed, care of Rev. W. J. Odgers, Savile House, Weston Park, Bath.

BIRMINGHAM OLD MEETING.—On Sunday, October 20th and 27th, the Rev. Dr. Laird Collier preached impressive sermons to large congregations. On the 27th collections were made in aid of the Queen's Hospital amounting to £136. 5s. 1d.

DUNDEE.—On Wednesday the 30th ult., the Rev. H. Ierson, M.A., met the members of the Unitarian Christian Church. The weather was very unfavourable, still there was a fair representative gathering. After devotional exercises, conducted by the minister, Mr. David Jobson, jun., moved a resolution, offering a cordial welcome to Mr. Ierson as the secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, expressing also the acknowledgment of the congregation of the long continued support the Association had given to the church in Dundee. Mr. William Speed seconded the resolution. It was supported by Messrs. Hodge, Alex. Speed, J. Roberson, and A. Cameron. Mr. Ierson delivered an address, in which he explained the position of the Association, and expressed the pleasure he felt in being present on that occasion.—On the following Tuesday evening Mr. Ierson gave a lecture upon "Christ," in which he showed how the teachings of Christ possessed for us very high authority. Mr. Williamson expressed, what he knew was the feeling of the friends, the sincere pleasure Mr. Ierson's visit had given to the congregation.

HULME DOMESTIC MISSION, EMBLEN-STREET.—The twentieth anniversary sermons on behalf of the day and Sunday-schools were preached on Sunday last by the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., formerly a teacher in this Sunday-school. The congregations, especially that in the evening, were good, the collections amounting to £5. On the following evening the annual congregational tea party was held. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. R. D. Darbishire, B.A. Addresses were given by the chairman, by Mr. W. H. Herford, B.A., and by the Rev. James Harrop. During the evening the friends were also entertained by readings and music, vocal and instrumental. After a very hearty vote of thanks to the chairman, this most enjoyable evening was brought to a close as it had been begun, by the singing of a hymn, after which the benediction was pronounced by Mr. Harrop.

HALE, CHESHIRE.—The first of a series of winter evening entertainments was held at the Hale Chapel

School-room, on Monday evening last. Mr. C. H. Wolff presided and expressed the pleasure he felt in doing so. Several ladies and gentlemen from a distance had come to take part in the proceedings—Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, and Mr. Schute from Manchester, Mr. Taylor from Bolton, Mr. Higginson from Stryal, and Mr. Furnival from Sandbach. That the programme was the subject of hearty appreciation was evident from the applause which followed the duet "Serenade and Romance" from Cox and Box, so admirably rendered by Messrs. Kendal and Schute, and from the enthusiastic manner in which the audience encored Mr. Kendal in "The British Grenadiers" and Mr. Schute in the "Lady of the Lea." A very hearty vote of thanks proposed by the chairman and seconded by the minister, was given to the ladies and gentlemen for their kind assistance. A vote of thanks having been passed to the chairman for presiding, a pleasant entertainment terminated by the choir singing "Now pray we for our country."

HUDDERSFIELD FITZWILLIAM-STREET CHURCH.—The first of the series of literary and musical evenings for the season 1878-9 took place on Wednesday, Nov. 6th, in the school-room underneath the church. It was every way a success. The raised price for admission from 2d. to 3d. did not affect the number, but only the character of the audience. There were fewer noisy and more quiet and appreciative hearers. Great satisfaction was expressed at the manifest improvement in the playing of the orchestra.

KENDAL.—During the last five weeks the following special Sunday evening discourses have been delivered here by the Rev. James Macdonald. "Future Life." "Charles Dickens—his Works and Religious Opinions." "Theism and Atheism." "Hell." "The Devil." On the first Sunday evening rather over one hundred were present, including some 40 strangers. The discourse on the religious opinions of Dickens was, however, listened to by an audience numbering over 130; but on the last two Sunday evenings the chapel has been almost full, there having been near 200 present on each occasion. The numbers present at the last two lectures are said to have been the largest that have gathered within these walls on a Sunday during the last 25 years.

PENDLETON.—On Friday evening the Rev. John Page Hopps delivered a lecture, the first of a course of six, his subject being "An Appeal to Jesus against Belief in Eternal Punishment." The discourse got rid of textual reasoning, and drew from the Lord's Prayer, the sermon on the Mount, and the parables the general spirit of Christ's teachings on this subject. It was remarkable for its lucid character, and was well appreciated by all who heard it.—On Monday evening a congregational party was held, when there was a good attendance, although the night was most inclement. Mr. F. S. Phillips presided, and the Rev. John McDowell, on behalf of the Mutual Improvement Society, presented a large and handsome album, in which was an illuminated inscription, to Mr. Wm. Calderwood, who, with his family, is leaving England for Brisbane in search of health. Mr. Calderwood has for some time been treasurer of the Society. A small writing desk was also presented to his daughter Kate from her class. A resolution of sympathy and hope for their success was passed by the congregation.—On Wednesday, the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams delivered a lecture on "The Church of Humanity," which was highly appreciated by all present.

WARRINGTON.—On Sunday last the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., preached two sermons in Cairo-street Chapel. His subject in the evening was "Milton." There were large congregations, and collections amounting to £45. 12s. 9d. were made to liquidate expenses intended to be incurred in making sundry alterations.

BURY: BANK-STREET.—The parents' annual party took place on Saturday last, when about 280 persons sat down to tea. Addresses were given by the Revs. D. Walmsley, T. R. Elliott, E. Turland, and Mr. Thos. Holt. The latter, in the course of his remarks, said the scholars were in a more satisfactory state than last year; 37 girls and 49 boys had never been late or absent during the year. The savings fund, notwithstanding the depression of trade, had shown a marked increase in the number of members, and the amount of their subscriptions, as compared with the previous year. There are 201 members, whose average subscriptions per week amount to £16. 1s. 8d., or a total sum of £804 for the year. During the evening an interesting programme was gone through. The proceedings were brought to a close by the laughable farce entitled Box and Cox.

BIRMINGHAM: HIRST-STREET DOMESTIC MISSION.—On Monday evening the 4th inst., an interesting meeting was held, consisting of the parents of the Sunday scholars, and the teachers of the Sunday school, the former having been invited by the latter to spend a pleasant social evening together. About 150 sat down to tea, to which a small charge was made just sufficient to cover expenses, and to make it easy for the poorest of the parents to attend. After tea the teachers gave a very cheerful entertainment, at which Mr. Councillor F. Martineau presided. Short addresses were given at intervals during the evening, bearing upon Sunday-school work, and one or two other questions of social interest, by the Chairman, the Rev. B. Wright, and Mr. H. Miles, the superintendent of the boys' school.—On the following evening the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Society was recommenced, when the President, the Rev. B. Wright, delivered the inaugural address, the subject of which was "Self-culture." The Rev. W. R. Smith, presided, and the attendance was good. The Society commences its new career with forty members.

CROYDON.—On Sundays October 27th, and November 3rd, the services at the Free Christian Church here were conducted, morning and evening, by Mr. Herbert Burrows, of London (late of Cambridge), whose sermons were much appreciated by large and attentive congregations.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE: CHURCH OF THE DIVINE UNITY.—The first of a revived series of quarterly Sunday school services was held on Sunday afternoon the 3rd of November, in the church, under the presidency of the Rev. Alfred Payne. Several hymns were sung at intervals by the scholars. In conformity with an established custom a Bible and Church hymn book were presented to John Moore, he having been a scholar and now become a teacher and member of the congregation. A Bible and hymn book were also given to Fanny Dickinson, she having been a scholar and now become a member of the congregation. Mr. Joseph Clephan and Mr. G. Laidler attended as a deputation from the Church Committee, and in kindly words gave a hearty welcome to them as members of the congregation, and offered them a free sitting in the church for one year, which privilege would be accorded to all scholars who should come forward in the same way. The Rev. A. Payne, Mr. F. C. Slater, and Mr. C. C. P. Hobkirk spoke words of encouragement to the scholars, teachers, and friends. The meeting was felt by all to be a great success and worthy of future development.

OLDHAM: NOTE FROM THE REV. F. H. JONES.—The Rev. F. H. Jones writes—There is an error in your last week's report of our "Parents' Party," which may be corrected by the alteration of one letter, and the insertion of two words. Instead of "they had got here in Oldham a division between the school and the congregation, and he thought that a very bad thing," read "they had not here in Oldham a division between the school and the congregation, and he thought that would be a very bad thing;" and you will then have in one sentence the substance of my address. I spoke of the satisfaction with which I find school and congregation working together, and said what a misfortune it would be if they did not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received a large number of letters on Mr. Knapton's withdrawal and discourse, and from these have given a place to one containing a layman's view. Here we think it far better that the matter should rest.

A UNITARIAN CHURCH FOR ROME.

To the Editors.—I have before me a pamphlet entitled "Rome's Recruits," containing a list of Protestants who have become Roman Catholics since the Tractarian movement in England; and, having left the Romish Church, after years of mental servitude and intellectual slavery, I know not how to be sufficiently thankful for the freedom I now enjoy, as a child of the Eternal Father, and my constant and ever growing desire is to warn those who seem to be coquetting with the Church I have left. While in Italy the Romish system is losing its hold on the minds of the people, in England and Scotland it seems steadily making its way, upon peer and peasant, the educated and ignorant alike. If the Church of England would retain its Protestant character, its members should zealously watch the inroads of a growing Ritualism and the steady march of the priestly element and power. But I take up my pen more particularly to urge upon the Unitarian body to found a Free Church in Rome. The time is now ripe for it. Numbers in the Holy City are longing for a house for the devout spirit to worship the Father only, freed from the dogmas and traditions which hamper the orthodox and render their creeds unacceptable to my countrymen. The thoughtful men of Italy are firm believers in God, and could a Free Church be provided in the City of Rome, I doubt not it would soon be the house of many a devout spirit, and a nursery for the propagation of those eternal truths which can alone make a people great and good, glorious and free. Now is the time, and I commend the subject to the prayerful consideration of those who are able and willing to serve God through the propagation of His truth.—I remain, your friend and brother, Capel Lodge, GIUSEPPE CAMPANELLA.

Folkstone, Nov. 12th, 1878.

ORTHODOX TEACHING IN BOARDING SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—Your respected correspondent, Mr. Harry Rawson, has called attention to what all "orthodox" people I have met with, and not a few Unitarians, see to be a great inconsistency in the education of Unitarian children. I mean that of voluntarily placing them in schools where the parents know quite well beforehand their children will be sedulously taught to believe things about God, Christ, the Bible, human nature, future punishments, &c., that they (the parents) believe to be wholly untrue and utterly debasing in their moral effect: where they will be taught that Christ was "God of very God;" that God's forgiveness is not an act of mercy but part of a commercial transaction; that the miracles were undoubtedly true events, are not to be questioned, and are the strongest evidence of Christianity. Where they are taught to regard the whole Bible as an infallible book, and where they hear all these persons and things spoken of every day of their lives with the most implicit faith and reverence. What can one think of such inconsistency? Is it not difficult to believe, in the face of all this, that Unitarians really do value their own religious convictions? If they did, would they voluntarily submit to have their children taught the direct opposite of all they believe to be true? I have great sympathy with that honourable feeling which prompts many Unitarian parents to say they wish not to influence their children's belief, but prefer for them to form their own opinions. But this is just what they do not do. They themselves will not influence their children's belief, but they let others do it for them, in the most thorough and systematic way, and in the very opposite direction to that which they (the parents) believe true. In theory they put off this formation of definite theological opinion till their children are able to form it for themselves, and when (in their theory) that time comes, they find them in full possession, and often ineradicable possession, of opinions that their parents regard as utterly irrational and grossly superstitious.

Let me say the choice does not lie between dogmatic Trinitarianism and dogmatic Unitarianism, though if it did, no real Unitarian would hesitate which to choose, but between keeping the mind free from the growth of what we profess to hold as rank error and superstition, and actually inviting it. I can scarcely conceive it possible that a Unitarian parent, however liberal or advanced his views, could object to his children's being told why Unitarians do not believe that Christ was God; that the Bible is not an infallible book; that men are not under the wrath and curse of God; that human nature is not totally corrupt or incapable of any good thought, deed, or aspiration; that the vast majority of the human race are not doomed to everlasting, unspeakable torments to appease the anger of a "just" God, &c. To people who, like myself, have outgrown the debasing errors and superstitions of orthodoxy, have shaken them off after a long and painful struggle, it seems most unaccountable that Unitarians, whose children have been "born free" should voluntarily place them in a state of theological bondage from which they can scarcely ever entirely escape. Nor can it be wondered at that "orthodox" people should doubt whether Unitarians really hold the opinions they say they do, or whether they think their opinions are worth teaching to their children.

Is there any necessity for this inconsistency? I can scarcely admit any. There are private Unitarian boarding schools quite capable of preparing boys not only for business, but for all the local University examinations, for the preliminary law and medical examinations, and for matriculation at the London University. True the number of such is not great. Unitarians have not the same room for choice that Churchmen, Catholics, Wesleyans, Independents, Jews, and even Quakers have; but that is simply because Unitarians do not encourage these schools but play into the hands of orthodox rivals. I can understand well enough why many Unitarians who have sons of great ability send them to large schools where there are unusual educational advantages, good laboratories, well paid and highly qualified masters, and where their sons may win scholarships, &c., but if Unitarians had been as true to themselves as Trinitarians have been to their own denominations and interests, they, too, might have had large schools possessing all these advantages, and the smaller, private schools, would be more numerous and flourishing than at present.

I know my opinions as to what is and what might be will meet with little or no sympathy with many advanced Unitarians, but on the other hand I know they will find a hearty response in the minds of many more, who will perhaps be glad that one who has been practically engaged in the work of education over a quarter of a century, should have the courage to express these opinions. Should any reader take up the opposite side of this question, I beg he will not think the question is—"Shall we bring up our children within the narrow limits of our own sect?" but, "Are we right in allowing our children to systematically receive religious opinions and impressions that we believe to be wrong, when the remedy is in our own hands?"—I am, gentlemen, yours truly,

Southport, Nov. 11, 1878.

COMING WEEK.

ARDWICK: WHITFIELD-STREET.—On Sunday, at 10.30, Mr. John Heys will preach; Recital in the afternoon; and in the evening, at 6.30, the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., will preach.

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, on "The Position of Unitarianism Stated."

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET, BLACKFRIARS.—Annual meeting of the London Auxiliary Sunday-school Association, on Monday. Tea at six; chair at seven o'clock.

PENDLETON.—On Wednesday evening, lecture by the Rev. Chas. Wicksteed, B.A., on "The Bible—the Idol of the Protestant—the butt of the Rationalist—and the object of Discriminating Reverence to the Christian."

STOCKPORT.—On Sunday morning, at 10.45, and evening at 6.30, the Rev. Dr. Laird Collier will preach.

WALSALL.—On Sunday morning, Rev. P. Dean; evening, Mr. Geo. St. Clair. On Monday, tea meeting. On Tuesday, at 8, sermon by Mr. J. A. Picton, M.A.

Birth.

WICKSTEED.—On the 7th inst., at Kettering, Mrs. Charles Wicksteed, Junr., of a son.

Marriage.

SMITH—WILKINSON.—On the 12th inst., at Ainsworth (by license), by the Rev. Ephraim Turland (brother-in-law of the bridegroom), the Rev. R. Cowley Smith, of South Shields, to Julia Amanda, eldest daughter of Mr. Charles Wilkinson, of Buxton.

Death.

TAYLOR.—On the 3rd inst., at Whalley Range, Manchester, in her 94th year, Sarah Ann, widow of the late James Taylor, of Greenheys, formerly of Moston, and eldest daughter of the late Samuel Marsland, of Grosvenor Square.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 25, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, November 15, 1878.

DOING AND SAYING.

The Rev. H. W. Beecher has just signed a contract for fifty lectures for $25,000 and expenses paid, to be delivered in England, Scotland, and Ireland.

In the great Library of Wernigerode has just been discovered the original of Luther's Margburger Agende, which since 1604 has been known only through fragmentary citations.

The late Dr. Fraser, of Hampstead, bequeathed £10,000 to the Edinburgh University, but revoked it on learning that in its medical schools vivisection was practised, and then transferred the bequest to the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

We are glad to learn that there is a growing desire among a certain section of Brahmos to have a body of carefully selected lay preachers, who, though engaged in worldly avocations, would like to devote their leisure to the sacred work of preaching the truth and conducting Divine service. The Indian Mirror says, "the thing may not seem quite practicable at present, but we should like to see the idea carried out."

At a meeting in Liverpool on Baptist Missions, the Rev. W. Etherington, missionary from India, said the great difficulty the missionaries in India had to deal with was the drunkenness of the British people. The Hindoos, who were a sober people, said to the missionary, "Your religion may be true, and mine may be false, but I prefer to remain in a religion which regards drunkenness as a most abominable thing, than to associate myself with a religion which seems necessarily to mean drinking brandy."

The remains of another lake village have been brought to light at Larcas, Switzerland. Still more remarkable is a find of human skulls which bear unmistakable marks of having been trepanned. Round pieces have been cut out, doubtless after death, as is supposed for use as amulets. In some instances pieces were cut from the craniums of living infants in order, as M. Broca, an eminent authority, conjectures, to let out the spirit by whose malignant influence they were afflicted with fits, convulsions, and other maladies.

They do not go to sleep on their coercion bills in Germany. The result of the law recently passed against the Socialists may be summed up as follows. Forty-two of the leading agitators, including three deputies of the Imperial Parliament, are now in prison. All the daily and weekly journals of the party, numbering 28, as well as their trades unions, clubs, and other societies, including many musical and educational associations, making a total of 102, have been suppressed, and finally, nearly a hundred different treatises advocating Socialist principles have been placed on the Index Expurgatorius of the Berlin police.

The Indian Mirror says, pungently enough: Another gentleman has offered to write an epitaph for the Brahmo Somaj, and this is our old and respected friend, Dr. Murray Mitchell. After writing in his usual graphic style of the reign of "bitterness and strife" in our church consequent upon the marriage of the Minister's daughter, the reverend gentlemen finishes by saying:—"We shall watch its future history with the deepest interest. We may have to write its epitaph ere long." This honourable desire to write epitaphs gratis seems to be fast spreading among our Christian friends, whose obtrusive kindness and obliging temper demand, indeed, a grateful acknowledgment from those whom they are so anxious to serve, and whose departure from this world they so sincerely wish. But one thing strikes us. Christ came to save; the padri wishes to kill and write an epitaph. It is too bad that the Brahmo Somaj does not die, though so many are killing it every year!

The Brahmo Public Opinion says: At a time when the Hindus are busy with their Pujarmaking, singing, dancing, and inebriating themselves with pleasures of all kinds, dark clouds are gathering in the horizon of the frontiers, and demons of death and rapine are dancing in the air the dance of death. Great preparations are being made for a campaign in Cabul, and the lives of thousands are trembling in the balance. The English papers are fanning the fire of aggression. The Ameer is also preparing for a death-struggle, and the time is soon approaching when the English and the Afghans will meet in mortal conflict. But the enormous cost of this war, who will pay for? Parliament has determined that the Indian Government should bear at least a portion of the cost out of the Indian Treasury. This undoubtedly augurs fresh taxes for poor India. How heartily we wish the idea of sending a mission to Cabul had never entered the mind of Lord Lytton.—"Amen" say we and many thousands in England who do not bow the knee to the gilt idol, Imperialism.

Addressing a meeting of the London Congregational Union, the Rev. Henry Simon said that while there was much in the condition of London which they must deplore, the state of affairs which prevailed a century ago was much worse. Lecky gives a dreadful picture of the state of things in the eighteenth century. In 1712, he tells us, a club was formed of young men of the higher classes, called Mohocks, who were accustomed to sally out drunk, to hunt passers-by, and to subject them to the most atrocious outrages. One of the favourite amusements, called "tipping the lion," was to squeeze the nose of their victim flat, and to bore out his eyes with their fingers. Women when caught were subjected to the vilest indecencies; on Snow-hill some were put in barrels and rolled down-hill. A servant girl, when she opened her master's door, was liable to be waylaid and beaten. Country gentlemen went to the theatre as in a time of war, accompanied by their armed retainers. In 1751 Horace Walpole says it was not safe to travel even at noon without guards. What they wanted in the present day was not so much new chaples, as an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, such a baptism of power as would help the people who were at present indifferent to the Gospel to feel that the doctrine which was preached was truth to the men who preached it.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

ARISTOCRATIC LIBERALITY.

THE Scottish correspondent of the Freeman (Baptist) writing of the subscriptions for the relief of the Glasgow City Bank shareholders, says: "The aristocracy are conspicuous in the subscription lists by their absence. Thus far only two noblemen have contributed; one of them is our young Radical leader, Lord Rosebury, who gave a fine speech at the Edinburgh meeting, and enhanced his eloquence by backing it up with £1,000. The Duke of Sutherland, Lord Blantyre, and others who sent their thousands to the unspeakable Turk, have no such liberality to bestow on Scotch widows and orphans made destitute by the bank failure. The selfishness of the lords of the soil is illustrated even by the few who have subscribed. Thus, for example, a baronet who owns the whole of the land on which Greenock is built, and whose rent-roll approaches £100,000 per annum, gives £500; but there are several merchants in Greenock, like the Messrs. Scott, the sugar refiners, who each give that sum. The fact is that the privileged class so loudly lauded at the Lord Mayor's banquet by the Duke of Northumberland evidently believe—at all events, they act as if this were their theory—that it is more blessed to receive than to give. If the ruined shareholders were dependent for their sustenance on the hereditary owners of the land, they would henceforth get very poor feeding; and I suspect that for the most of them there would be no alternative but the workhouse. Happily, the sneer of Napoleon Buonaparte stated a fact. We are a nation of shopkeepers. And it is the men who have, by their industry and talent, made their own fortunes who constitute the roll of subscribers to the relief fund, which reflects so great an amount of credit on this country. Yet the Duke of Northumberland assured the people at the Mansion House that, if the class to which he belongs were withdrawn from society, the whole British Empire would instantly crumble to pieces."

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

The Congregationalist for November. The Expositor for November. London: Hodder and Stoughton.

THE Congregationalist is emphatically ecclesiastical this month, the Parochial System, the Church Congress, and the purely ecclesiastical aspect of the Congregational Union meeting in Liverpool, furnishing the material for three articles. The Rev. T. W. Gill puts Innocent IV. into his gallery of Papal Portraits, and the sketch is very vigorously drawn. A capital article is that on "Successful Churches," taken from an American paper—an article that might be studied with advantage by some croakers among ourselves who lay the blame of failure in churches on the shoulders of the parson alone. The most noticeable paper in the Expositor is that by Professor Simon on "Science and Philosophy," which is a thoughtful and elaborate argument in justification of the analogical of the method which most surely leads to the ultimate principles of which the human mind is intellectually in need. The Editor's contribution on "The Four Nephews of Moses," is a fine piece of analysis and suggestive comment. We must also allude to S. E. C. T.'s exposition of the parable of the Dutiful Servant, in Luke xvii., 7-10—an exposition full of thought. The Expositor is always rich in valuable Biblical studies, and this month's is quite equal to any of its predecessors.

The Prophets and their Interpreters. By G. Vance Smith, B.A., D.D. British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

In a small pamphlet, written in a clear style, suitable for the general reader and for use in the Bible class or Sunday school, Dr. Vance Smith treats of the principal topics connected with the Hebrew Prophets and the relation of their utterances to the New Testament History. Dr. Smith begins with a protest against the chapter-headings, a protest so unnecessary for those who know anything on the subject, and so absolutely required by the the mass of readers who know as good as nothing. On the theory of a "double sense" in the Old Testament prophecies, Dr. Smith speaks with no uncertain sound, pronouncing it to be "the mere invention of speculative theologians." In speaking of the view of Mr. Brownlow Maitland, whose work on The Argument from Prophecy, is here frequently criticised, a statement is made in a note which is rather misleading. We are told that Mr. Maitland "seems to abandon" the idea of two meanings. This is perfectly correct if due emphasis is placed on the word seems, otherwise not. Amid the shaky attempts of Mr. Maitland to present some consistently reasonable, as well as orthodox explanation of these matters, he may appear at times desirous to avoid the extremity of seeking two meanings in a single statement; but there are many cases in which he follows the ordinary procedure of orthodox interpreters. For instance, in dealing with Isaiah vii., he represents the prophet as foretelling the breaking up of the alliance of kings of Syria and Israel, while at the same time "his prevision extends far beyond the occasion, and his language labours with the thought of a greater child and a more glorious deliverance." The subject of prophecy has so long been treated as one of the evidences of Christianity, that it will be a battle-ground for the sharpest contests in coming years. Dr. Smith's manner of dealing with it, fair, scholarly, and always reverent, will be helpful towards the issue. The passages here examined in illustration of the principles of interpretation are chiefly taken from the book of Isaiah; but this limitation will not be felt to exclude much that is of primary importance, except the historical questions connected with the Book of Daniel, which are so well known to Biblical controversy. On the question of a Suffering Messiah, and the interpretation of Isaiah lii. 13—liii., we should have been glad to find a specific refutation of Mr. Maitland's arguments, which are barely noticed here.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

"THE THREE R'S STILL INDISPENSABLE IN SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTRUCTION."

[Read at a meeting of the Manchester Unitarian Sunday School Union, held at Whitfield-street, Ardwick, on Sunday, November 17th, by Mr. HARRY RAWSON.]

In the correspondence columns of our denominational papers—in essays read at gatherings of teachers such as I have now the pleasure to address—and from the platforms of our soirées and other meetings—we have often been told that the extension of board schools renders elementary secular instruction on the Sunday a work of supererogation. It was expedient enough to teach writing, arithmetic, and perhaps a little geography, as well as reading, when public schools were few in number, defective in method, and meagre in results. But, especially since the passing of the "Elementary Education Act" of 1870, the Sunday-school teacher, it is averred, can find better occupation for his time and care, in religious subjects alone; discarding as both inferior in importance, and unsuitable to the day and the place, all instruction in the mere rudiments of knowledge. It was very well thirty or forty years ago, that especially, and I believe it may be said, solely, under Unitarian auspices, the slate and the copy-book should receive attention as well as the reading of the Bible. But, it is argued, things are marvellously changed in this respect. Secular teaching is now done so thoroughly, and the provision made for the educational wants of poor children is so complete, that the day school teacher may be safely left to supply the fundamentals of intellectual training and instruction. Hence—such is the logical inference—it is little better than a waste of power to attempt that on the first day of the week, which is so much better accomplished on the other five or six; and the true function of the Sunday school is to direct its appliances in the direction only of religious impression and sacred things.

It is because I believe that all such statements as these are mistaken, and all such reasoning fallacious, short-sighted, and mischievous, that I venture to ask your candid consideration of the observations following.

It is not, unfortunately, correct, to hold that we have already reached the millennium of national education. It is still but looming in the future—and that a distant one. Figures, I know it is said, can be made to prove anything. But no manipulation of official statistics can disprove the fact that there are still hundreds of thousands of English children ignorant, and growing up in ignorance, with all the dire evils that follow in its train; the fact that the instruction received by hundreds of thousands more is fragmentary, imperfect—practically almost valueless; the fact, that as compared with Switzerland and other continental States, the results of our system are highly unsatisfactory; the fact, that between the number of children on the registers, and the number that pass with even a decent educational equipment—there is a vast and distressing discrepancy! The latest date to which the returns of the Committee of Council on Education are made up, is the 31st August, 1877. Now, leaving out of view the odd numbers, I find that the total number of children on the registers of England and Wales was 3,155,000. There were present on the inspection day, 2,633,000, a difference of 522,000, i.e., over half a million less than on the books; the average daily attendance was 2,150,000, i.e., 483,000 less than on the inspection day, and the appalling number of one million less than on the register; so that one third of the whole number were roaming the streets, or doing something else not contributory to their educational or moral advantage. Look at the matter on another side. Of children above seven years of age, there ought to be in schools, 2,500,000; in actual attendance there are but 1,436,000; leaving to be accounted for, I fear not very satisfactorily, no less than 1,064,000. Once more, referring specially to results, take this most "lame and impotent conclusion," viz., that of those above ten years of age there passed in standards appropriate to their age, 40 per cent only—in plain English, six out of ten were failures. And if for a moment we indulge the hope that things are much better than this in our immediate neighbourhood, we find it a hope that "flatters but to betray." In Manchester the number of children on the rolls, September 28, 1878, was, 57,016; the average weekly attendance, 46,009; the average school-time attendance, 37,134; leaving a huge waste of 19,882, i.e., 20,000 who ought to be regular in their attendance at school, and, alas, they are not! But even if all the children were present each day, what does it amount to when the attainment of the third, or at least the fourth standard, has been regarded as sufficient by some of our educational authorities; and with this miserably imperfect qualification children have been allowed to pass from school to employment. It may here be remarked that there are certain processes outside the walls of our schools, which might materially help the work that is done within them. For example, it is possible that the system of inspection would be improved, if clergymen were considered ineligible for the office by reason of the theological bias which it is the habit of their professional life to form. Perhaps, again, young men who never took a class in hand, however distinguished at college, are hardly as likely to prove good judges of school management and teaching skill, as would be some of the most experienced and successful masters—such as some we know in Manchester. The efficacy of all laws depends largely on the wisdom of their administrators; and if all the members of our School Boards held a just estimate of educational requirements, they would hardly be content with so wretched an instalment as the third standard. Think of the astounding fact that in all England and Wales, fewer than 20,000 pass the sixth standard! It is true that in reading 28,743, in writing 26,103 passed; but in arithmetic only 18,143; that is, in this great country of trade and commerce we turned out of the national schools, last year, fewer than 20,000 young people competent to discharge the simple duties of a counting-house clerk. Yet further. What is, after all, this sixth standard,—the severest requirement of our code; the crown of our striving; the return for an annual expenditure of many hundreds of thousands of pounds—equivalent to the entire revenue of some continental states? Why this, that the highest of our standards about corresponds with the third or fourth of theirs! Very shortly a government order will come into force, insisting on 15 to 20 per cent of attainment in the higher standards as a condition of receiving the grant in aid. This is a statement at the same time cheering and disheartening; cheering, that some further improvement is to be attempted; disheartening that the task should be considered so huge, or our appliances so weak, as to render 20 per cent of decent elementary instruction the ideal of our aims, the goal of our present ambitions?

Now even a slight consideration of these suggestive facts and figures will satisfy any candid mind, that the "depths profound" of our national and local ignorance, have not yet been sounded by the schoolmaster's plummet. The Sunday school, I venture to think, has therefore still, as an auxiliary to other and completer appliances, a useful and honourable function to discharge. Its occupation is by no means gone!

But I should miserably fail in my purpose to-day if I left on your minds the impression, that I would limit the operations of the Sunday school to the three R's. I have indeed tried to express my sense of the importance of a mastery of them, because I perceive, or think I do, a tendency to under-value them, and to distract children with too great a variety of other subjects. Some Board schools have, in their laudable zeal for popular education, extended, perhaps unduly, their curriculum, with the risk of giving a smattering of many things and facility in none. I use the three R's to represent what is called "secular instruction," a phrase or term which is often employed even by enlightened people, as in some way opposed to religious teaching. Surely in the world of true culture "there is nothing common or unclean." Science means only knowledge, and all knowledge, sought in a becoming spirit and rightly used, is religious; by whatever name designated, it has a common origin and end, and both are divine. It is, of course, not a novelty to hear secular learning depreciated by the representatives of churches and sects, decried as dangerous, and denounced as "godless." But how fallacious and truly irreverent is such a charge! In seeking knowledge we are always on the track of God's purposes and of his laws—which are his will. Pursued with this conviction, there is no subject which may not foster wonder, admiration, and awe—the bases of devotion. Take the science of numbers, their proportions, relations, adjustments, all pervaded by ascertainable laws—surely of heavenly origin, and not any making of ours. As Milton says of divine philosophy, it is "Not harsh and crabbed as dull fools suppose,

But musical as is Apollo's lute!"

The priest and dogmatist call it a secular—and therefore, if followed apart from their creeds and articles—it is a "godless" study. There is the science of astronomy. I need only allude to its marvels; the stupendous truths it reveals; the majestic march of its discoveries; the awe-inspiring lessons of its phenomena. "An undevout astronomer is mad," says the poet. "Astronomy is a branch of secular study," says orthodoxy; and a school where it should be taught except accompanied by the catechism is, therefore, "godless." Or look at the voluminous records of the race of man, as witnessed in his savage, his semi-barbarous, and his civilised state. The philosophical inquirer tells us, with reverent faith, that "he traces the hand of God in history;" which, however, if extended beyond that of the Jews in Palestine, becomes no longer "sacred," but "profane." Or cast your eye on the goodly array of books which enshrine our glorious English literature—more varied, more pure, more instructive—spreading its gracious lessons through a longer term by centuries than that of any other nation—ancient or modern. As a department of instruction, what more conducive to high culture and a refined taste? But, as it is "secular," it is, of course, "godless!"

It would be an easy, and not an ungrateful task, to point out, in some detail, certain specific subjects which, even in the hardly conceivable case of an absolute exemption from the merest elementary teaching, might yet form a useful and permanent curriculum for Sunday school work. "Secular instruction," says a sagacious writer, "should include all true histories of human events; all truths in nature; and all principles of morality and religion necessary for the right ordering of practical conduct in the affairs of life." Undertaken in a humble and modest spirit, the study of the Divine will, as written in the laws which are its embodiment and expression, can never be otherwise than conducive to a true piety. "God's laws," says George Combe, "are God's will in action." The organic relations between ourselves and the material world must ever be of vital interest and practical concern; and they permeate every department of the inexhaustible field of human inquiry. To ascertain the conditions on which our health, our energies, and our lives are held, and then to accord to them an implicit compliance, is, in the terms of religion, to learn God's will and to obey it. Of all the lessons man would be happiest to appreciate and apply—that of the universal prevalence of law; of its demands; of the utter impossibility of evading them; of the punishment, swift and severe, which ensues on their transgression—is surely of the most stupendous consequence! There is no walk of life, no sphere of duty, which does not supply the intelligent teacher with inexhaustible illustrations of this truth, and pertinent applications of it. Compared with such a line of instruction as this, how puerile are the ordinary topics of what is commonly called religious knowledge. Presumptuous attempts to define the Indefinable, dogmatism on topics which are beyond the range of human reason, and the cramming of young minds with unintelligible and contradictory creeds—these form the ideal of Sunday-school teaching in the minds of, unfortunately, the majority of the English people. I often think what a moral and religious reformation would be begun, if the 20,000 clergymen of the Established Church, and the many thousands more of Roman Catholic priests and Dissenting ministers, would abandon the exposition of their antiquated and speculative dogmas, and would give themselves to the preaching of simple righteousness; if they would first seek for themselves, and then teach their flocks, the laws of their being and of the universe around them, and lead them to regard an unquestioning, childlike obedience to them as the truest worship that could be offered to the Deity, and the highest office of the religious soul. Sound knowledge and implicit surrender of our wills to God's, as indicated by his ordinances in nature, are the perennial sources of reverence and piety. Thus religion would be shown to be natural to man. In contradiction to this, priests and preachers have for centuries taught—erroneously and mischievously taught—that the human heart is the implacable foe of godliness; that our affections can only be forced or beguiled into its acceptance; that religion is an alien which it is all but impossible to naturalise, not a friend who finds in men's hearts a warm welcome and a congenial home. I lay at the door of this perverse teaching much of the infidelity that abounds on all sides of us. I charge the churches with the infinite harm thus done to the most sacred of interests. I impute to the popular creeds their share of the moral turpitude of our cities. I challenge the Evangelical, and especially the Calvinistic school, to deny the responsibility which falls on those who contend that "righteousness is but filthy rags;" that self-denying efforts after purity and virtue are only the snares of the Evil One—opening yet more widely the very gates of hell! Instead of a religion based on superstition and formulated in the ancient schools, let us seek by reverencing, and not by denouncing as carnal, the Reason that God has given us; by the assiduous study of his will, as revealed in the marvels of creation; and by tracing the harmony which he has established between every part of nature and himself and us, to call back to the offices of a manly piety, so far as our influence goes, the thousands who are alienated from them by a pernicious theology. At any rate, by a liberal and wise presentment of religious truth in our schools, let us try to form, in the young minds we are privileged to guide, the conviction that things secular are also things divine; and that there is no dissonance, but perfect concord, between them and God—who is the Author, and Centre, and Controller of all.

THE COMING FAITH.

THE world is waiting
A faith, whose grace
Allows no hating
To find a place;
A faith so holy,
That sectish rites
Shall mix no folly
With its delights;
A faith to teach
The joy of living,
Which all may preach
Without misgiving;
A faith of deeds,
Evinced in love,
Which none misleads,
Which all may prove;
A faith to need
No priestly crooning
O'er mystic creed—
No doctrine-droning.
A faith not built
On myths, and fancies,
Atoned-for-guilt,
And necromancies;
A faith which leaves
None in the lurch,
Because he cleaves
Not to a Church.
Effects of wrong
Are teaching right—
And eyes grow strong
To see the light.
Science has found
Heaven nothing hides—
The world turns round,
And shows all sides.

—Verses and Verselets.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1878.

"IDEAL SUBSTITUTES FOR GOD."

SUCH is the title in which Dr. MARTINEAU vividly presents the sum and substance of his opening address at Manchester New College—"Ideal substitutes for God considered." In these days of universal experiment, this too, it would seem, must be tried—how, if the belief in God be taken away from us, are we to have it back again? The French epigram is not too startling for us: If there were no God, it would be necessary to create One. Scientific speculation and Mr. Bradlaugh have wrought upon opposite ends of the social scale in the interests of Atheism. PROFESSOR TYNDALL may utter his protest that he has never pretended to account for the existence of everything we know by the theories of LAPLACE and Dr. DARWIN. He may admit, as he has always done, that there is between mind and matter a gulf fixed, across which it is hopeless to think we can ever be able to pass. He may allow that there is a whole class of human faculties, or a whole department of human nature, which science cannot feed or satisfy, viz., the department of the emotions. He may say that it is quite proper or even needful for us to have something to worship, but what does it all amount to? Just to this—that if, as certain presumptions on the side of DARWIN are taken to imply, there be no God, it is proper or necessary to create one. If we are not to have a God, we must have a substitute for him.

This is what it comes to, because, on the one hand, the belief in God is, in effect, destroyed. That it ought not to be so might well be reasoned, as we think, from the very premises of such writers. When they admit the miracle of Mind, they admit a whole universe of existence utterly different in kind, by their own confession, from the universe of matter. But they do not so recognise it at present. Mind is, for them, merely a result, and a strangely impotent result of material conditions. So that the idea of a God who is a Spirit does not appear to be reconcilable with their philosophy. But then, on the other hand, there is this phantasm, or ghost, commonly called Spirit, in man. If it be really powerless to interfere with the unbroken series of material causes and effects, it yet knows a world of its own—a world of joys and sorrows—of affections and longings. It has wonder in it, and gratitude, and aspiration. It has an out-look and an upward look. It looks for its like and its superior; for its origin and its end. These emotions and aspirations may be gratified—but not with the vision of God—only with the vision of themselves. This is the result:—

What seemed to be looking at us with such Divine appealing eyes is but a flattered portrait of ourselves: the tones that so deeply pierced us are but our own falsetto voice: their is neither substance in the sight nor truth in the sound.

Life upon such terms Dr. MARTINEAU may well say would be like one of those dual games of chess or cards, in which a solitary player cheats his loneliness by personating the pair.

This is the melancholy sham to which the highest exercise of our faculties is reduced in the attempt to keep up a religion, not having a God. Dr. MARTINEAU's task in the present address was to expose the attempt, and to show—which is the one thing needful for us all to-day—that the attempt was not necessary. In Holland this attempt has received the name of "Moral Idealism." The history and science of religion are now generally studied as "the knowledge of what men have believed and felt on things sacred to them." The study which used to be theology, or "the doctrine or rational apprehension of God" becomes only a department of anthropology, or the doctrine of man. Against all this Dr. MARTINEAU pleads with the full earnestness of his whole mind and heart. This new science or study cannot, he urges, claim the place of the old theology. For that there must be the Infinite Object, and no ideal substitute for this can satisfy the religious nature.

Will the Benedicite swell with the same tones of joy when it has to sing—"Bless the Eternal Law, All ye its works; bless the Eternal Law, O my synthesis of organs?" Will the contrition which now cries—"Blot out my transgressions;" "Cast me not away;" "A broken heart Thou dost not despise," pour out its sorrows to a deaf "Ideal," and shed its passionate tears on an abstraction that cannot wipe them away?

In order to justify in the court of reason the demand which is thus made in the sanctuary of the heart, Dr. MARTINEAU re-states the argument which he has formerly so fully unfolded—that the conception of Primal Being and Power is a fixed thought, a necessary idea of Reason. We talk of "phenomena," (i.e. appearances) and "evolution;" but says Dr. MARTINEAU, it is idle to talk of evolution and laws of phenomenal advance, as if they superseded all beyond themselves. "Phenomena of nothing, Evolution of emptiness. What are such phrases but a Greek and Latin gibberish? To make a show of itself there must be something behind; to develop itself, there must be a plenitude within; the very words bespeak the whole reality they are intended to deny."

Thus does Dr. MARTINEAU bring the force of his former argument with Professor TYNDALL to bear upon the recent attempt to revive religion as a Moral Idealism. This, he shows, is not religion "unless the ideal is held to be Real as well as Divine." And surely for man there is a true sense in which his ideal is the most real of all things to him. What is it but the highest and best representation possible to him of that which is the real object of his thought? Dr. MARTINEAU's inspiring words lift us from our state of absorption in mere scientific analysis to recognise the Living Power that moves in all things. So we are led to reflect that man's own kingdom is but a very little realm, and yet one with very wide connexions. A religion which should confine itself to this planet would be a curiously isolated faith for beings who know that their place is in a vast universe. As Mr. G. H. LEWES said in reference to COMTE'S Religion of Humanity, which in its principle is much the same thing with a "moral idealism," which makes man his own Supreme Being—"Humanity can only be the Supreme Being of our world—it cannot be the Supreme Being of the universe. To limit the universe to our planet is to take a rustic untravelled view of this great subject."

The present Address adds one more to those powerful essays which have been everywhere received as the most effective vindication yet presented to us of the indefeasible claims both of Metaphysics and Theology.

THE ELEVENTH PROTESTANTENTAG IN HILDESHEIM.

II.

[OUR report in last week's issue closed with an account of the first public meeting. The following sketch of the subsequent proceedings has been kindly prepared for the Herald by the Rev. A. CHALMERS.]

THE FIRST SPECIAL SERVICE.

The Assembly Rooms, or so-called Union Haus of Hildesheim, in which the meetings of the Verein were held, was formerly the Church of St. Paul, and was built by the Dominican monks in the fourteenth century. The members of this order were more famed for their preaching than their architectural taste, and this colossal building, which belonged to their Hildesheim monastery, has little external beauty. About eight years ago it was most skilfully adapted to secular purposes, and now forms the principal place of resort and entertainment in the city. More commodious or comfortable rooms could not have been desired. When the preliminary arrangements were made, it was intended to hold the two special services in St. Andrew's Church, the use of which had been readily granted by the congregational committee. But the Consistory of Hanover, apparently in the spirit of the Jewish Sanhedrim (with which it has often been compared), interposed its veto, as when the Verein held its meetings in Osnabrück six years ago. This repeated display of something worse than blind zeal, clearly shows the nature of the official Christianity of Hanover, and contrasts most unfavourably with the conduct of the church authorities of Bremen and Heidelberg, where in the one case the Cathedral, and in the other the University Church, were placed at the disposal of the Verein. However, the committee were by no means disconcerted by this refusal. It was agreed to hold the services in the Concert Saal, and an improvised pulpit was erected in the platform recess, surrounded by masses of tastefully arranged evergreens, interspersed with conservatory plants. Here the first service was conducted by Pastor KLAPP, of Osnabrück, on the afternoon of October 9th. Evidently the policy of the ecclesiastical authorities found few sympathisers in Hildesheim, for every seat in the large hall was occupied, and the capacious vestibule was also crowded. The text selected was 1 Peter, iii., 15—"Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you, a reason of the hope that is in you." The following was the preacher's line of thought: Every fresh religious crisis is a time of testing and probation. Each new movement exposes every faithful confessor to the stigma of heresy or apostasy. He is asked to justify his position, and to give a reason for his faith. To such an ordeal many of his hearers had doubtless been called. If so, their answer must be that of Luther, "Here I stand, I cannot do otherwise, God help me." By these words, individually or collectively, they could define their position, their right, their confidence. As an association their position was that of men who were accused, and the accusations came from opponents on both right and left. By the former they were denounced as disturbers and destroyers, by the latter as deceitful or foolish. But none the less could they feel their work to be a supreme necessity. Desolate churches, unsatisfied hearts, and bewildered minds bore witness to the need of their efforts. And this felt need was the foundation of their rights. It was the root and ground of a threefold aspiration and desire: for the heart, an open access to God; for the mind, the full enjoyment of light; for the church, her birthright of freedom. And their confidence was in the living God, who before their eyes was opening the soul's prison-house and letting the oppressed go free. Though imperfect and weak they felt they were instruments in His hand. For themselves they sought neither honour nor advantage, but they must see to it that no base bargain was made with conscience, nor any compromise with falsehood. Zealous for their cause, and girded with the sword of the spirit, they must advance as true soldiers of the Cross. The final issue might be awaited with confidence; if God was for them, who could be against them.—This impressive sermon was preceded and followed by the singing of Luther's hymn, "A mighty fortress is our God," and by brief but appropriate prayers.

WELCOME OF THE VEREIN AND THE FOREIGN DELEGATES.

At eight o'clock the same evening a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen gathered in the upper hall, for the purpose of publicly welcoming the Verein to Hildesheim, and for the reception and greeting of the foreign delegates. It was easy to see that the welcome given was no mere formality. Bürgermeister Struckmann and Herr Göthing, who represented the city, are consistent and zealous advocates of the liberal faith, and many other influential citizens are heartily weary of the pseudo-Protestantism upheld by the leaders of the Guelphic faction. President Tchow responded, in appropriate terms, on behalf of the Verein, and wished prosperity to Hildesheim, amid enthusiastic cheers. The welcoming of the foreign delegates was intrusted to Dr. MANCHOT, whose close acquaintance with modern religious movements makes him peculiarly well fitted for such a task. His speech was full of happy allusions to the work and thought of the churches represented, and will long be remembered by those to whom it was specially addressed. He courteously gave our English liberal churches the place of honour, their delegate being the first welcomed, and the first asked to respond. He spoke of our denomination as at once the result of a protest against the Trinitarian dogma, and the outcome of an unfettered congregational activity. Our churches had in England prepared a home for the great reform movement which must speedily appear. Though long overshadowed by large and unfriendly religious organisations, they had neither forgotten that light must at last shine out in the darkness, nor had they abandoned their fidelity and mutual trust. In their midst had appeared the greatest religious thinker of England, who had engaged in the conflict against materialism. He was glad that a valuable pamphlet by this distinguished writer—James Martineau—had lately been translated into English by Dr. Sydow, of Berlin. The results and methods of German and Dutch religious research had been transplanted and naturalised in England by Unitarian scholars, and this was working as a leaven in the less advanced but larger churches. They had also prepared the platform on which his countryman, Max Müller, was expounding the grounds and truths of religion to the most cultured circles of English society. This energy and activity might teach the German churches many a helpful lesson in their efforts to promote the new Reformation in the Empire. He rejoiced also in the close spiritual bond by which we were united, while recognising outward differences of nationality and ecclesiastical forms. And in this feeling he offered the delegate of the English Free Churches a cordial welcome, and felt constrained to greet him as also representing the Unitarian Churches in America. Beyond the Atlantic the seed sown in England had become a great tree, whose best fruits—the thoughts of Channing and Parker—had given spiritual strength to many even in Germany. He would intrust their English visitor with a word of gratitude, and a friendly request to the Unitarians of the United States. The heartfelt thanks of the Protestant Verein were due to them for their warm sympathy with the liberal German churches in America. He had that day seen how touchingly the Christian Register had recorded the early death of their friend Adoly Thomas. Doubtless the attitude of many of their countrymen towards religion was deeply to be deplored, but not a few were faithful to their better nature. They should not forget that the members of the church in Memphis had round their pastor's grave confessed anew the undying power of the Cross of Christ. He therefore ventured to ask American Unitarian Churches to aid and encourage their German brethren around them to carry out the work of the New Reformation according to their distinctive national forms and in the true line of historical development. He knew well that not the mere spread of Unitarian belief, but the opening afresh of the fountain of moral healing and spiritual power to be found in the Gospel of Christ was the chief aim and desire of the churches represented by their friend now present. He once more offered him a cordial welcome.

REPLY OF MR. CHALMERS.

In responding, I expressed our warm interest in the work of the Verein, our regret at its present difficulties, our high appreciation of its efforts and aims, and our sense of the closeness of the bonds uniting us in Christian fellowship. We regarded the Protestant Verein as the guardians of Germany's highest interests, and its member as the Uhlans of the Christian army. Then in a brief sketch of the development of free religious thought in England, I touched lightly on the points of contact and similarity between this and the corresponding movement in Germany. We had attained a fuller freedom of teaching, and more complete self government, they excelled us in other respects, so that each Association might learn from the other. Freedom of thought and belief was, however, an essential element for both; and, however much the outward forms of our activity might differ, this was indispensable for religious veracity and progressive action. Our attitude towards those who sincerely differed from us should be one of kindness and forbearance. A true Christian spirit could not be sustained by the daily bread of embittered controversy. We should therefore work in charity and hope, believing that pure Christianity would speedily display its imperishable and invincible power.

Pastor Maronier spoke next as the representative of Holland, Pastor Engelmann on behalf of the Reichsland, and Pastor Albrecht for the Swiss Churches. The speeches were all in German, and have been printed and widely distributed under the heading "The International Relations of the Protestant Verein." This meeting closed the second day's proceedings.

WESTERN UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN UNION.

THE annual meeting of this Union was held at Taunton on Wednesday and Thursday, November 13th and 14th. A religious service was held on Wednesday evening, when the devotional part of the service was conducted by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Henry Ierson, M.A., of London, to a large congregation; after which there was an observance of the Lord's Supper, the address being given by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford.

On Thursday the meeting opened with service at 11 30 a.m. The Rev. J. H. Felstead, of Trowbridge, conducted the devotional part, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A. At the conclusion of the service the business meeting was held, when the Rev. John Birks presided. The report of the committee had been printed for circulation, and, with the treasurer's account, was now formally presented. The report stated that

The year was one marked, unfortunately, by removal, by illness and by death amongst the ministers of the district. In the month of July last the committee gave expression to the loss which the district had sustained by the sudden call from his earnest and useful labours of the Rev. David Griffith, of Cheltenham, who passed away at St. Leonards-on-Sea, whither he had gone to recruit his strength for the better discharge of the work he loved so well; and your committee feel that it is incumbent on them to put on record, in this report, the resolution passed in connection with this sad event, and agreed to in solemn silence at the bi-monthly meeting, held July 15th, 1878:—"That this committee learns, with unaffected regret and sorrow, of the death of the Rev. David Griffith, of Cheltenham; that it gratefully remembers his brotherly co-operation in its work, and his consistent and cultured advocacy of the principles of Liberal Christianity in the West of England; and that it tenders to his bereaved congregation, and to her who must most truly mourn his loss, its deepest and most respectful sympathy." To the sincere regret of many personal friends, of his congregation and the committee, on which he worked with a usefulness that can ill be spared, the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, M.A., bade farewell, in July last, to the congregation at Bridgewater, to enter upon larger duties in the North of England, as Theological Tutor to the Home Missionary Board at Manchester. Great as is his loss, your committee cannot hide its sense of deep satisfaction that he has only gone to fill a position where his powers may be more widely exercised, and where his friends are assured they can but produce a more manifest effect in the advocacy of those principles which lie next the heart of this society, and it heartily wishes him God speed in the honoured labours that await him. The congregation at Devonport again finds itself passing through a time of anxiety consequent upon the temporary retirement, through ill health of its minister, the Rev. Alfred Hood. The affairs of the young congregation of Stroud are such, the committee deeply regrets to have to report, as to demand the gravest attention. To this result many circumstances, both unlooked for and unavoidable, have conspired. It is not too much to say that one important consideration that has tended to this direction is the commercial depression, which even in the small circle of the Stroud congregation has not been without its results, rendering it simply unable to meet the engagements into which it entered with the committees respectively of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and of the Western Unitarian and Free Christian Union, or, in fact to do more at the present time than meet the current expenses of the church. The committee, therefore, have to report that in the month of June, 1878, the Rev. Richard Pilcher, B.A., found himself free to accept the vacant pulpit at Cairo-street Chapel, Warrington, and he carried with him the good wishes of the friends at Stroud. It naturally became a serious question as to whether the succour given by the committee should be relaxed or not, and in the belief that the work at Stroud should be carried on, and the congregation there, by patient endeavour, set upon an enduring basis, it determined to continue its guarantee of £75 per annum, and to recommend the committee for the ensuing year to prosecute the work at Stroud with a resolution that difficulties such as these only tend to make stronger. Since the congregation has been without a settled minister the services have been faithfully discharged by neighbouring ministers and laymen. At Kingswood Hill, where a room was obtained and opened for Liberal Christian worship in April, 1877, by the Rev. John Wright, B.A., of Bath, the expiration of the lease has caused what the committee trust is but the temporary cessation of a useful effort. The Rev. John Murray, the committee regrets to learn, has resigned the pulpit of the Ilminster congregation; whilst at Shepton Mallet and at Colyton the resignations of the Rev. James Cooper and the Rev. H. M. Dare leave the congregations in these places with vacancies which the committee trust may be speedily and satisfactorily filled up. At Yeovil, still unsupplied with a settled minister, the services are faithfully conducted by Mr. Henry Bunce, of Frome. With the sanction and approval of Mr. William Blake, sole surviving trustee of the endowment of the Yeovil Chapel, the committee has been considering the possibility of the fusion of the trusts for the endowment and the building. Mr. John Worsley has given his legal opinion of it, after a perusal of the documents kindly placed at his disposal by Mr. Blake, to whom the thanks of this committee are heartily rendered for his prompt courtesy, and the committee rest in the hope that a new trust-deed will soon be drawn out. The congregation at Trowbridge is to be congratulated on the appointment of a successor to the late Rev. Samuel Martin, at the Congregational Chapel—the Rev. J. H. Felstead, of Nottingham, having entered upon his duties as minister to the congregation in the month of September. The committee report with pleasure that the congregations uniting in a common effort on behalf of its funds form this year a larger list than has been the case previously. The committee gratefully acknowledges the kindness of those congregations and ministers who have so cordially seconded its wishes, and ventures to draw from such action the best augury for the experience of another year. It remains only to state that the spring meeting of the society was held on May 8th, 1878, at Trowbridge, when the proceedings were opened by a discussion as to "The best means at the disposal of the Union for aiding in the Sunday-school work of the district." On this topic a suggestive paper was read by the Rev. John Birks, of Taunton, and the result of the conference was such as to impress the members of the society who were present with the desirability of periodically affording occasions for the consideration of the most important work in connection with our churches in the district. The conference was followed by an evening service, the preacher for the society being the Rev. Alfred Hood, of Devonport. In conclusion the committee call serious attention to the balance-sheet of the treasurer, and the significance of it in regard to the work of the Union during the ensuing year. The year for which this report is presented has been in many ways a year of anxiety and of trial. If not in all points successfully, still at all times faithfully, has your committee striven to discharge its trust; and it counts upon that increased support to the cause it has at heart, which is essential to the carrying out of the work entrusted to the committee.

The adoption of the reports, and the sanction of their previous circulation having been agreed to on the motion of Mr. Councillor GOODHIND, seconded by Mr. MALACHI B. BAKER, of Ilminster,

It was moved by the Rev. E. H. BOLLARD, of Crediton, seconded by Mr. J. GOODHIND, and resolved—"That the thanks of this meeting be given to the committee of the past year; and that, for the year ensuing, the committee shall consist of the ministers in charge of congregations in the district: The Rev. John Robberds, B.A., the Rev. W. J. Odgers, and the Rev. Charles W. Robberds, together with Messrs. G. F. Bromhead, W. Butcher, C. Jecks, F. Jolly, J. V. Staples, Christopher J. Thomas, H. Thomas, J. Cory Withers, and John Worsley."

The Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A., and Mr. W. Butcher, were then unanimously appointed secretary and treasurer respectively for the coming year, whilst Messrs. M. Weir and W. Norgrove were requested kindly to act as auditors.

At the conclusion of the formal business of the meeting, it was moved by the Rev. JOHN BIRKS, seconded by Mr. T. MALE, of Bridport, and unanimously resolved—"That it is most desirable that this Union should prominently recognise the importance of Sunday school work, that it recommends the formation of a Western Sunday School Association, and pledges itself, by devoting its Spring meeting to the purposes of such an Association, to help its operations in every possible way."

It was then moved by the Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD, B.A., seconded by CHARLES JECKS, Esq., of Clevedon, and heartily agreed to, nem. con.—"That this meeting most strongly regrets and deprecates the prospect of a conflict between the Government of this country and the ruler of Afghanistan; and that in the total absence of any definite information as to its real cause or object, this meeting holds to the conviction that such a conflict, prosecuted under such circumstances, would partake of the character of a national sin."

The ordinary business resolutions having been passed, luncheon was provided at the conclusion of the business of the Union, and, this over,

The CHAIRMAN proposed "The Queen," and "The Prince and Princess of Wales." And then

Mr. G. PHILPOT submitted the toast, "The Officiating Ministers," and coupled with it the names of the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, of Nottingham, and the Rev. J. H. Felstead, of Trowbridge. He said he had been deeply impressed with the services on that occasion, and he was sure nothing but good could result from them. (Applause.)

The Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD, and the Rev. H. IERSON, of London, responded.

The Rev. J. H. FELSTEAD said he begged to acknowledge the kind expression of feeling which had been accorded to him. It was kind of Mr. Armstrong to give him this opportunity of saying a few words to them. Although he was new to all present, and a new member of the Unitarian body, he was not new to the Unitarian principles by any means. (Hear, hear.) For many years his mind was moving quietly away from orthodox positions. Before he became connected with the Unitarian church he was a Baptist minister, but for some time previous to leaving his old church he preached, he imagined, as free doctrines as were preached in any Unitarian church. His old church was made up of two sections—a section of elderly people, who were much in love of doctrine, and the younger people, whose minds he had something to do with in forming. It was a great pleasure to him to preach to them, and he felt it a difficult matter to decide whether he ought to leave them or not, because he was assured he was doing good, but at last he concluded he must sever his connection, and make a new start. (Hear, hear.) There was a great advantage in leaving an orthodox body, and joining one in which freedom was one of its characteristics. This was the one and only doctrine of Unitarianism. (Applause.) It was a pleasure to him to feel that he was among people who allowed him to preach what his own reason and conscience dictated to him. (Hear, hear.) It was a privilege to listen to such sermons as the one they had heard that morning—which were pitched in so high a key and full of true enthusiasm, the enthusiasm of righteousness. (Hear, hear.) He was sorry to be compelled to say that there was a great want of enthusiasm and emotionalism in general among Unitarians. (Hear, hear.) He did not think that was a good thing. There was a kind of fervour in meetings of an orthodox character, which was conspicuous by its absence at Unitarian gatherings. There had recently been a good deal said about lighting the world by the electric light, which seemed to be the light of the future, and holders of gas shares were beginning to quake. The shareholders of a gas company had a meeting the other day, and consoled themselves with the reflection that, although the electric light was good for lighting purposes, it must yield the palm to gas as regards the production of heat. This was something like the contrast between Unitarianism and orthodoxy. The Unitarians were the electric light, and the orthodox people the gas. (Laughter.) One had the “dry light of the intellect,” and the other possessed the emotionalism, which was much like the gas—apt to explode now and then, leaving an unpleasant odour behind it. (Laughter.) He hoped his connection with the Unitarians would be a pleasant one. (Applause.)

The CHAIRMAN then proposed “Civil and Religious Liberty all the world over.” (Applause.) He said he was sure they would accept this toast with all the heartiness in their power, as it went home to Unitarians with peculiar force. (Applause.) In these days of freedom and toleration they hardly realised the immense debt of gratitude they owed in this country to the men who, in the past, struggled to remove the disabilities under which Dissenters laboured for a long time. (Hear, hear.) Many of the statesmen who had laboured diligently and successfully to a certain extent had passed away, and recently Earl Russell, the most prominent of all, had passed away. He gave them “Civil and Religious Liberty all the world over.” (Cheers.)

The Rev. H. IERSON, in response, said this sentiment was found at every Unitarian gathering. If one thing more than another had distinguished the public missions of Unitarian societies, it had been the close association which they always held with the great principles of civil and religious liberty. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Ierson then dwelt at considerable length on the great advantages of civil and religious liberty, and gave a history of the formation of the Western Unitarian Union, which, he stated, arose out of a meeting held at Taunton many years ago, when addresses were delivered by the Rev. W. J. Fox, of Finsbury, one of the most distinguished ministers of his day. He spoke of the difficulties that existed at the present day in Germany, to the advancement of religious liberty, and referred to a report made by Mr. Chalmers (the second part of which appears in our impression of to-day).

The Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD next proposed “The Press,” and then

The Rev. J. BIRKS proposed, “Success to the Western Unitarian and Free Christian Union.” He said it was 32 years since the Union was first started, and explained that its object was to advance Christian worship to the One God and Father throughout the Western counties, the promotion of the social welfare of the people and the denomination, and of Unitarian literature. A society having these objects in view was one which well deserved their support. He suggested that it would be well if reports were sent in from all the churches in the district, so that they might know how all were getting on. Unless they knew something of one another they could not have the necessary amount of interest in each other.

Mr. BUTCHER, treasurer of the society, complained of the financial condition of the Union. He said little more than £100 was annually subscribed to the funds of the Western Union, and only about £3,000 a year was subscribed from all over England towards the support of the British and Foreign Association. He was afraid that unless he could get some good subscription the Union would incur liabilities to the amount of £70 or £80 during the year, which there would be no funds to meet.

The Rev. J. MURRAY, of Ilminster, thought they ought to be ashamed of the treasurer's report.

The Rev. J. BIRKS said he found, on reference to the financial statement, that they really had £87. 11s. 4d. more than they really required, and he protested against anything being said with reference to the want of generosity on the part of Unitarians. It was only necessary to show them a good cause, and they would respond heartily and readily.

The Rev. H. IERSON said he would take up the challenge of the previous speaker, and directed attention to the fact that a certain sum of money was required for the support of a Unitarian missionary in the Western counties, and hoped the members of the Western Union would find their way clear to contribute.

Mr. J. GOODHIND, of Taunton, proposed “The Visitors,” which was acknowledged by Messrs. CHRISTOPHER J. THOMAS, of Bristol, and CHAS. JECKS, of Clevedon, who gave the health of “The President, Mr. Councillor Goodland,” whose reply closed the proceedings in connection with the collation.

At half-past five o'clock a tea meeting took place at the Victoria Rooms, where a public meeting, which was largely attended, was subsequently held, under the presidency of CHRISTOPHER J. THOMAS, Esq., J.P., of Bristol, who, in his opening address, said he was pleased to see so large a gathering, and that the Unitarian ministers of the present day were gathering around them more numerous congregations. It was never the desire of Unitarians that their congregations should be confined to highly-cultured people, but that their message of truth should be addressed to all. (Applause.) In conclusion, he advised all young persons present to cultivate a taste for good reading.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG then addressed the meeting on the freedom of the pulpit. He rejoiced that the Unitarians had a free pulpit, which he considered was a great blessing. He spoke of the desire of Prince Lucien Bonaparte to inform himself of the various religious developments in England, and to classify their religious faiths. The Prince attended one of his lectures in London, and at the conclusion came to him and asked him to explain the principles of Unitarianism to him. He asked various questions, and among them one as to whether any person could attend Unitarian places of worship who believed in orthodoxy. He told him that a person who believed in doctrine was welcome. This seemed to floor the Prince, and he asked no more questions.

The Rev. HENRY IERSON, M.A., London, next addressed the meeting. He said that whenever the Unitarian body made up its mind to appeal to the people the people would respond. Hitherto they had been held back by some isolations in which their forefathers had to live, but now they ought to be equal to the spirit of the times, which was a spirit of universal brotherhood, and which they declared to be the true spirit of the Gospel of Christ. He thought everything depended upon the seriousness of the efforts of a few men in the district, and he appealed to the young men to come forward and help in this grand work. He then thanked them for the kind welcome his Association had received that day.

The Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD, B.A., Bristol, delivered an address on the support of the work of the Western Union Society, and then

The Rev. W. SUTHERLAND, Topsham, proposed “That the thanks of the visitors be given to the Taunton congregation and its minister for their hospitality.” He complimented the choir on the able manner in which they had sustained the singing. Mr. G. Philpott, organist, and the Rev. J. Birks, pastor, returned thanks.

A vote of thanks to the chairman having been carried by acclamation, the chairman briefly returned thanks, and one of the pleasantest and most successful annual meetings of the Society was brought to a close by the singing of the Doxology, and by the benediction given by the minister of the congregation.

MOTTRAM.—On Saturday last the ladies' annual tea party and entertainment took place, when over 200 persons were present at tea, the number increasing to about 250 at the entertainment. Mr. Alderman Duckworth, of Bury, took the chair and delivered a suitable speech, which was followed by singing and recitations given by the teachers and scholars of the Sunday School. The Rev. N. Green also briefly addressed the meeting. Before leaving the respected chairman showed the unabated interest he still feels for his former field of labour by giving a donation of £3 towards the harmonium which has been lately purchased for use in the Sunday School.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

LONDON AUXILIARY SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE thirtieth annual meeting was held at Stamford-street Chapel on Monday last. The Rev. Professor J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A., in the chair. The gathering of teachers was the largest for several years, and the reports of the committee and visitors were considered most encouraging as to the present, and hopeful as to the future. There had been no falling off in the numbers of the children during the year, and the attendance and number of teachers had slightly increased.

The visitors' report dealt rather trenchantly with the habit amongst certain teachers, now so prevalent, of reading sweet stories to the children while in class to escape the drudgery, as they deem it, of hearing the children read to them. It spoke, too, in no vague terms of the want of better organisation in some of the schools, and of a more equitable arrangement of the classes being desirable, of the great need of a better supply of books in some schools, and of a more frequent use of them in others, showed what mechanical arrangement was necessary to make a well-regulated school, and what spirit should animate superintendents and teachers alike to enable the Sunday School to rise as much beyond the level as the Day School, as, unless great care is taken, it risks falling below it. It spoke strongly against the habit which some schools have fallen into of dispensing with the short exhortative religious address to the children after class and before dismissal, where no regular service for them is held, advocated the more frequent and intelligent use of the scriptures, expressed pleasure at finding Mr. Hopgood's “Belief” cards in use in one or two of the schools, hoped that they would, in conjunction with Mr. Crosskey's “First Lessons” and Mr. Page Hopps' “First Principles,” become a basis for a course of systematic definite religious instruction; thought that with the list of excellent books now published by the Sunday School Association, there could be no difficulty in providing classes, from the youngest to the oldest, with a plentiful and suitable supply of books; urged them to make extra efforts to bring the morning attendance closer up to that of the afternoon, and both nearer to the number on the books, and to retain the elder scholars.

The report also spoke of the many ways in which good was being done by auxiliary institutions in connection with the Sunday School; urged the establishment of more of them, and the improvement of those they had already got.

With all these shortcomings there was a better spirit pervading both school and chapel than formerly evinced in a more earnest desire to promote the religious education of the young, and the report sounded even jubilant as compared with former years in the prospect of closer union between school and congregation.

An animated discussion ensued after the reading of the reports. The chairman, with the Rev. Professor Drummond, several ministers and laymen, making some excellent speeches and giving valuable suggestions. We hope to give a fuller report of this very successful and most encouraging meeting.

MANSFIELD: WEEK EVENING AMUSEMENTS.

ON Saturday evening, November 9th, by invitation of the Rev. A. W. Worthington, B.A., about 40 working men connected with his congregation, sat down to a substantial supper in the adjoining school-room. Afterwards games were indulged in, such as draughts, dominoes, bagatelle, &c. Various local, London, and comic papers and a few periodicals were also provided. In the course of the evening Mr. Worthington explained his plan. He said he had for a long time wished that some place of amusement and innocent recreation could be provided for the working men of Mansfield, and in default of a general place of meeting, he thought the school-room might be utilised for that purpose. He had therefore invited those present to form a nucleus for a regular meeting in that room from eight o'clock to half-past ten every Saturday evening. His idea was that games and newspapers, with occasional songs, &c., might be found attractive, and he would suggest that a sum of 1d. admission per week be paid to cover the extra expense of fires, light, cleaning the room, &c., the remainder to be devoted to buying games and papers. He did not wish them to fix upon anything definite at once, but would be glad of any suggestion as to the best means to adopt to make the meeting a thorough success. A sick club might be formed, and also a money club; with regard to the latter he did not exactly know how they were managed, but from what he was told of one some years ago, in which a member paid nearly 30s. for £1, he had not a very favourable impression of them. Any reasonable suggestion would receive his hearty support, as he was anxious to find out a popular and useful plan. He hoped next week to meet them all again, and that they would try to bring as many friends as possible with them. At the same time he should rely upon those present that night to maintain order among any who might join them in the future. He had never seen a party of people, young or old, males or females, settle down to amuse themselves and others with so little trouble. Several suggestions were offered, namely that an entrance fee should be paid, that money should be paid towards a supper, that a sick club should be formed, &c., but nothing final was arranged, it being left over until the following Saturday evening. Songs were given at intervals by Messrs. J. E. Birks, W. Mallatratt, J. Ashton, and C. Beasall. Votes of thanks were proposed to the Rev. A. W. Worthington and Mrs. Worthington. On the subsequent Saturday there was a muster of 50 persons, who agreed to pay a penny a night or 3d. a month towards the expenses of gas, fire, and cleaning; any surplus to be spent in the purchase of newspapers, games, &c. A concert was suggested as a means of raising funds for procuring a bagatelle table; and it is also proposed to provide coffee at 1d. per night. The meeting gave promise of proving successful as an attraction to working men and youths on Saturday nights.

FREE CONGREGATIONAL UNION, IRELAND.

THE ninth conference of the Union was held on Monday, the 11th inst., at Carrickfergus, at three o'clock in the afternoon. The day was very inclement, the snow falling heavily, but the attendance of representatives was very satisfactory. After a hymn had been sung, and prayer offered by the Rev. J. C. Street, the President, GEO. FISHER, Esq., took the chair.

Apologies for unavoidable absence was received from Messrs. J. Bennett, jun., Moneyrea; J. R. Neill, J. M. Darbishire, J. Richie, and H. Hardman, Belfast. When the roll was called the following were found to be in attendance:—Rev. J. C. Street; Messrs. G. Fisher, R. McCalmont, T. McClelland, Belfast; D. McMaster, Jas. Jellie, J. Lamont, J. Magill, H. Macartney, Moneyrea; W. A. Adamson, J. Logan, J. Larmour, sen., J. Larmour, jun., J. McGill, S. Logan, J. E. Adamson, Carrickfergus; E. G. David, and D. Thompson, Hopeton-street, besides a number of ladies and other visitors.

After the minutes of the last conference had been read and signed by the President, and an account had been given by the secretary of the settlement of Mr. Leyland at Burnley, and Mr. R. C. Smith at South Shields, the President proceeded to read an address, in which he showed the great necessity there was for a Free Congregational Union in Ireland, and expressed his belief that it had a very important future before it. At the close of his address, on the motion of Mr. R. McCalmont, seconded by Mr. T. McClelland, and supported by the Rev. J. C. Street, it was unanimously resolved: "That the best thanks of the Union be given to the President for his admirable address." It was also agreed that the addresses be printed in the annual report of the Union.

REPORT ON PREACHING.

Mr. R. McCALMONT reported as follows: Owing to the fact that neither the congregation at Moneyrea nor the Missionary Association have had a minister, the officers of the Union have had considerable difficulty in supplying the various pulpits. But a temporary engagement of the Rev. A. Buckley, the presence of Mr. C. J. Street, M.A., during his vacation, help from English ministers, and the assistance of the lay preachers of the Union have enabled your officers to keep the work efficiently in progress. They are glad to report that the Rev. D. Thompson has entered upon his work as missionary of the Belfast Unitarian Missionary Association, and they hope soon to record that Moneyrea is again settled with a minister.

REPORT ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

In the absence of Mr. J. M. Darbishire, the Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. R. McCalmont, Rev. D. Thompson, and Mr. J. Lamont reported on the condition of the Sunday schools at Rosemary-street, Belfast, Carrickfergus, Hopeton-street, and Moneyrea. The three first named schools were improving in attendance and usefulness, but the latter was temporarily closed, to be re-opened as soon as a minister was settled.

REPORT ON COTTAGE SERVICES.

Mr. STREET reported that several interesting and well-attended cottage service had been conducted by the Rev. Abel Buckley, and that arrangements were in progress for the continuance of this most useful agency by the Rev. D. Thompson.

WELCOME TO REV. D. THOMPSON.

Mr. D. Thompson, formerly of Manchester, having been appointed missionary in charge of Carrickfergus and Hopeton-street, Belfast, and being present as a member of the Union, Mr. T. McCLELLAND moved: "That this Union congratulates the Rev. D. Thompson on his appointment as missionary to the Belfast Unitarian Missionary Association, and earnestly desires that he may be successful in his work at Carrickfergus and Hopeton-street, Belfast, and that the members of the Union offer a cordial welcome to him on taking his seat as a member of this body." In moving this resolution Mr. McClelland said he had been informed that Mr. Thompson was a hard working, earnest, and devout man, and that he would bring to his duties here a heart devoted to the cause of God and the welfare of man, and a mind ready to work for truth and righteousness. He was to be congratulated upon entering a sphere of hard work, where all his powers would be taxed to the uttermost, and where his field would be of almost boundless extent. He begged also in moving the resolution to welcome him as a member of a free and earnest body—the Free Congregational Union.

Mr. C. GUSTAV DAVID seconded the motion, and said the teachers and workers at Hopeton-street gladly offered a welcome to Mr. Thompson. They were ready to work with him and to be led by him, and he trusted they would all unite in doing their best to make the school and mission a thorough success.

Mr. ADAMSON said: In offering you a welcome on behalf of the Carrickfergus congregation, I ask you not to be discouraged by the smallness of its numbers, but to remember that it has done good service in its time on behalf of its religious freedom and truth, and that it is still ready to stand by those who are contending for full liberty of thought and speech, and I promise you that you shall have our sympathy and co-operation in the work which you have undertaken.

The Rev. J. C. STREET said: In welcoming you into this union, we neither ask you any questions about the points of your faith, nor require from you any previous declaration regarding your doctrinal beliefs as a condition of admission to this body. In virtue of your being minister of Free Churches, and of your desiring to be a member of this union, you take your seat here and are heartily welcomed as a constituent member of the body. All that we desire from you is that you should give yourself heart and soul to the work that lies before you, that you should speak freely and frankly such truth as God makes known to you. That you should try to be a faithful, honest, and devoted servant of God for the welfare of man. And that, while you are experiencing our sympathy and co-operation, you should be ready to extend to us your own, I join in a hearty welcome to this Free Union.

The Rev. D. THOMPSON, in responding, expressed his gratitude for the cordial and hearty welcome he had received. He was entering upon an arduous work, and he trusted that he might be found able to do it satisfactorily. He meant to do his best, and he relied upon the co-operation of those he saw around him, and upon the blessing of God. He rejoiced to be welcomed as a member of the Union. No tests of any kind, direct or indirect, had been put to him respecting his doctrinal position. His religious freedom had been religiously respected, and he hoped that freedom would lead him into the truth of God, which he trusted he might be able to teach and to preach to his fellow men.

WELCOME TO VISITORS.

A cordial welcome was then given to the visitors from Dublin and Belfast who were present.

NEXT CONFERENCE.

It was arranged that the tenth conference should be held in Hopeton-street in the month of February.

OPEN CONFERENCE.

An hour was then spent in an open conference, upon matters affecting the welfare of the churches of the Union, and the proceedings were finally concluded by a prayer from the Rev. J. C. Street.

The members and friends present then partook of tea provided by the Carrickfergus friends, and left Carrick for Belfast at 6 31 p.m., grateful for the success which had attended their ninth conference.

RADEMON: DINNER TO THE REV. JAMES KENNEDY.

ON Thursday evening, November 14th, a farewell dinner was given in the Down Hunt Arms Hotel, to the Rev. James Kennedy, by the members of his late congregation at Rademon, and other friends. There was a large and respectable attendance, and the utmost cordiality characterised the proceedings. Among those present were the Rev. James Kennedy, Revs. S. C. Nelson, John Orr, David Gordon, William Napier, David Thompson, and others. The chair was occupied by William Davidson, Esq., coroner, and the vice-chair by W. H. Bingham, Esq.

The health of "Her Gracious Majesty, the Queen," having been drunk with all the honours, followed by that of "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the other members of the Royal family," the health of "The Lord Lieutenant and Prosperity to Ireland," was given with acclamation, and cordially drunk.

The CHAIRMAN said he had now to call on the vice-chairman to read an address to their honoured guest, the Rev. James Kennedy. (Loud applause.)

Mr. BINGHAM then read an address from the Rademon congregation.

The CHAIRMAN said they could not find fault with Mr. Kennedy for changing from the Rademon congregation to the much better one of Larne. They rejoiced in his promotion, and they rejoiced that his talents were about to be better rewarded than they could or would be at Rademon. He (the chairman) was very glad to hear that they still had the hope of his coming among them; and he would now give them the very good health of the Rev. Mr. Kennedy, and wishing him every success in his new sphere of labour. (Loud applause.)

The Rev. J. KENNEDY, in responding, said he thanked them most sincerely for the kind and flattering reception which they had given him, and for the equally kind wishes they had expressed for his success in the old congregation of Larne. So far as he was concerned, anything like a public expression of goodwill was quite unnecessary; for in the houses of his friends at Rademon he was always received with the greatest kindness. He had to express the hope that the many compliments he was receiving might not turn his head. He was conscious of many defects, and he must attribute a good deal of what was said to the goodness and generosity of the people of Rademon rather than to any special merits he could justly lay claim to. He concluded by proposing the healths of "The Chairman and Secretary, Messrs. Davidson and Bingham."

The CHAIRMAN responded, so did Mr. W. H. BINGHAM, who hoped the old congregation at Rademon may long keep together, and that the old walls may long be a temple where our descendants may worship, as our ancestors have done, holding fast to our own views, but respecting the convictions of others who may differ from us.

Prosperity to Larne congregation having been carried, The Rev. J. KENNEDY responded, and concluded by proposing "Prosperity to the Rademon congregation," and then proposed "The Non-subscribing congregation of Downpatrick," coupled with the name of the senior minister, the Rev. Mr. Nelson.

The Rev. S. C. NELSON, in responding, said that for nearly eighty years he had been intimately connected with the congregation; and he could not but feel a sort of pride, as well as gratification, that this congregation harmoniously and unanimously selected him as assistant and successor to his father, who was so much respected among them for nearly half a century. In choosing him, as in choosing his father, as well as their predecessors, they had appointed them successors to their patron saint, St. Patrick, not indeed by what was called apostolic succession, but by the free and unanimous voice of an harmonious, a united, a liberal, and a forbearing congregation. (Hear, hear.) That congregation in general, he thought, had been justly regarded as true disciples of our patron saint. Various sects and churches had disputed about what were the particular ecclesiastical views of St. Patrick. Anglicans, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics had each claimed him as their own and justly so, because that eminent apostle, who improved the temporal as well as the spiritual condition of the people of our island, did not invent or impose any peculiar metaphysical tenets or dogmas on those whom he came to improve. He inculcated on them those broad fundamental and eternal principles in which they all of every church and sect were happily agreed—the Fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man. (Applause.)

Various other sentiments followed, and the meeting was a most agreeable one.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—The Rev. W. Rodger Smyth, of Birmingham, has accepted the unanimous invitation of the congregation of Cowl-street Chapel, Shepton Mallet, to become their minister, and will commence his duties in January, 1879.

AINSWORTH.—A week-night lecture has been established in this place. Five lectures have been already delivered, four by the Rev. Ephraim Turland—"Epitaphs," "How we got India, and how we keep it," "Sir John Bowring," "Oliver Cromwell," and one by Mr. Thomas Tootill, jun., on "Astrology." It is intended to continue the lectures throughout the winter, and it is hoped that thus much useful information will be diffused. A brief devotional service precedes each lecture. At the close of each lecture questions may be asked, and each meeting is concluded with hymn and benediction. A course of Sunday evening lectures on "Unitarian Christianity" is being arranged.

ARDWICK.—On Sunday last the annual scholars' festival took place here, and was most successful in every respect. The sermon in the morning was preached by Mr. John Heys. In the afternoon the usual gathering of the scholars was held under the presidency of Mr. John Dendy, jun., who gave an appropriate address, which was listened to with marked attention. A lengthy programme of choral songs and recitations was gone through in a creditable manner. The choir, which was augmented by the members of the church choir, consisted of about 100 voices. The Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., preached in the evening, the subject of his discourse being "Parental Influence and Responsibility." The congregations were good in the afternoon and evening, the church being completely filled on each occasion, and the collections for the day amounted to £15. 8s. 0½d.

CHESTERFIELD.—On the 9th inst. Mr. Councillor Pearson, a member of our Unitarian Church, Elder Yard, was elected Mayor of this borough. On the Sunday morning following he went to the Parish Church, and he asked them as a favour to accompany him in the evening to his chapel (Unitarian) which he said was the oldest dissenting place of worship in the town. He should tell them that the Sunday School Anniversary sermons were being preached that day, and there would be a collection—(laughter)—but he could assure them they would have an intellectual treat. Elder Yard Chapel in the evening was crowded, the preacher being the Rev. John Page Hopps, who took for his text Eph. iv., 25: "We are members one of another." The sermon is fully reported in the Derbyshire Courier. It was listened to with rapt attention. Towards the close Mr. Hopps said we depend, sometimes fearfully depend, upon one another. The rascality or ignorance of one man, the neglect or failure of one man, has often dragged down a multitude, deranged a vast and complicated system depending on confidence, on the sense of security, or spread contagion through a community. Hence the conclusion to which even the liberty-loving men have come, that it is not possible or right to let people do just what they please, and be as foul as they please, to build their houses and neglect their drains as they please, and do with their children as they please. In that last they saw the full force of this law of life that we are "members one of another," for every neglected child is an element of danger to society at large, while every child won for goodness may send light and virtue far and wide.

CHOPPINGTON.—The Unitarian cause here for some time past has been in a languishing state, the services being held only once a month. The state of affairs was considered very unsatisfactory, and it was determined, in the hope of reviving the cause, to hold divine service every Sunday. To inaugurate this resolution a special course of lectures was announced. This course has just been brought to a conclusion. The lecturers were the Rev. R. Cowley Smith, and Messrs. G. Lucas, J. Glendinning, J. Robinson, and J. Watson. The whole of the lectures have been well attended, and have produced a cheering effect upon the small band of adherents who have long laboured earnestly and faithfully in our cause in this colliery district.

EXETER.—The Devon Evening Express of Tuesday last, gives a full report of a sermon by the Rev. T. W. Chignell on "Evolution and Religion."

GENERAL MINISTRY AND LECTURESHIP.—The Rev. Charles Wicksteed delivered his lecture on the Bible on Monday, the 11th inst., in the hall of the Beneficial Society, Portsmouth; on Tuesday, in the Town Hall, Newport; on Wednesday in the Town Hall, Chichester; on Thursday, in the Assembly Rooms, Southampton; and on Friday in the Town Hall, Poole. The chairmen were Mr. Henry Blessley, Mr. Robert Pinnock, the Rev. J. Hill, the Rev. D. Amos, and Mr. W. J. Pike. In one or two places the audiences were small, which, doubtless, was owing to the very unfavourable weather, but everywhere both the lecturer and the lecture were very warmly received, little or no opposition being offered. Favourable notices have appeared in all our local papers, so that we trust a new stimulus has been given by his visit to the whole of our churches in the south.

KNUTSFORD.—The Annual School Service was held here on Sunday evening last, November 17th, the preacher being the Rev. C. H. Osler, of Over Darwen. The same gentleman occupied the pulpit in the morning, and at both services gave very admirable sermons. The collection after the evening service amounted to rather over £13.

LEEDS.—On Sunday evening the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., preached at Mill Hill on "The Theatre," more particularly with reference to the opening of the Grand Theatre, New Briggate, Leeds, last Monday evening. In the course of his address he asked, Does a man commit a sin, even a little sin, by going to a theatre? Ought a man to be ashamed to go there? If so, let it be heard from every pulpit in the town that a place which would ensnare men's souls was about to be opened in their midst. If the churches had not the courage to do this, let them countenance their noble but discarded sister of the stage; let them recognise the grandness of Shakespeare as they saw him acted on the stage; let them support the theatre and make it what it ought to be. We might be told stories how the ruin of young girls had begun by attending the theatre. But were those dangers confined to the theatre? There was danger everywhere; and if we were to avoid danger, we must live out of the world. The danger was rather to be guarded against by knowing the temptations of life and being prepared to meet them. It was God who gave us Shakespeare, and he asked his hearers to see what they could make of God's gifts.—At the opening of the Grand Theatre on Monday night, Mr Barrett, the manager said: "He was glad to notice that one minister in Leeds—the Rev. Mr. Hargrove—had set the example in Leeds, and had recognised from the pulpit the good which the stage was capable of doing. (Loud applause.) Mr Barrett said he was in the position of a child who wanted to be good. He wanted to conduct the Grand Theatre in such a way that no word spoken on the stage could cause a blush to the youngest girl who might enter the building. But they must help him to be good. When he brought a good honest play they must support him."

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION. On Sunday last the third ordinary general meeting of session 1878-9 was held in the Ardwick School-room, the Rev. J. T. Marriott, president, in the chair. 120 persons were present. The meeting having been opened with a hymn, Mr. Harry Rawson read a paper on "The three R's still indispensable in Sunday-school instruction," which will be found at length in another column. A discussion followed the paper, which was listened to with marked attention. Messrs. Thomas Parry, J. H. Jones, David Baxter, John Heys, J. H. Reynolds, J. Wyley, John Mellor, and the Rev. J. Harrop taking part. A vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Mr. Rawson, and the meeting closed with prayer.

MOSSLEY.—The annual tea-party of the Stamford-road Band of Hope was held in the school-room on Saturday evening, Nov. 16th. About 500 adults and children sat down to tea, and the number was afterwards increased to near 600. At the meeting after tea the chair was taken by the Rev. John G. Slater, president of the society; and a racy and humorous address was delivered by Geo. E. Lomax, Esq., of Manchester. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. H. Bradbury and Mr. Joseph Heap. Mr. J. N. Brooks presided at the harmonium, and several temperance and other pieces were sung by the glee party. The Band of Hope children, conducted by Mr. H. Lawton, and other friends. Readings and recitations were also given during the evening. After the customary votes of thanks the meeting closed with the benediction.

NEWARK.—On Sunday, Nov. 10th, the Rev. John Fox entered upon his duties at this place. There was a good congregation, and he took for his text Phil. i., 17. "I am set for the defence of the Gospel," and he undertook to answer the following questions:—1. What is the Gospel? 2. What are its essential teachings? 3. What are its requirements and its objects? The sermon is reported at length in the Newark Herald. Mr. Fox set forth the ideal to be righteousness in daily life as the essential thing, and added when men fall below that ideal it is they and not their principles that are to blame.

NEWCHURCH.—On Sunday evening last the first of a series of lectures on "Theism v. Atheism"—apropos of the Nottingham controversy—was delivered by the Rev. A. Lazenby to a very numerous audience—the school-room being full. Great interest was manifested in the subject, a large number of Secularists being present. It is hoped that some good may result from these lectures and services, which are held in addition to the morning and afternoon services of the day.

NEWINGTON GREEN CHAPEL.—On Sunday morning, Nov. 10th, the Rev. J. D. Hirst-Smyth alluded in the course of his sermon to the work of Christian charity now being carried on at Mrs. Hampson's Home, 20, Compton Terrace, Islington, where women who have fallen astray from the path of virtue, are helped to retrace their steps and redeem the past. He earnestly recommended this institution to the support of all liberal thinkers, and announced that a collection would be made at the close of the following Sunday morning's service, as a practical expression of sympathy with so good a work. It is hoped that other churches and chapels will follow the example of Newington Green in this matter, and thus mark their appreciation of a charity, presided over, as it is, by one of ourselves—Mrs. Hampson having been a teacher in the Lower Mosely-street Schools for some years.

NOTTINGHAM: TEACHERS' SOCIAL MEETING.—The united meeting of Sunday school teachers held on Saturday, October 26, at the High Pavement, though not one of the largest we have had, was particularly pleasant and successful,—good tea, good temper, good company, good music, and a hearty "Good night" at the end. If only it were known what a sociable set of people these teachers are, half the congregation would be applying to be admitted to their ranks, and the difficulty would be, not too few teachers but too many.

ROTHERHAM SCHOOL BOARD ELECTION.—The Rev. Wm. Blazeby, B.A., has been returned, at the head of the poll, with two Churchmen, two Wesleyans, one Primitive, two Independents, and Catholic Priest as members.

STOCKPORT.—The annual congregational soirée was held on Thursday evening, the 14th inst., the Rev. James Black, M.A., in the chair. After tea, which was agreeably and successfully managed, the meeting was addressed by the chairman and the Rev. Robert Laird Collier, D.D. During the evening a choice selection of music was given by a glee party under the conductorship of Mr. Henry Collier. The room was tastefully decorated, and a considerable quantity of pictures and games were contributed by various members of the congregation, as also a number of choice bouquets.—On Sunday last Dr. Collier preached morning and evening to large congregations, and a special collection was made on behalf of the church funds.

SCARBOROUGH: WESTBOROUGH CHURCH SOCIAL UNION.—The first musical and literary entertainment in connection with the above union took place on Tuesday evening, the 12th inst., when a good company of members and friends were present. The Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A., presided. The programme comprised an introductory address by the president; glees, songs, and readings, by members of the union, which were all well rendered, and gave satisfaction.

SOUTHAMPTON: KELL MEMORIAL SCHOOLS.—The fifth lecture in connection with the Philosophical and Musical Society, was delivered by the Rev. T. Timmias, of Portsea, on "Religious Worship." The president (the Rev. D. Amos) having taken the chair, the lecturer said that, however simple the subject might appear, it was one upon which mankind had differed and quarrelled from time immemorial: nor were they even now agreed in their views concerning it. Nevertheless, man was so constituted that he must worship some object somewhere and somehow. The religious tendencies of ancient peoples were briefly reviewed, the lecturer contending for the sacredness of all religious thought that had a tendency to purify and ennoble the soul. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer closed the proceedings.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

ELLEN, T. R. D., M. J. G., received.

NEED OF A SUPERANNUATION FUND.

To the Editors.—I have for some time had an idea in my mind that I should like to make known to our Unitarian public, through the medium of your columns. It is this. Ought not the Unitarian body to have some means of taking care of its aged ministers? Our Wesleyan brethren take care of theirs through the medium of a superannuation fund, so that when a minister feels he has finished the work the Master called him to do this fund provides him the means of ending his days in comfort. Other denominations have similar means of providing for the declining years of their ministers. Now in our body we have, let us say, in round numbers, 350 ministers. Probably not more than say 100 of these have incomes that enable them to provide against sickness, old age, or death. The other 250, unless they possess private means (and I should suppose most do not), have to undergo a great deal of mental suffering on account of their inability to provide for the future, especially if they are family men. This mental suffering must be a great hindrance to a proper fulfilment of duty. Now, I hold that our ministers should be perfectly free from all pecuniary anxiety. They should be placed above it, so that they may be in a position to give their whole souls to their labour of love, and this can only be done by either giving them a sufficient amount to enable them to provide against sickness, or old age, or by the formation of a fund, which would grant them an allowance in sickness and provide them a comfortable maintenance in their declining years. I know several ministers at the present moment who are wearing away their energies in the service of congregations too poor to provide for their worn out ministers. The result of this state of things is that our ministers generally die in harness, working up to the last moment. This is not right. In a body like ours there is wealth enough to alter this state of things. Suppose that a fund on the principle of assurance be formed, first by half-yearly or yearly collections in all our chapels; secondly, by donations from those who could afford to give; thirdly, by annual subscriptions from all ministers who would desire to partake of its benefits. I think the amount got yearly in this way would, if managed by a body of trustees, be the means of providing many needy ministers, in cases of protracted sickness, with the means of living comfortably, and would also allow them to retire from their labours before being fully worn out. I mention the matter thus briefly in the hope that the subject may create an interest among our people, and lead to some steps being taken to carry out what appears to me so desirable an object.—I am, sirs, yours respectfully,

WILLIAM STEAD.

York.

[What our correspondent suggests is met, to a large extent, by the Ministers' Benevolent Society, Birmingham; and for ministers in Lancashire and Cheshire by the Widows' Fund.—Eds. U. H.]

THE BRADFORD CONGREGATION.

To the Editors.—I have no commission to speak for the Bradford congregation, nor do I know more of their relation to their late minister than may be known by any reader of our representative journals. But as I am of opinion that they have been very unfairly censured for an act of good sense and some moral courage, I shall be glad if you will let me say a few words on their side.

If Mr. Knapton's intention in asking for the pulpit on the last Sunday in October—after his resignation—were to address those who had been in the habit of sitting under his teaching, his desire was natural, and such as all would sympathise with, but would have been met—to the full as far as I can see—by such a meeting in the schoolroom as was suggested to him. If he desired on the other hand to address strangers flocking from the streets or chapels for the pleasure of hearing Unitarianism denounced from a Unitarian pulpit, then, it seems to me, his desire was natural enough, but also it was very natural and very sensible that the congregation should decline to be so befooled. Suppose I were to become gradually "broader and broader," were to drive away half my congregation with talk about "the stream of tendency," and so forth; at length, finding it necessary to resign my pulpit, I were to join the party of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant, pray would the Mill Hill congregation be condemned for their illiberality in denying me a farewell night in which, to the scandal of Christians and triumph of Secularists, I might dilate on the absurdity of Theism and humbug of Christianity?

Surely we love liberty rather as a means of reaching the truth than for its own sake. Why then, being once convinced of any doctrine as true or false, should we for the sake of liberty open our pulpits for the refutation of the truth and assertion of untruth? Mr. Knapton will find a thousand pulpits in England open to him. Why must he seek for the one where his views are specially disliked?—I am, sirs, yours sincerely,

Leeds.

CHARLES HARGROVE.

[We have admitted the above letter as differing in opinion from what has appeared in these columns, and hope the matter will now be allowed to rest.—Eds. U. H.]

COMING WEEK.

BIRMINGHAM: LAWRENCE-STREET.—On Sunday, at the Church of the Messiah, annual sermons by the Rev. Andrew Chalmers, at 11 and 6.30. On Monday, annual meeting.

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, on "God."

HULL.—On Sunday evening, at 6.30, the Rev. J. M. Dixon will lecture on "An American's View of Religion in England."

MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Saturday evening annual conversation of Sunday school teachers.

PENDLETON.—On Wednesday evening, lecture by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., on "The Holy Catholic Church."

UPPER BROOK STREET.—On Wednesday, recital and concert.

Birth.

HARDING.—On the 13th inst., at Charlton House, Prestwich, the wife of E. C. Harding, of a daughter.

Marriages.

HUDSON—HENSHALL.—On the 20th inst., at Brookfield Church, Gorton, by the Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., Thomas Hudson, Esq., merchant, of Manchester, to Sophie, daughter of Joseph Henshall, of Gorton.

WOOLLEN—SMITH.—On the 20th inst., at Upperthorpe Chapel, Sheffield, by the Rev. G. Knight, John, son of Mr. Chas. Woollen, to Florence Nightingale, youngest daughter of the late John Smith, manufacturer, Sheffield.

Deaths.

COE.—On the 15th inst., Chas. Edward, eldest son of the Rev. C. C. Coe, Highfield, Bolton, aged 11 years.

GOW.—On the 18th inst., at his residence, Tai Bach, Conway, the Rev. John Gow, aged 55 years.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BLACKPOOL—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.

Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, November 22, 1878.

DOING AND SAYING.

A "Thirlwall" Professorship of History is to be founded at Trinity College, Cambridge, in honour of the great historian of Greece.

Mr. Sam Bough, R.S.A., who died recently, was a native of Carlisle, originally a clog-maker, entirely self-educated, and a fine, vigorous, and very popular landscape painter.

Up to the present time no fewer than thirty-one Presbyterian ministers have died of yellow fever at their posts in South America. Yet it is said that Christianity is now incompetent to make sterling manhood.

When Lord Beaconsfield says that sovereigns and statesmen rule the world, we might reply like the man who, when he was told that Britannia ruled the waves, said he wished she would rule them straight.

A pilgrimage composed of about three hundred archbishops and bishops, and more than 100,000 other persons, is being organised for the present month to Goa, where the remains of St. Francis Xavier, which are deposited there in a mausoleum, will be exhibited during three days. Great religious and other fêtes will be celebrated at the same time.

There are no more Original Angels. The last of them become an angel last week. The Original Angels were seven, and they presided over the seven "Irvingite" churches. But one by one they have passed away, and the last—Mr. F. H. Layton, formerly an Anglican—has died from paralysis. There were also twelve apostles to begin with, and it was promised in the unknown tongues that these apostles should not die until the end of the world. Still they did die. Now only two are left, and one of them is laid by. Yet the Irvingites maintain their faith. Nothing can shake them.

A correspondent of the Liverpool Daily Post writes that the following extract may be interesting on the Afghan controversy:—In the First Kings, 9th chapter, and 12th and 13th verses, we find these words: "And Hiram came out from Tyre to see the cities which Solomon had given him, and they pleased him not. And he said, What are these that thou hast given me, my brother? And he called them the land of Cabul unto this day." The meaning of Cabul is given in the margin as "displeasing, or dirty." If we take Cabul we may be as dissatisfied with it as Hiram was with Solomon's Galilean cities.

From a report presented to the French Chamber, the Ultramontanes appear to have gone strange lengths to carry their candidate for Pontigny, the ex-cuirassier, M. De Mun. The clergy represented him as "a man sent by God." Priests standing in the cemeteries at the foot of the cross cried with aloud voice that those persons who voted for M. De Mun would act like good Christians, that they would be worthy of Paradise without even attending mass, and that all their sins would be forgiven them. As for the adversaries of M. De Mun, they were naturally consigned to the bottomless pit; and the nuns of "Saint Esprit" refused to tend the sick who voted on "the side of the devil." Not only did the bishop and clergy take an active and undue part in this election, but the prefect had M. De Mun's most dangerous adversaries arrested. One priest declared to his parishioners that if M. De Magnet were returned, instead of a crucifix a naked girl would be placed over the altar. Altogether the most shameful terrorism appears to have been exercised in Brittany.

Dean Stanley, reports the Philadelphia correspondent of the Guardian, confesses to have been driven almost to the limits of endurance by the questions of the curious in regard to his impressions of the country. As to his general reception, he ventures the remark that, if there is any criticism to be made, it is that the manifestations of kindness and friendliness have been too many and too strong. It was at a breakfast given him at the Century Club, New York, that these things escaped him. He told his entertainers of Dr. Johnson's visit to Scotland, and of his meeting at a reception a distinguished professor, who said, breaking the gloomy silence of the occasion, "I trust, sir, you have not been disappointed;" and of the famous reply, "No. I was told that I should find men of rude manners and savage tastes. I have not been disappointed." The Dean added:—"So, too, when I set out for your shores, I was told that I would meet a kindly welcome and the most friendly hospitality. I can only say, with Dr. Johnson, I have not been disappointed."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

PRINCIPAL TULLOCH ON THE ORIGIN OF RELIGION.

PRINCIPAL TULLOCH opened St Mary's College, St Andrews, by an address to the students on the different theories of the origin of religion. He described the two great lines of thought on the subject, the naturalistic and spiritual, and explained how impossible it was to reach a definite conclusion on any ground of evidence. The spiritual and naturalistic theories alike rested on certain assumptions of the inquirers as to the origin of man and of civilisation no less than of religion. He expounded the different standpoints involved in their theories, and the ground on which the spiritual theory vindicates itself. Every form of the naturalistic theory, he said, really implied that religion is not a reality, but a mere subjective delusion in lower or higher forms—a mere poetic rendering of man's fears and hopes, without recognition of any living power controlling his life in the world of nature around him. Religion was seen to pervade all human history, and to be everywhere one of its most powerful and constant factors, associated with human misery and also associated with the highest human heroism and and glory—a light shining above all the darkness of human crime. Such a fact could only have its root in a truly divine faculty in human nature, and was no mere deception necessary for human development.

AMERICAN NOTES.

ROBERT COLLYER AT HOME AGAIN.

THE Rev. Robert Collyer, of Chicago, is back in his pulpit again after an absence of three months in Europe. A local reporter has been interviewing him about the "good time" he has had, and this is what the reporter writes about it:—"Mr. Collyer was found in his study completing his preparations for this morning's service, and in reply to questions said that his health was capital. There was no room for doubt on this point. He was stout and brown and looked as if he had been leading an outdoor life with the most complete success. Beyond question the air of old England agreed with him. He said he spent all his time, except about twelve days, in England and Scotland, chiefly in England. He ran over to France to see a brother who lives there, and to take a look at the Exposition, but he couldn't stay long away from his beloved native soil. He contrasted Paris as he found it this time with Paris as he last saw it. Then the Commune had just been suppressed and he had great difficulty in getting a carriage to carry him across the city, because the horses had been eaten during the siege. The Paris of to-day bears but few scars of the wounds inflicted on her in 1870-1. 'So you had a good time?' prompted the reporter. 'Didn't I have a good time!' replied Mr. Collyer, his face radiant with happiness. 'I went all over England and visited the very nook in the moor where I was born, and saw the old fellows who were boys with me, and whom I hadn't seen since I was a boy. I missed them the last time I was there.' Mr. Collyer has sisters living in Leeds, and made that his head-quarters while in England, but he made a thorough investigation of Fewston, eighteen miles from Leeds, his early home and the haunts of his boyhood in the vicinity. At Fewston he delivered two lectures. One of these was on Edward Fairfax, the poet, who was born there. The other was his lecture on 'Clear Grit,' so popular in this country. A large force of navvies was employed in Fewston in building a reservoir, and of course he was seized with a strong desire to get at them and talk to them a little while. So he proposed the matter to a farmer who assured him that the navvies could be got together, and the thing was done. There was a large audience in which all classes were represented, but the great majority of which was composed of working men. Mr. Collyer was delighted to find that the navvies listened as appreciatively as any audience in Chicago would have listened. The rector of the parish presided at the lecture, and made some introductory remarks, 'So you see,' said Mr. Collyer, 'we were all regular and orthodox.' 'After all,' said he, 'about the best part of the whole trip is the getting home again.' Mr. Collyer said he didn't intend to go around lecturing; he was going to stay at home and take care of his church."

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

Aspects of Thought. A sermon preached before the Provincial Assembly, 1878. By J. Galbraith Lunn. Published by request. W. H. Smith, Evesham.

MR. LUNN'S Provincial sermon has recently issued from the Press, and presents many points which will be studied with advantage by a reader, as compared with a mere hearer. The argument is often close, and the sentences are often suggestive of more than one can easily catch at the moment of delivery. Mr. Lunn's text was in the words: "Faith is the substance of things not seen." The "aspects of thought," which he deals with under this text, are the several systems of speculative and practical religion and morality which have of late years occupied the public mind. The question underlying all these, as Mr. Lunn points out in his opening, is that between Naturalism and Spiritualism. Over this question the Scientist (though we think Mr. Lunn does not use this mongrel word) and the Theologian have come to strife. Our author insists, however, that there "can be no lasting divorce between the exact conclusions of reason and the reverent certitude of religion." He goes on to trace what of truth and error there seems to lie in the systems of the Positivist, the Secularist, the Pantheist and the Agnostic. Of Positivism, he says that it is "a busy and prudent economist, eliminating, and reconstructing, building up tenets which astonish by their magnitude." But "it is outside its sphere when it implies that the data of theology are mere assumptions—that God is merely a material force—that Theism is the prattle of infancy, and Atheism the verdict of manhood." He admits that Secularism, again, does well to "keep an open eye to all the great and good manifestations that lie around and within the world of nature," and "to carry out so far as it knows the earthly well-being of mankind." But then, it ought to recognise "that the science of political economy does not invalidate the science of Theology. As for Pantheism, Mr. Lunn declares that "if the spiritual teaching of Spinoza in its solemn contemplation, its dreary idealism and mystic utterances (the later phrases, we think, scarcely call up the real Spinoza) be a protest against the gloomy and repellent doctrines which accredit the universe with all the evil the ascetic can conceive, it is no vain theory." But Mr. Lunn points out that if God is confounded with the Cosmos, moral distinctions are confounded, because in making all things divine, the divinest attributes of the human soul are brought to a level with those which the conscience itself recognises as of an opposite character. Agnosticism has an influence for good in checking presumptuous attempts to define God's nature. But "it kindles no fires from a higher inspiration." Thus does the preacher give full credit to all that he finds of good in each of the systems, while he finds in one and all that the image they present is at the best but "a torso"—a statue "with neither head nor feet." What they want is supplied by Theism, and Mr. Lunn proceeds to show what Theism predicates of God and man. In this part of the discourse the conception of God is exhibited as an intuition which has undergone a development in its form of expression, as mankind has advanced from early to later stages of civilisation. It is shown that the great living systems have all been Theisms, from the sense of worship manifested in the age of stone, to the Vedic hymns and the hymns bearing traces of these last, which our churches sing to the God "who covers himself with light as with a garment." Last of all Mr. Lunn unfolds what Faith has to evidence in regard to man, his soul and its immortality. Even from this brief notice our readers will perceive that the sermon is pre-eminently one for the times; and we assure them that it will repay their perusal of it.

THE ELEVENTH PROTESTANTENTAG IN HILDESHEIM.

III.

SECOND SERVICE AND CONFERENCE.

ON Thursday, October 10th, the improvised pulpit in the Concert Saal was occupied by one of Germany's most distinguished thinkers, Professor Otto Pfeiderer, of Berlin. Since the issue of his late work on the "Philosophy of Religion" he stands almost unrivalled as a vindicator of the claims of spiritual truth, and perhaps his rare gifts may be of greater worth to Germany in her present crisis than the skill of her ablest general, or the defensive power of her best drilled army corps.

There was a large attendance of delegates and townspeople in spite of the early hour and the exhausting work of the previous day. This service was the culminating point of the Hildesheim meetings. Taking as his text Matt. ix., 36, "When he saw the multitudes he was moved with compassion on them because they were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd," the preacher drew a striking parallel between the state of Palestine in the time of Christ and that of Germany at present. The true remedy was to be found to-day, as before, in the transforming and uplifting power of the pure Gospel of Christ. The dead must, therefore, be left to bury its dead, and the living truth must be brought home once more to the hearts of men. I refrain from presenting a fuller resumé of this fine sermon as Professor Pfeiderer has kindly given me permission to translate it into English, and it will shortly appear in one of our denominational papers, or in pamphlet form.

A short business meeting succeeded the service, after which the second conference was held on "Religion and its Fundamental Significance for the Life of the People." Dr. Spaeth, of Breslau, in an interesting paper of more than an hour in length, treated the subject most thoroughly. Religion in the family, he pointed out, was the basis of all religious life, as the family was the basis of social and national life. Authority and piety are the pillars alike of the household and of the State. German history showed the inherent religiousness of the Teutonic race. That inborn tendency was not extinct, but its power could only be fully manifested when the Churches had better learned to keep step with the historical and mental development of the nation. Herr Lammers, of Bremen, followed with an address on "The duty of the Church in the Present Social and Political crisis;" and Dr. Manchot with a speech on the "Observance of Sunday."

Through the conference the speeches were all to the point and in admirable sequence, and their line of thought was made the basis of a resolution which was unanimously accepted at the close.

THE PUBLIC DINNER AND EXCURSION TO GOSLAR.

In the afternoon a large company sat down to dinner in the Assembly Rooms, a toast and speech in German fashion coming between each course, so that the dinner itself lasted about four hours. I contributed my quota to the entertainment in the form of a short speech on "The interchange of Literary and Religious Thought between Germany and England." On this, and a less public occasion the same evening, I had an opportunity of expressing our obligations to German theology and philosophy. I showed how our forefathers, excluded from the orthodox Zion had long to eat their bread in labour and sorrow. Their earlier literature bears the traces of a severe struggle for existence. It often lacks the clear vision and the aspiring wing of faith. What Priestley accomplished through patience and industry, Lessing seemed to do by the inspiration of God. Even now there are gaps in our religious literature which Germany alone is able to fill. And hence not a few whose powers are dedicated to the service of our liberal faith in England find, nevertheless, in Germany, their spiritual fatherland and home.

On the following morning, October 11th, the delegates were taken to the principal places of interest in the town by some of the leading citizens, and the rest of the day was spent in a delightful excursion to the old imperial city of Goslar. There, as in Hildesheim, the Verein has many friends, and the dinner in the Kaiser Hotel was in some respects even more enjoyable than that of the previous day. Professor Pfeiderer proposed the health of the Emperor in a speech characterised by his well-known felicity of expression and wealth of historical knowledge, while Professor Schmidt, of Basle, gave "The Ladies of the Protestanten Verein," with the eloquence and richness of humour for which the present occupant of De Wettes's chair is famed.

This visit to the old home of the Frankish and Hohenstaufen emperors was the prelude to a parting which many of us felt to be painful. But the cheering consciousness was in all hearts that the men who had gathered at the summons of the Verein from all parts of the empire had done their work in an earnest and faithful spirit, and deserved well of their country. Germany in her present mood is lamentably unable to appreciate their motives, or to repay their patriotism with gratitude or praise. She is confused by the multitude of her counsellors, and by the importunity of far less deserving claimants for the post of saviour of society. The Socialists demand permission to turn her provinces into a sluggard's paradise; and the Ultramontanes find the sovereign remedy for her ills in the installation of a Papal Nuncio, with plenary powers, in Berlin. The refined materialism of Strauss has thousands of persistent advocates, while orthodoxy offers to fight these forces, singly or allied, with the weapons of the Augsburg Confession. Compared with these the Protestanten Verein may seem but a fortified camp, with here and there an outpost in a hostile land. But in its armoury is the two-edged sword with which Luther vanquished Rome, with which Lessing discomfited bigotry, and with which Fichte helped to break the chains of Germany seventy years ago. And its leaders are inspired by the assurance of ultimate victory in spite of present discouragement and scanty support. But whether success come early or late, the Protestanten Verein can claim hereafter that in its country's time of trial it never despaired of the future of Germany, nor lost its confidence in her noble people, nor its faith in the renovating power of divine truth and Christian love.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

INDEPENDENCE AND AUTHORITY.

IN the city of somewhere there are two families, both aristocratic in their descent, both possessing considerable influence in the neighbourhood, one but differing from the other in some important respects. The head and chief of the one is Mr. Keep-his-own-dignity, and the paterfamilias of the other is Mr. Hankering-after-power. Both these gentlemen are strict disciplinarians, but they pursue quite different policies with respect to the management of their households. Mr. Keep-his-own-dignity is an exceptionally liberal person, of a very sweet temper, and tenderly respectful towards the rights of others. He is very pious, naturally reticent, and having greater faith in powers of persuasion than authority. He treats his wife as a counsellor and his children as his friends. He takes scrupulous care to explain every point of difficulty to his household, and appeals more to their reason than to their duty of obedience for the acceptance and adoption of his measures. The result is, Mr. Keep-his-own-dignity governs his family well. Though there are instances where the father has to give up some of his points and accept others suggested by his children, yet it is a talk all over the country that Mr. Keep-his-own-dignity is looked upon almost as a god by all his children. People envy the perfect order that reigns amongst his numerous family. The obedience of his children is the spontaneous attachment of the soul, it is cheerfully given and cheerfully accepted. The respect that they show to the old man in his presence is nothing when compared to the deep reverence, almost amounting to worship, which they show before others. Some of these young men have ideas some of which clash against those of their father, but they, out of love and respect for him, hesitate long before carrying them into practice; but so charitable is this old man that he scrupulously refrains from interposing his voice in the way of their convictions, and so entitles himself to their tenfold gratitude. But not so is Mr. Hankering-after-power. He also has got a numerous family; he also is outwardly obeyed by his household, but that homage is paid with grumbling. Mr. Hankering-after-power lays his whole stress on the great virtue of obedience in children. He is ever preaching this virtue. In the drawing-room, in the kitchen, at the dinner-table, in the boys' study, he is never remiss in propagating this great doctrine, till his wife hates him for that very preaching, and his children have intellectually gone to the other extreme. They consider obedience as the duty of cowards, and obey their father with hatred and bitter rancour of soul. Mr. Hankering-after-power is so narrow that he cannot think that he may be in the wrong, or that his children are rational beings. He regards honest doubt as the manifestation of a wicked nature, and candid questioning as open rebellion. He is a great believer in the Divine right of fathers and the sacredness of the family as a dispensation. Consequently, he always teaches his children to regard him as a vicegerent of God, and his commands as Divine behests; but, poor man, he is pooh-poohed on that very account. Mr. Hankering-after-power is not altogether devoid of nobler traits of character. He is a hard-worker, he truly seeks the welfare of the family, but he is scornfully treated by his children, and the order in his family is gone.

Let those who are ever preaching to us the great duty of obedience in religious matters read this. It is human nature that makes our knees bend before our superiors. None but the lost and the depraved can deny their due to the great masters of humanity. Do we not worship a thousand great names; of Jesus, of Paul, of Theodore Parker, for instance; of the endless chain of great patriots, great generals, great statesmen, and great philosophers, who fill the pages of history? And what is it that makes us love and revere them? They are reposing in the silent slumber of ages; they never come to us to preach the duty of reverence. Is it not because in loving God we also love godliness; in loving justice we love the just; in loving goodness we love the good; in loving courage we love the brave? If so, why so much nervousness and anxiety about the maintenance of authority? Go on doing your duty, brother, and the world will honour you, respect you, love you, obey you, and cheerfully accept your authority. Learn to be satisfied with the love and obedience that are freely accorded, and when you have not more, either think that you do not deserve more, or wait for posterity, and believe in faith that in the great day of God all that you pay to humanity will be paid back with redoubled interest. Never ring into our ears authority, authority, authority; they are cants suited for Papists. To us authority and independence are not two things, but one. Authority is independent agreement, and independence is agreed authority.—Brahmo Public Opinion.

JOTTINGS.

Do the best thou knowest, to-day. Shrink not from frequent error in this gradual, fragmentary state. Follow thy light for as much as it will show thee; be faithful as far as thou canst, in hope that faith presently will lead to sight. Help others without blaming their need of help. Love much and be forgiven.—Margaret Fuller.

We want such an access of truth that the general mind can be fed with a worthier conception of God, which will make every thought of Him inspiring as the dawn of the morning, and will banish the superstition that this life is the final state of probation, as an insult to his plan of eternal education and a chimera of a barbarous age.—Starr King.

"Are the Unitarians exclusively a Christian body?" We trust not; they are trying to be an inclusively Christian body, shutting out none who "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." But it would be much easier to vindicate inclusion as a principle, or as a spirit, than to vindicate Unitarian consistency and fidelity. The divine treasure is held in very earthen vessels.—Christian Register.

THE BEST THAT I CAN.

"I CANNOT do much," said a little star,
 "To make the dark world bright;
 My silver beams cannot struggle far
 Through the folding gloom of night!
 But I am a part of God's great plan,
 And I'll cheerfully do the best that I can."
 "What is the use," said a fleecy cloud,
 "Of these dewdrops that I hold?
 They will hardly bend the lily proud,
 Though caught in her cup of gold,
 Yet I am a part of God's great plan;
 My treasures I'll give as well as I can."
 A child went merrily forth to play,
 But a thought, like a silver thread,
 Kept winding in and out all day
 Through the happy busy head,
 "Mother said, 'Darling do all you can,
 For you are a part of God's great plan.'"
 So she helped a younger child along,
 When the road was rough to the feet;
 And she sang from her heart a little song,
 A song that was passing sweet;
 And her father, a weary toil-worn man,
 Said, "I also will do the best that I can."

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

MR. FRECKELTON AT BRADFORD.

MR. FRECKELTON, in recently occupying his old pulpit for a Sunday after Mr. KNAPTON'S withdrawal, made it his duty to speak plainly what he himself held firmly—first, as to the Affirmations of our faith, and secondly, as to the points in which the traditional theology stands condemned. His two sermons, now published*, are entitled respectively "The Gospel of the Rational Faith," and "The Impeachment of Traditional Theology." These sermons are not professedly an answer to Mr. KNAPTON. They go far beyond anything that appears in that gentleman's apologia. Where Mr. KNAPTON hints at reasons which he does not try to unfold, referring to BUTLER, PALEY, and ROGERS rather than speaking for himself, Mr. FRECKELTON gives us his own thoughts. The value of such a contribution to our material of truths, tried and found acceptable, as compared with the quotation of respectable dicta, is not to be overestimated.

Mr. FRECKELTON will not have us be depressed because of our small numbers. We are not to expect the crowd to go with us. The pioneers are necessarily a small body of picked men. "We of the free faith are called," he says, "to bear special witness to truths which have been long and widely neglected, which are now by no means popular, though advancing, and which, we know well, will have to wait until after our time for full and universal appreciation." If we are misunderstood and misrepresented we must take care, on the one hand that we do not fail in either charity or hope, but, on the other hand, "we must not stand still and keep silence when the banner of truth for which we stand is trailed in the mire, and men's mistakes and prejudices are appealed to, to keep them from the help they sorely need, and which we have to give." The preacher then, in proceeding to expound the affirmations of our faith, shows what it is to have a Faith and a Gospel. And here his words seem to us worthy of all acceptance. "To have a Faith is to have strong convictions rooted in great principles, and so related to the inner life on the one hand, and to conduct on the other, that life and character gravitate about them and follow their rule and law. This cannot be the case with a mere set of opinions, especially if they are accepted upon authority, without carrying with them the full justification of the reason, intellect, and conscience." As to our destructive and negative teaching, he reminds his hearers that in erecting a new structure, even though it be a temple to God, somebody, as Theodore Parker said, "must cast down the old and cart away the rubbish." Mr. FRECKELTON then expounds in lucid and effective terms the Affirmations of God, the Soul in Man and its intercourse with God, the Supremacy of Conscience, and Immortality; and in concluding the first sermon insists that, in practical application, such a faith has to do with everything. "It includes everything; and, either for justification or criticism, for development or purification or destruction, it relates itself to every institution of society, to every phase of life; to every impulse of conduct, to every element of character."

The second sermon, the impeachment of Traditional Theology, opens in a tone of too great severity, as it seems to us. The preacher, indeed, deprecates the application of his remarks to men; he speaks of doctrines, "which have no feelings to be hurt." But he challenges doctrines themselves in a voice that is, to say the least, not sympathetic. We doubt whether religious beliefs can be treated so as to correct the errors associated with them, except by fully understanding what they mean, where they touch the heart, how they rule the man. Very able as is Mr. FRECKELTON'S refutation of the dogmatic forms of the popular theology, he does not occupy himself with a search for the causes of their hold on so many of the most earnest and profound souls. To associate what comes from Augustine with "the very worst periods of controversy in the early Church," is surely to deal with the history of religion in a very foreshortened manner. The author of the Confessions and the Civitas Dei, did certainly contribute to the form of Christian orthodoxy much that will pass away from it; but before we have done with Augustine, we shall have to learn what realities he struggled amid, and what profound aims of the Spirit possessed him. If, however, Mr. FRECKELTON does not take this line of treatment, he takes one that has its effect, and good effect. He shows, and he cannot show too forcibly, how little power there is in Evangelicalism to transform the world, when it is trusted in as men trust in a panacea. We shall conclude our reference to these eloquent sermons with the following passage on the shifting state of popular feeling, in passing from sensational Evangelicalism to sensational Jingoism: "Messrs. MOODY and SANKEY came from America. They had all the prestige of a wide popularity; all the influence of a respectable support; all the momentum that could be given by wealth, and the presence of noble lords and ladies upon the platform; all the verve that is characteristic of earnestness and enthusiasm; and all the force of attraction that comes of large crowds of people, and of appealing to the most powerful and quickly responsive human emotions. All at once London and England were to be 'won for Christ.' They went hither and thither heralded and reported everywhere by the press, and followed by crowds, out of which they gleaned their reputed converts by tens of thousands; they were hardly gone before their work died down into comparative nothingness; and all we had left was a small quantity of very bad poetry, embodying much worse theology, and set to very indifferent music; and the very next year there passed over all the land a great burning wave of unreasoning, purely brutal, and utterly godless war lust, which concentrated itself in London like a horrible, hungry, blood-thirsty beast, ready to fly at the throat of the first victim that dared to offend."

The Rev. J. Gow, B.A., Penmaenmawr.

We have to lament the removal by death, at the comparatively early age of 55, of one of our ministers, who added to the character of a simple and earnest servant of Christ the gifts of a sound scholar and thinker, and of a thorough teacher. He died early in the morning of Monday the 18th inst., having preached on the day before an impressive sermon. He was carried to his grave by a number of humble friends who volunteered for this last service, and was followed by men of various churches who had learned to know his kindness and worth, notwithstanding that ill health and native good taste withheld him from every form or degree of self-display.

John Gow was born, 1823, at Leith, N.B., of parents in humble circumstances, and almost before the end of childhood, was forced, through the death of his father, to depend entirely on himself. Going over to the North of Ireland when about 16, he supported himself there till 1851, chiefly by teaching, and combined therewith so much learning, that he was able to graduate at Trinity College, Dublin. He felt the Christian ministry to be his true vocation, and attended from 1851 the theological course at New College, then still in Manchester. In 1854 he settled as minister of the Bayshill congregation, at Cheltenham, where he spent almost twelve happy and useful years, endearing himself alike to the richer and to the poorer members, by the thoughtfulness and spiritual force of his preaching, and by the loving faithfulness of his pastoral service. He married the eldest daughter of Rev. J. G. Tegg, Gloucester, and, with their two sons, she survives to mourn their irreparable loss. In 1865 befel the accident which, for more than a year, wholly prostrated Mr. Gow, obliged him to resign his pulpit at Cheltenham, and enfeebled his lower limbs for the remainder of his life. Most happily for himself, for his wife and sons, who tenderly shared his affliction, and for many more besides, the nervous disease left his mental powers unimpaired, his sweet temper and serene trust undisturbed. After leaving Cheltenham, he spent some time at Gloucester, teaching as much as health allowed, till the bequest from an uncle of Mrs. Gow, of a house and small estate in Devonshire, led to his residing at East Budleigh, whence he conducted one service each Sunday at Sidmouth. In 1871, partly to gain a more bracing climate, yet more to be within reach of some congenial society, from which he was in Devon utterly cut off, he accepted the invitation of Mrs. Darbishire to conduct, as regular minister, the services at the Pendyffryn School. At Tai Bach, near Penmaenmawr, he dwelt till the close of his life, keenly enjoying all the natural beauties of that lovely North Wales coast, and every opportunity of social meeting and interchange of thought afforded him by the warm friendship of the Pendyffryn family, and the frequent visits of friends. He was constantly employed, as health and pain—of which he suffered much—permitted, imparting to his two sons his own thorough and conscientious scholarship, and communicating to many more, whether as pupils or friends, his stores of varied and accurate learning. Like Chaucer's Clerk of Oxenford, "Gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly teche." He was engaged, when called away by death, on a course of literary lectures, which were looked for with the greatest interest by those, in the thinly-populated neighbourhood, who had taste for "things of the mind." And so is gone from us, far too soon for us, and for the promise of work that was yet in him, one who made little noise in the world, for of him "the world was not worthy."

* Unitarianism versus Evangelicalism. Two Discourses delivered in Chapel Lane Chapel, Bradford, on Sunday, Nov. 3rd, 1878, by the Rev. T. W. Freckleton. Bradford: Wm. Lobbey.

The first impression made by Mr. Gow on all was that of simple, homely Goodness. With the youngest and least cultivated he was at home, and ready, with a quick and genial humour, to partake in the most unpretending converse. Those who had in them a key to open stores of learning and knowledge, found out by degrees how deeply-read and deeply-thinking a man he was. An extensive knowledge of Languages and their best literatures, was added to an amount of Theological learning most surprising, in one whose time had been so fully occupied by the duties of preacher and teacher, which to most make regular study impracticable. He has left behind him, as few men among us, who equalled him in various learning, as he has of those who would equal him in patience and gentleness, if struck down from useful activity to the prospect of poverty and the certainty of incurable disease. His life is a lesson, in all privation or loss, to—

Argue not Against Heaven's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heart or hope; but still bear up and steer
Right onwards.

But from his life comes, moreover, a voice filled with the hopeful patience of the Christian disciple:—"As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things."

Dr. Theodore Reim.

THE author of the well-known work "Jesu von Nazara" died at Giessen on the 17th inst. His health had long been failing, and not long ago he felt compelled to resign his chair as Professor of Theology and accept the usual retiring pension. In him Theology loses one of her noblest and truest students. For not only did he bring to his work great talents and large stores of learning, but also a truly devout spirit and deep religious feeling. His work, therefore, was always positive in its results. In writing the life of Jesus, from the historical standpoint, he had to clear away much that was venerable, if not sacred, in popular traditions. But he always did so with a tender hand, and because he was assured that truth was infinitely more precious to the sources of the religious life than any mere traditions, however venerable. Indeed his single-minded sincerity and love of truth for its own sake, was the feature in his character which at once impressed all who knew him. Much as he was admired for his learning and skill, he was yet more deeply loved for himself, and the place he occupied will long remain vacant in many hearts. Those who knew him best felt that he possessed, in rare degree, the mental and spiritual qualifications for thoroughly sifting the historical records of the life and character of Jesus, and it was at their urgent solicitation only that he ventured to undertake what was the great work of his life. Rarely has friends' advice been productive of so valuable a result, but then how rarely have friends the privilege of having such a genuine and transparent character to advise.

C. T. P.

CATHOLIC HOSPITALITY OF THE MAYOR OF LEEDS.

DERBY CONTRASTED WITH LEEDS.

I DO not wonder, as each November comes round, to find that we Unitarians look with such interest, and, perhaps, pardonable pride, to see if the friends of our faith still hold their own in the hard and often thankless duties of a Municipal Governor; and how many have received at the hands of their colleagues the highest civic honour which can be conferred by electing them the Chief Magistrate of the town in which they are labouring.

And yet, on the other hand, I do not wonder that we feel so deeply any unmerited mark of disrespect or unkindness practised towards any of our churches, as has been recently reported from Derby, especially when our Unitarian Mayors so universally distinguish their year of office by large-heartedness and truly Catholic generosity.

The unkind position which the Mayor of Derby recently assumed towards our Sunday School teachers there, has compelled me to break through my dislike to write to papers; but I wish to inform your readers how differently the ex-Mayor of Leeds (Mr. Councillor Carbutt) has acted during his year of mayoralty.

One of his first acts as Mayor was to send to the clergy and ministers of all denominations of which he could learn, and temperance societies, tickets to distribute amongst the old people above, I think, 70 years of age.

As large as our noble Town Hall is, it could not accommodate all who would have responded; but it was a grand and touching sight to see between one and two thousand old men and women, some pretty firm, others halt, lame, and blind, sit down and enjoy the splendid and bountiful repast which the Mayor had provided, and his brother Councillors, and other distinguished citizens, assisted in the waiting, whilst their wives or lady friends made the "nice cup of tea."

After, followed an entertainment suited to the ages of his guests, such as a magic lantern, funny songs, &c.; and many were the tears which stole silently out of eyes of both the high and lowly as they watched the hands of the poor old people raised in wonder at such funny sights and sounds, which scores had never seen or heard before; and the hearty, genuine cracks of laughter which now and then seemed to pass beyond all control.

The night, unfortunately, turned out wet and snowy; but the committee who assisted the Mayor had been able to secure such a number of voluntary conveyances, that within an hour all had been got safely off home with the friends who had come to look after them. And as the old people passed out of the hall on that memorable night, many, indeed, were the "God bless him!" which caught our ears as we packed them off on their ride home.

One big shadow, though, of religious bigotry threw its ugly shape across the brightness of that gathering. The Vicar of Leeds and one or two of the clergy returned their tickets, the substance of their objection to distributing them being that the Mayor had dared to take the chair at a meeting held under the auspices of the Leeds Non-conformist Union, at which the disestablishment and disendowment of the Church of England had been talked about. Yes; he had so far forgotten himself as to remember he was a man who held views, opinions, and principles, as well as being the Mayor of Leeds.

Men, women, and children, of all and no creed, never went to the Mayor or Mayoress in want or trouble without receiving sympathy and assistance, whilst his gardens from Sunday to Saturday were open to the invalid, the club, or association which cared to avail themselves of such a chance. Many, indeed, have been the times when, sitting with the Mayor at his home, talking over the affairs of our town, I have seen people from all parts of the borough, as if it were a public park, and, if I expressed my fear that damage would be done, invariably got the answer, "Oh! they will not do much hurt, and it is doing them good."

But let me turn to the immediate object in sending this account. Happily for Leeds, most of its Mayors have been interested in its Sunday schools, and also a large number of its Town Councillors; and any visit of Royalty to our town, or national festivity, is scarcely considered complete without a Sunday-school gathering. Then we have marshalled our tens of thousands of children.

Our ex-Mayor has been no exception to this interest, and has acknowledged it in an unprecedented way. He sent out invitations to every denomination in Leeds, and arranged for the superintendents and teachers to send as many scholars every Saturday afternoon as his gardens would hold; but, in addition, he had to arrange other days in the week to meet the demand. Tea and eatables were provided by him, and if the weather turned out wet, which, unfortunately, it often did, the tea was sent off to the school whose turn it was to be there.

To this invitation the various sections of the Methodists' body, also Independents, Baptists, Unitarians, Roman Catholics, and Church of England responded, and others which, perhaps, at this moment escape my memory, and thousands upon thousands of Sunday-school children and their teachers enjoyed the beauties of the gardens and the unbounded generosity of the Mayor and Mayoress.

But in this account I am unable to say that the Mayor has escaped calumny. Oh, no! the tongue of slander and the hissing sneer have often been heard, and I am afraid that many a well-meant deed may have thus been withered in the bud. The writer of this notice has privately distributed considerable sums during the year on behalf of the Mayor, of which the public will never know.

But now let the end be told. He did what he believed to be right, and though the voice of scorn was often heard, he steadfastly adhered to his principles and what he believed to be right and just, and never was a mayor more unanimously, more sincerely, pressed to accept the office again than he was.

From all parts of the borough came the expressed hope that Mr. Carbutt would yield to the solicitations of his friends to serve again; and on the day when he removed the chain, to which he had added additional brightness, and placed it on the shoulders of his successor, he received from all parts of the Council Chamber the well earned, genuine and sincere thanks of those over whom he had presided, some of whom early in the year differed with his idea of fulfilling his post, and thus terminated a year of a Unitarian Mayor who, within two years, had been elected a Councillor and then had conferred upon him the highest civic dignity by his fellow-townsmen.

J. S. M.

THE DUTCH PROTESTANTEN BOND AND PROTESTANTENDAG.

[THE following is the Report presented by the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., Nov. 20th, Deputation from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to the recent meetings of these Societies in Holland.]

The meetings of the Protestanten Bond began with a service in the Great Church, a service consisting, according to the Dutch custom, simply of music, one prayer, and the sermon. The music was of a different character from that usually heard in the Churches of Holland or Germany, and was in fact a short concert of sacred music, opening with a fantasia on the organ for two performers, by A. Hesse. The sermon was by Professor Rauwenhoff. His text was "One thing is needful," and his sermon an attempt to say what was the one thing needful for us now. Some say liberty is all we require, but there must be something more than that. Liberty is only a means. Liberty, for the sake of liberty, is as absurd as talking for the sake of talking, and not because you have anything to say. It is true that liberty is necessary for the pursuit of the highest. But the highest itself is more than liberty. It is that which corresponds to the deepest wants of our nature. We cannot exactly define it, but the best name we have for it is piety. Not the piety which consists in the observance of any special religious forms; but the piety which can and does exist under all forms, and consists in a sense of the higher, in earnestness of life, and in devotion to some sacred work of life. When we look for this we find a distinction between man and man, before which all social distinctions lose their significance, and of this alone can we say it is the one thing needful. Reviewing the present state of civil and domestic life and of education, he spoke of the emptiness of public life, the want of powerful national sentiment, the indifference which men manifest, seeming as if they were ashamed to let it appear that they had hearts within them, the drunkenness and immorality among the people, the materialism in education; in the higher schools, zeal for facts and poverty of ideas, and in the lower the children sacrificed to political partisanship, and God banished from the schools in the name of neutrality; in the homes frivolity and selfishness, children in the ball-room and the theatre who should be in the nursery; and in society the moral sense deadened, young men and women speaking of the most sacred things with cynicism and contempt, a literature without faith, and without inspiration, all poetry and spirituality suffocated by a so-called realism. After thus sketching most powerfully the darkest aspects of the present age, "And now," he continued, "will you tell us that piety is the remedy for all this?" "Yes, that is the main thing. Not this form or that, but piety as the reality in all forms; from it I expect deliverance from all these evils. It is the one thing wanting in the present age." Then he spoke of the opportunities and influence of those who were present; of the good these men might do; of the power the women had in this respect; how important the true religious training of their children, how rarely the son of a truly pious mother turned out a mocker and indifferent to the higher life. Above all, he looked to the young men and women of the present day to do their part. To-day is ours. Let us confirm our faith in the things which are not seen, and our desire to live and labour for them. All depends upon individual devotion to the work.

After the service there was a social gathering of the delegates and others, at which various welcomes were given and acknowledged. M. Leblois, from Strasburg, gave an interesting account of the system of colportage they had adopted. Professor Tiele gave a hearty welcome to me as your representative, saying how the names of Martineau, Channing, and Parker reminded them that the Unitarians were their friends, and kindred in spirit. And I replied with a few words on the unity of the great work that lies before all our liberal religious associations, and the helpfulness of sympathy and co-operation in the common work.

The eighth general ordinary meeting of the Protestanten Bond was held on the Wednesday morning, and lasted from ten till nearly half-past four, with an interval of half an hour for lunch. It appeared from the secretary's report that a thousand new members had joined the Association during the past year, making a total of over nine thousand. The receipts for the year amounted to about £444, the expenditure £452. It should be noted that the subscription is purposely kept as low as possible, in order to enable even the poorest to be members of the Bond. Some conversation took place as to the possibility of making the Hervorming (the organ of the Bond) more popular, and printing a supplement suitable for Sunday reading. It was decided that no such extension could be attempted until the Hervorming paid its way. It now costs the Bond between thirty and forty pounds a year. It could not be made to pay unless there was a large increase in the number of subscribers (now about six hundred.)

Some alterations in the rules were discussed, and one which would have dropped the name of Protestantendag for the public meetings held in connection with the Bond was discussed as warmly as some of our proposals with regard to names. Some objected to the name as unsuitable, and smacking of Germany. Others clung to it as recalling the memory of many a pleasant day, and many a warm discussion; and the alteration was made at last in such a way as to keep the Protestantendag. A proposal to raise the minimum subscription to is. 8d. was rejected. One of the most important matters brought forward was the report of the "Hymn-book Committee," and the second new collection of hymns—a collection of twenty-nine hymns, most of them original, with music, printed in the form of a pamphlet of about sixty pages. The form, and the printing of the tunes with the hymns, might afford a useful suggestion to our Sunday-school Associations. The reports of the Committee for Religious Instruction, and the Sunday-school Committee, were full of interest, showing that no department of religious life is neglected by the Protestant Bond; but the mention of these agencies must suffice here, or my report will be far too lengthy.

Dinner at half-past four, with numerous toasts between the courses, occupied the time till half-past seven; and then the public meeting was held in the theatre of the Odeum. At this meeting the delegates to Båle and Hildesheim (Pastors Knappert and Chavannes) gave an account of the meetings they had attended; the German delegate from the Protestant Verein (Dr. Spiegel) delivered a most interesting and eloquent address; and then a paper was read by Dr. Van Horn on "The Resolutions of the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church in 1878 concerning Membership and the Rights of the Minorities." It must be explained that in Holland all the members of the church in any town form one congregation, and if there are a number of clergymen each one is elected by the whole of the members. Hence, where the orthodox are in the majority, as they generally are, they elect only orthodox clergymen, and the moderns are unable to have even one of their own school. The orthodox clergy then very often refuse to admit young people as members of the church unless they are orthodox in opinion, and the result must inevitably be the gradual exclusion of the modern element. The resolutions of the Synod passed last July provide that the minority in any congregation may organise themselves, and appoint representatives to act for them, and shall then be recognised by the Synod. Where there are two clergymen the minority shall elect one, if they number two-fifths of the members. Where there are more than two they shall elect provided they have a section of the members corresponding to the number of clergymen; i.e., if there are three clergymen the minority must be a third, four clergymen a fourth, and so on. Where the minority cannot elect a resident clergyman, they may arrange for services, and invite preachers from other places, and have their children baptised and confirmed by these clergymen, and the baptism and confirmation shall then be entered in the register of the congregation. But these resolutions of the Synod are not yet the law of the church—they have to be approved by the classes before they can become the law. The probability is that they will be rejected. The orthodox object that they are unnecessary, and many of the moderns object that they are altogether inadequate to the real want of the church, which is perfect liberty for each individual conscience, whether of clergyman or layman, and the abolition of mediæval symbols which are still retained in just sufficiently loose a fashion to be practically useless, and yet to gall the consciences of many, and altogether to exclude others.

D. Van Horn is a member of the Synod, and his paper was essentially a prayer for support and patience. M. De Kanter, a barrister of Rotterdam, followed with a protest against the inadequacy of the resolutions; they would give to each school almost what it wanted; but the real want was complete liberty of action for all, and the only means to attain it was a complete reform of the parochial system. Herr Hugenholtz, Jun., editor of the Hervorming, followed with a more vigorous protest against all attempts to patch the matter up, and thus reconcile discordant elements in the church. The proposals of the Synod would grant a short respite to the modern school, but in a church under orthodox symbols it would die out all the same. Professor Kuenen tried to moderate the effect of Herr Hugenholtz's impassioned speech, and dwelt on the necessity of living peacefully together. Dr. Hugenholtz, of the Hague, the eldest of the three brothers, replied, expressing the respect which all feel for Professor Kuenen, but attacking with the greatest vigour the position which he maintained. It was true that all should live peaceably together, but the way to secure that was not to bind up opposing elements in one ecclesiastical organisation. Would Roman Catholics and Protestants live more peaceably together if they were dragged into one ecclesiastical communion? Moreover, they had to think not only of themselves, but of their children. The house they dwelt in was shaking. Let them lay the foundation of a house in which their children might dwell in safety.

This discussion had lasted so long that a paper by Dr. A. J. Oort, of Meppel (brother of Dr. H. Oort, one of the authors of the Bible for Young People), on "The Use of the Bible in the Education of the Young," had to be omitted.

The meeting was brought to a close by Professor Tiele; and the representatives, &c., then met again in the Concert Hall of the Odeum, where the time passed pleasantly, with toasts and music, till half-past one in the morning.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL AUXILIARY ASSOCIATION.

As reported in our last number, the thirtieth annual meeting of this Association was held on Monday evening week, in Stamford-street Chapel. The Rev. Professor J. Estlin Carpenter occupied the chair.

THE ANNUAL REPORT

stated that the Society enters now on the fourth decade of its varied experience. Though its course may have been at times a little fluctuating, its advance upon the whole has been slow and sure. Upon the occasion of its first annual meeting there were but seven schools to form the Association. Ten years afterwards there were twelve schools in union with it, and an infant school was reported to have been formed at Spicer-street. During the next ten years the number of schools had increased to sixteen; their number now being seventeen, though, until recently, before the school at Clerkenwell was joined with that at George's Row, late Chapel-street, it was eighteen.

In 1848 the total number of children on the rolls of the seven schools was 780. Morning attendance, 445; afternoon, 583; total number of teachers, 114.

In 1858 the total number of children on the rolls of the twelve schools was 1,006. Morning attendance, 459; afternoon, 658; total number of teachers, 169.

In 1868 the total number of children on the rolls of the sixteen schools was 1,789. Morning attendance, 674; afternoon, 1,176; total number of teachers, 253.

In 1878 the total number of children on the rolls of the seventeen schools up to June last was 1,970. Morning average, 517; afternoon, 1,275; total number of teachers, 232.

These figures will show, what your committee believe to be the general experience of all London schools, that the average attendance of the children as compared with the number on the books is much below what it was in the earlier years of your Society's experience, the decrease in the morning averages being especially marked.

The committee hope that they may now make a strong appeal to you, and through you to the congregations, for yet further efforts to continue the improvement of the schools, and especially with the view to bring the morning averages more closely up to those of the afternoon, and both to bear a better proportion to the number on the books.

They particularly desire to commend to your notice the excellent class books now published by the Sunday School Association, so in every way calculated to help the teachers in their work, and bespeak your continued support for their manual, the Teachers' Notes, and of the magazine for the children, Young Days, both of which periodicals your committee feel ought to have a large circulation amongst us, and be liberally supported.

The secretary was directed to write to the schools asking the question—"To what extent can systematic teaching, with the view to periodical examinations, be introduced into the Sunday schools?" To this various answers more or less direct were returned, but no very strong expression of feeling was elicited one way or the other, though doubts were freely expressed as to whether it was right to urge the adoption of any plan upon unwilling schools. Some of the schools asked for further time to consider the question.

At the next meeting of your committee, in May last, it was thought desirable, as far as then possible, to bring the matter to a head, and a resolution was accordingly proposed and seconded. To this the following amendment was proposed and carried, the chairman giving the casting vote: "That in the opinion of this committee the question of examinations should be left to the determination of each separate school." It has been so left accordingly, but your committee have not heard that the plan has yet been adopted in any of the schools.

The income of the Society during the year from all sources has been £10. 17s. 3d.; the expenditure £12. 2s. 2d.; leaving an apparent balance due to the treasurer of £1. 4s. 11d., but when the subscriptions for the current year are all got in the amount outstanding will about balance the deficit.

The secretary also read his Visitors' Report, at the close of which he said that he must be but a poor worker, and easily discouraged, who cannot see in the Sunday school abundant material from which the church of the future is to be reared in spite of the numberless counteracting influences that now more than ever seem to be rife to unsettle the minds of youth, and win them from allegiance to God and the Christian faith.

The Rev. J. D. HIRST SMYTH gave a viva voce report. He quite agreed with those who advocated religious teaching in our schools, but the question is, what is religious teaching and what is religion? He was satisfied that the schools were improving, and were capable of still greater improvement. After dwelling at considerable length upon the question of religious teaching, the speaker advocated the introduction of a Provident Brotherly Society, like that at Norwich, among the London schools united.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving that the reports of the committee and visitor be received and adopted, said that he thought the returns were satisfactory. The tendency to decline is distinctly arrested. There are peculiar difficulties in the school work in London, the chief being the want of corporate life in the great majority of the schools, separately or as a whole. He thought the proposal of Mr. Smyth to establish a Brotherly Provident Society was one calculated to knit together the members of our schools in a true sympathetic fellowship and Christian work. He approved of the proposed scheme of some kind of systematic teaching among the schools. He could not impose such a scheme on the schools, and would earnestly impress upon the teachers the real desirableness of re-discussing the question of some such definite plan, both of teaching and examination, as that referred to in the report.

The Rev. T. DUNKERLEY, in seconding the motion, thought that the world was now overdone with examinations, and he would keep them out of our Sunday Schools. But he was in favour of systematic teaching in the schools. He advocated a plan of lessons, so that every teacher should know exactly what lesson he is expected to teach on the following Sunday. In his own congregation they had succeeded in bringing the members of the congregation and the children of the school, as they grew up into connection with each other, in one religious home. An open discussion then followed, in which the Rev. R. Spears, Mrs. Barrow, and Professor Drummond took part.

Mr. F. ALLEN, superintendent of the Free Christian Church Sunday-school, Kentish-town, thought that the morning schools might be made almost as effective as the afternoon, and advocated the systematic visiting of parents. He had found great advantage in his own school in having at stated times an "Assembly Sunday," and had issued the following circular with this view:—

Feeling, as I do most strongly, that in Sunday-school work the teachers should have the hearty support and sympathy of the parents and friends of the children entrusted to their care from Sunday to Sunday, let me say how very glad I shall be of your help and co-operation in promoting a more regular attendance at our school on the Sunday; and, with this object in view, I intend having an "Assembly Sunday" four times a year, on which day I hope to have the pleasure of seeing all the scholars and teachers present, morning and afternoon, and in good time, namely, at a quarter to ten, and a quarter to three. I hope, and feel sure, that you will give me your cordial support in this matter, by seeing that your son William is present at our first "Assembly Sunday," on November 17th.

Mr. CORKRAN was not very anxious about systematic teaching, and was in favour of the teachers using stories that were saturated with true religion, (especially when used by highly trained teachers.)

The Rev. J. TAYLOR suggested that the Committee should consider the question raised by Mr. Smyth. He had great faith in these Brotherly Societies.

Mr. F. W. Turner moved, and the Rev. C. HOWE seconded, that Mr. Wade and Mr. Hirst Smyth be re-appointed visitors, which was carried by acclamation.

The CHAIRMAN, in acknowledging a cordial vote of thanks for his services, expressed his gratification at the earnest and helpful character of the meeting.

The proceedings closed and commenced with a hymn and prayer.

PENDLETON.—On Wednesday evening, the 20th inst., the Rev. Charles Wicksteed delivered a lucid discourse on "The Bible," in which he strikingly portrayed the wisdom of the attitude of the Unitarian body in the view taken with regard to it, and on Wednesday evening the Rev. Wm. Gaskell delivered a lecture on "The Holy Catholic Church," in the course of which he urged that men wanted a faith which would sustain us in trials; ennoble us in spirit and character, and be to us a source of unfailing blessing. There was a good attendance on each occasion.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

WALSALL UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

THE anniversary services of this congregation were held at the commencement of last week. At the service conducted by Mr. Geo. St. Clair, F.G.S. (minister of the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham), on Sunday night, the chapel was well filled. Mr. St. Clair's subject was: "Blind leaders of the blind." The attendance at the annual tea meeting, on Monday night, was not so large as last year, which may, perhaps, be accounted for by the unfortunate prevailing state of trade. But, notwithstanding this, what with the speeches, and the really good music which Mr. Anderson and his choir had carefully prepared for the occasion, a very enjoyable evening was obtained.

The Rev. Peter Dean presided, and, in opening, said he had to confess that he did not feel quite so full of hope that night as he did on the occasion of their last anniversary; for, just at that time they had been having several new additions to their numbers, which led some of them to feel that they had attained to the high road of congregational prosperity. The past twelve months had shown him, however, that congregational progress, like most other kinds, was as that of the tides—by ebbs and flows. One good test of improvement was the amount of money being raised by a congregation. With them that test was satisfactory, for, though last year was one of the best in this respect known there for a generation past, the first half of this year had shown £5 of an increase of income, and this notwithstanding the almost unexampled depression in trade. When he read in the Christian World and similar papers of the activity of the popular churches, he at times felt roused into a great desire for emulation of them, and almost regretted the difference in theological belief which prevented him from working with them. Churches were like riders of bicycles—if they did not go on they soon went off.

Addresses were subsequently delivered by the Revs. John Harrison, Henry Eachus, and others, after which the CHAIRMAN also spoke of the growing liberality of Trinitarians shown in Walsall. Notwithstanding the unfortunate controversial attitude he had been impelled to maintain here, he had received many acts of kindness and fellowship from the local Trinitarian ministers. He especially instanced the conduct of the late minister of Bridge-street Chapel, who, when he (the Chairman) was ill last winter, called upon him as if he had been a member of his own congregation. A musical programme was then gone through.

On Tuesday evening a service was conducted in the chapel by Mr. J. Allanson Picton, M.A., minister of St. Thomas's Congregational Chapel, Hackney, London. Taking the two texts—"Oh, that I knew where I might find Him," and "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I know it not," from Job and Genesis, Mr. Picton gave a learned and able discourse on the speculative religious difficulties of the present day.

We understand that this sermon is to be printed.

BIRMINGHAM.

CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH DOMESTIC MISSION (LAWRENCE STREET).

THE annual sermons of this mission were preached on Sunday, November 24th, by the Rev. Andrew Chalmers, of Cambridge. In the morning sermon special reference was made to the enterprising and enlightened manner in which the corporation and people of Birmingham are now attempting to improve the material and mental condition of the poorer classes, and it was shown how the mission aimed at supplementing this work by supplying that spiritual element which is indispensable for the highest well-being of a community.

The annual meeting of the subscribers and friends of the Church of the Messiah Mission (Lawrence-street) was held on Monday evening in the Congregational Room of the Church. Dr. Russell presided, and among those present were the Revs. H. W. Crosskey, J. Wilson, A. Chalmers, W. R. Smyth, Alderman Kenrick, Councillor R. Chamberlain, and Messrs. Timothy Kenrick, S. Greenway, W. Lowe, G. H. Kenrick, T. H. Russell, W. Simpson, A. W. Wills, H. New, jun., W. H. Lamb, J. Cadwallader, D. Heap, &c.

The CHAIRMAN, having referred to the important work the Mission was doing among the indigent of the town, read a letter expressive of warm and increasing interest in the Mission from Councillor R. F. Martineau.

In the unavoidable absence of Mr. Wills, Mr. RUSSELL read

THE THIRTY-FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT of the committee. It stated that the report of the minister for the year afforded ample evidence that, while the diffusion of education and the improvement in the dwellings of the poor were receiving the attention which their importance demanded from the Legislature and the municipal authorities, ample room was left for the agency of such institutions as those, whose comfort it was to afford encouragement and sympathy to the poor in their sufferings. The committee had to report with regret the death of Mr. Archibald Kenrick, and Mr. John Collyer. The day schools were inspected in January, and were favourably reported upon by the inspector. The amount of the grant received for the year was £157. 14s. The Sunday schools and other agencies by which the operations of the Mission were carried on were working well. The annual sermons were preached on Sunday by the Rev. Andrew Chalmers, of Cambridge, and the collections amounted to £67. 7s. 10½d. Deaths amongst the subscribers entailed the loss of many subscriptions, and it would be seen from the treasurer's account that there was a balance of £100 due to him. It was therefore absolutely necessary, if the operations were to be successfully carried out, that the Mission should receive an augmentation of its funds. The committee, therefore, solicited fresh subscriptions and donations. The balance-sheet showed that the expenditure of the year amounted to £720. 1s. 8d., leaving £100 owing to the treasurer.—The report of the Rev. John Wilson, the missionary, stated that the religious services had been well attended throughout the year. The Sunday school attendance had slightly increased; the average attendance for the year had been—in the morning, 317; in the afternoon, 335. A bronze medal had been awarded, the gift of Mr. Moore. The day schools had continued full. The children's dinners were supplied in the winter, mainly at the cost of Alderman Chamberlain, M.P. A series of lectures to women and girls was in course of delivery by Mrs. Bassett. The window gardening instituted by Mr. Councillor R. F. Martineau had been successful. A singing class, including about eighty members, met weekly, taught by Mr. Dobson, the teacher of singing for the Birmingham School Board. The Temperance and Band of Hope meetings had been held weekly; the latter were large. The Benevolent Society had continued its useful work. In the Savings Club £413. 18s. 11d. had been deposited, and £375. 14s. 9d. withdrawn during the year; the deposits numbered 7,221, and the withdrawals 715. In the Sunday School Club £113. 19s. had been saved, and £100. 2s. 1d. withdrawn.

Alderman KENRICK moved the adoption of the reports and balance-sheet.—Mr. TIMOTHY KENRICK pointed out that the excellent Board Schools which had been provided in the town rendered the day schools of the Mission unnecessary any longer, and he suggested that the committee should be instructed to consider whether the time had not come when the day schools should be closed. His suggestion was embodied in the resolution, which was seconded by Councillor CHAMBERLAIN, and carried.

On the motion of Mr. KENRICK, seconded by Mr. LOWE, thanks were voted to the preacher, Mr. Chalmers, who responded.—Confidence and sympathy were expressed in the minister on the motion of the Rev. H. W. CROSSKEY and Mr. GREENWAY. Mr. WILSON briefly acknowledged the vote.—Mr. G. H. KENRICK moved, and the Rev. W. R. SMYTH seconded, a vote of thanks to the Ladies' Committee and to the other voluntary workers.—The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

ON Saturday last the third annual conversazione of this Union was held in the Memorial Hall, Albert-square. In the unavoidable absence of the President (Rev. J. T. Marriott), Mr. Edwin Winsor occupied the chair, and in a very appropriate speech welcomed Mr. Darbyshire and Mr. Charles Hardman as representatives from the Bury Sunday School Union; also Mr. Jackson, from the North Cheshire Sunday School Union. Mr. Darbyshire, on behalf of the Bury Union, and Mr. Jackson, on behalf of the North Cheshire Union, delivered short addresses in reply.

The Rev. H. S. SOLLY, M.A., gave an excellent address on HOW TO RETAIN ELDER SCHOLARS AND CONNECT THEM WITH THE CONGREGATION.

He said that his subject was an old one, but his excuse for taking it might be found in a story told of Queen Elizabeth. Her Majesty once asked a favourite preacher to tell her what her principle faults were. The preacher did not quite like the task, but nevertheless faithfully replied that he feared she was not altogether free from vanity. "Indeed," said the Queen with a toss of her head, "well that is one fault. What is the next?" "Your Majesty," said the preacher, "will you please to try and cure that one first, and then I will tell you another." We had not cured this fault of our Sunday schools, or made much progress towards doing so. Twenty years ago about one sixth of the number of those who entered the school joined the congregation, and now the figures told very much the same tale. The encouraging side of the picture was that several large and wealthy congregations had been built up entirely out of the Sunday school, and were simply the result of the work which had been done for the last thirty or forty years. But even these had not retained half, often not a quarter, of their old scholars; their success was due mainly to perseverance through many years. Much of the experience they had gained might be summed up in the advice—"Set your elder scholars to work." If this led to the question, "But what if they won't work?" the answer was, "Find something at which they will work." In connection with a Sunday school you may have many useful agencies—a Band of Hope, a library, a savings bank, a clothing club, a sick and burial society, during the week, week-evening classes, lectures, and entertainments; for the summer a garden, a gymnasium, a cricket club, and so on. Let all these agencies be worked and managed by your teachers and elder scholars, with a few older friends to help. Let the young ones feel that the institution is their own, and will depend for its success on their energy and good judgment. Let them enjoy the pleasure and feel the responsibility of management. They had no chance of this at their daily work, so yoke their love of power to do service in God's vineyard. Of course endless difficulties would arise, and much additional trouble would be given to the elder friends who had to keep things straight, but the reward should be life and activity among the elder scholars, a willingness to work and to sacrifice time and money, instead of listless indifference and a selfish satisfaction in seeing others do all the labour and make all the sacrifice. But when something more than this was wanted; when all this had been tried without making the scholars into devout worshippers, the cause of the failure was just this—the teachers had not taught their scholars religion. To do this was to awaken in them a hunger and thirst after righteousness; to make them feel that life was a battle in which they needed all the help and strength they could get, and to show them how they might renew their strength by waiting upon the Lord. Scholars who had been taught this, and who had to earn their livelihood in any atmosphere of temptation and trial, would value religious worship as the greatest blessing of their lives. No doubt such teaching was difficult in proportion as it was glorious. What was asked of teachers was that they should do their best; that they should avail themselves of the publications, lectures, and other helps offered by the Association, and that with prayer and devotional reading they should earnestly endeavour to deepen the springs of their own spiritual nature, for to be a successful teacher of religion you must strive to make yourself religious.

Objects of interest, comprising an electrical apparatus, microscopes, stereoscopes, photographs, and a collection of models, &c., were kindly lent by Mrs. Winsor, Messrs. Alfred Tozer, William Leech, Armstrong Brothers, Henry Hyde, and George H. Hurst. Miss Salomonson presided at the pianoforte. During the evening an interesting programme was gone through, the vocalists being Mrs. Warren, Mrs. Archer, Misses Simister, E. O. Fletcher, Agnes Rawson, and E. H. Phillips; Messrs. Tattersall, Horner, and Archer. Readings were also given by Messrs. Winsor and Pimley. The conversation was a success throughout, over 250 persons being present. At the close, resolutions were passed thanking all those who had assisted in adding to the enjoyment of the evening; also to Mr. Edwin Winsor for his conduct in the chair.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

ACCRINGTON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—On Saturday, the 23rd inst., the first Conference of the Union for the Session 1878-9, was held in the Bank-street Chapel, Rawtenstall. Tea over Mr. Joseph Anderton took the chair, and, after a few remarks, introduced the Rev. Thos. Leyland who read a paper on "Children's Books," in which Mr. Leyland pointed out a great many of the books that are published for Sunday School teaching, and prize giving, as being not at all adapted to the wants of the scholars. He likewise enumerated a number of books which would be of very great benefit to our scholars both at school and at home. The paper was a most instructive one. Addresses were given by the Rev. H. Hill, Messrs. Anderton, Mills, Lancaster, Hartley, Bibby, Waddington, and Mackie, junr. A vote of thanks to Mr. Leyland and to the chairman brought a very pleasant meeting to a close.

BEDFORD.—Our minister, Mr. Rowland Hill, gave a public reading from the poets and humourists, in the large hall of the Bedford Rooms, on Thursday night, and the large and attentive audience which greeted him showed that he is extremely popular in the town. He was in excellent voice and loudly applauded for each selection; his brilliant recital of Schiller's "Battle" meeting with what one of our local papers calls an ovation. Among those present were the Mayor of Bedford, three ex-Mayors, the Vicar of the parish (Rev. E. R. Watts), the Vicar of Clapham (Rev. Canon Haddock), the Vicar of Elstow (Rev. J. Copner), the only family of Jews in the town, and the Roman Catholic priest (the Rev. Canon Warmall). This shewed not only respect for Mr. Hill personally, but also generous appreciation of his ability. The sixth anniversary tea and public meeting in connection with Mr. Hill's ministry at Bedford, took place on Tuesday evening, under the presidency of Mr. W. P. Manfield, of Northampton. The Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., of Nottingham, gave a brilliant address, and the greatest interest was manifested by this earnest congregation.

BRIDPORT.—The anniversary services were held on Sunday last, when sermons were preached, morning and evening, to large congregations, by the Rev. W. Carey Walters, minister of the Free Christian Church, Whitchurch (Salop). The rev. gentleman's discourses were powerful and eloquent, and were listened to with the closest attention. He feelingly alluded to the recent loss of two attached members of the congregation who had been open-handed subscribers to the funds. In the afternoon the children with some of their parents and friends again assembled in the chapel, and appropriate addresses were given. At all the services specially selected hymns were sung by the children, with the help of the choir. Arrangements have been made to supplement the Sunday work during the present winter by holding week evening classes for both boys and girls in those branches of instruction which are usually classed as secular.

BIRKENHEAD.—A soirée of the members and friends of this church was held in the Music Hall last Thursday evening, at which there was a large attendance, consisting mainly of the congregation, but including also a good number of outsiders. After tea and coffee, &c., the chair was taken by the Rev. William Binns, who explained the various institutions connected with the church, and drew special attention to the Shakspeare Literary Society recently formed. This society devotes one evening to the reading of a play and another to the critical study of the same play, and already numbers between 60 and 70 members. He dwelt further on the advantage of social gatherings as bringing all classes of society together, making them acquainted one with another, and teaching them their mutual interdependence. He also exhorted the people present to take an active interest in political and social questions, and to show by their earnest lives the value of the free religion that they professed. The Rev. C. J. Perry, B.A., made some interesting observations expressive of the hopes with which he was beginning his ministry at Hope-street Church, Liverpool. The Rev. R. Pilcher, B.A., made a number of pleasant and suggestive observations, bearing on personal character and practical work. The Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A., spoke on some of the scientific and philosophical aspects of the times in relation to theology, and pointed out the difficulty under which religious teachers now have to labour in their attempts to combine encouragements to a life of piety and service with perfect freedom and openness of mind. The Rev. C. Beard, B.A., was unable to be present. On the motion of Mr. Councillor Willmer, seconded by Mr. William Jevons, thanks were given to the ministerial guests and the friends who had assisted with music, and on the motion of Mr. Bancroft Cooke, thanks were also given to the chairman.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Rev. W. H. Channing, of London, preached here, morning and evening, on Sunday last; there being a large attendance at both services.

CREWKERNE.—The Rev. W. Robinson has been elected again a member of the School Board. He and two other Nonconformists head the poll. There appears to have been considerable change of opinion among the electors since the previous contest, when the Nonconformists were near the foot of the poll.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—Dr. R. Laird Collier preached last Sunday evening. The place was crowded. The special offertory amounted to £11. On Sunday evening, the 17th inst., the Rev. J. J. Wright delivered a lecture on "Mr. Gladstone" as one of the "Men worth knowing," whose examples Mr. Wright adduces in support of his exposition of First Principles in a previous course of addresses. A local paper gives a comprehensive abstract of the lecture, and states that many leading Liberals of the town were present.

LIVERPOOL: RENSCHAW-STREET CHAPEL SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—On Thursday evening last a musical, literary, and ventriloquial entertainment was given in the schoolroom to the scholars and parents of the Sunday and day schools. The chair was taken by J. T. Ellerbreck, Esq., who in a few remarks expressed the great pleasure it gave him in presiding over the first of these entertainments, several of which it is hoped will be given during the winter months. A capital and well-chosen programme was then proceeded with, the singing being undertaken by Miss Aumonier, Miss McLeod, Miss Leighton, Mr. Hugh Shimmmin, and several members of the Vocalist Union and elder Sunday scholars. The various songs and glees were interspersed with short readings by Miss Leighton and Mr. R. Robinson. The organist of the chapel, Mr. W. F. Brockbank, accompanied the various singers, and Mr. Stephens gave his valuable services as ventriloquist. Two violin solos were also rendered with much taste by Mr. J. Bernhoff. A cordial vote of thanks was, on the motion of Mr. T. Jones, Jun., seconded by Mr. Ashmead, accorded to the performers, and responded to by Mr. Shimmmin, and Mr. Geo. Eyre Evans (the superintendent of the Sunday schools, who referred to the very gratifying increase during the past year in the growth of the Sunday school, the regular attendance being nearly doubled; and to the increased interest manifested by the elder scholars towards their school and its various institutions. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman was carried by acclamation on the motion of Mr. Evans, seconded by Rev. H. W. Hawkes, the proceedings closing with the national anthem. The attendance numbered about 350.

SWANSEA: UNITARIAN ACTIVITY.—A correspondent writes to us:—Since I have had the privilege of knowing the church and the minister here, now about two years, I have reason to contemplate both congregation and minister in a most promising aspect. The Rev. J. E. Manning, M.A., the minister, is and has been very industrious and persevering with the Sunday school, and in delivering lectures on various subjects, historical and theological, which have been the means of attracting many intelligent men to hear him. On Sunday evening, Nov. 17, the first of a series of lectures was delivered to a very large audience, subject, "Reward and Punishment." Mr. Manning endeavoured to prove in an able manner that men, to a very great extent, receive their reward and punishment now in this life—the terror, guilt, and torment of conscience, which is the worst of enemies or the best of friends. If the doctrine of never-ending torment be true, then God is not the God of love. If the principle of Infinite Love be true, then the doctrine must be false. The lecturer throughout appealed in strong terms to the intellect, the reason, and the best feelings of humanity, and was listened to with profound earnestness.

SWINDON.—The Unitarian services at the Argyle Rooms, are meeting with increasing response. On Sunday evening there was a successful gathering of persons, evidently interested in the subject of the lecture, viz., "The Fundamental Points of Unitarian Belief," and many were doubtless in sympathy with the broad rationalistic and yet Christian position occupied by the lecturer, the Rev. H. Austin. He stated that the Unitarian belief in man claimed liberty for man's faculties in the province of theology and religion. They did not fear freedom, nor science. Neither a Darwin's nor a Tyndall's word made their religious faith quake. Freedom was man's birthright, making possible a continuous growth. However it could only be regarded as a means to an end—that end being man's development, man's well-being on earth and hereafter. They believed man was aided towards his destiny, his salvation, his deliverance from sin, by all the good, and especially by Jesus Christ, the holy and loving child of God and man. They were led to believe in the divine and universal brotherhood of man; and that this earth and this time was in God's hands. For him this was a grand and consolatory belief, the Gospel for the uplifting of the world. He earnestly invited all who sympathised to join in helping on this movement in Swindon.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

T. A. (Melbourne).—Received 8s. 8d.

AN EXPLANATION.

To the Editors.—The most inscrutable product of a civilisation more widespread than deep is the country newspaper reporter. To him I presume I am indebted for the representation of what I said at Taunton, which appears in your columns of last week. I make no complaint whatever that he has entirely omitted the whole body of my speech, but I wish he had stopped at "then addressed the meeting." It was foolish in me to allude to Prince Lucien Bonaparte at all; of course what I did say about him is not accurately reproduced. I trust, at any rate, that I did not transgress quite so grievously against common courtesy as the abrupt conclusion of my remarks, as reported, would indicate. Whether I did so or not an apology is due from me to him for unnecessarily referring to him. The slight intercourse I have had with him has been on his part so courteous, that I should grieve to appear on my part to sin against good manners towards him.—Yours truly,
Nottingham, R. A. ARMSTRONG.
Nov. 26th, 1878.

AN APPEAL.

To the Editors.—About this time last year I appealed to your readers on behalf of the Bosnian Relief Fund. I had not very many responses to my appeal, but yet a sufficient number to encourage me to make another now that my attention is again called to the matter by an earnest appeal for further help which has lately been made by the administrators of the fund, in the form of a small pamphlet, extracts from which I send you. I venture to offer the same suggestion as I did last year, namely, that each of your readers send me a shilling, with a post-card on which to send an acknowledgment of the same.

The circulation of your paper is such that even if no one sent more than a shilling (as several did, however, last year) I should yet have no mean sum to send to the fund. I can hardly expect that every one of your readers should send me something, because doubtless many of them have lately been called upon by others interested in the fund for which I am asking help; but those who have not been asked this year may be glad to give a little more than I suggest, so as to make up for refusals on the part of those who do not wish to give twice in the same year.

MARY J. GIBSON.
Mrs. Armstrong's, 64, Forest Road, Nottingham,
November 19th, 1878.

SCHOOLS FOR OUR CHILDREN.

To the Editors.—I am very glad to find, from correspondence which has appeared in your pages, that the attention of Unitarians is being turned to facts which plainly show us that, if we are to do our full duty to our young people, we must pay more heed than has been paid to the kind of religious teaching which they receive while at school, and that to neglect to teach them, or to place them where they may be taught such things as we hold to be true, is to leave them to be taught things which we believe to be contrary to truth, or, rather, to subject them to such teaching knowing that we are doing so. But it is said, What are we to do with our sons if we cannot find schools in which the religious teaching is such as we desire them to have? Demand such schools, we reply, and determine to support them, and make your determination known; and, as in other cases, the demand will ensure a supply. I have more than once, when speaking of this want of such schools, suggested Brighton as one place in which an attempt to establish one, if properly made, would be almost certainly followed by success. This conviction has been forced upon me during four years' residence in Brighton.

I am now authorised to state that there is every probability that such a school will be commenced in this town early in the ensuing year, to be conducted by an experienced and in every way competent master.

Advertisements will shortly appear in your own and other papers, in which all necessary information will be given.

Meanwhile, as application has frequently been made to me by parents requiring such a school for their sons, I shall be happy, if these gentlemen will write to me, to give them such information as I can respecting terms, &c., &c.—Respectfully yours,
Brighton, Nov. 19, 1878. T. R. DOBSON.

"What do you do for a living?" asked a farmer of a burly beggar who applied at his door for cold victuals and old clothes. "I don't do nothing much, but travel about," was the answer. "Are you good at travelling?" asked the farmer. "Yes," replied the beggar. "Then, let's see you travel," said the farmer.

INTO THE LIGHT.

"MOVE me into the light, mother,
For the day is closing fast,
And the sun and I together shall die;
This hour I feel is my last!

"Move me into the light, mother,
For the sun in its soft decline
Hath help and cheer, in its radiance clear,
For a heart that is weary as mine."

They opened the casement wide to the west;
The curtains were drawn away,
And the golden show of the vesper glow
Illumined the couch where she lay.

To the drooping eyes new lustre it lent;
It kissed her tresses fair,
And lit the wan face with glory and grace,
As she smiled in patience there.

"Remember this scene of light, mother,"
With faltering lip she said;
"The joy and pride of this crimson tide
That around us both is shed."

Into the light she hath passed, mother,
The light supernal and pure,
Where no shade of sin or grief enters in
To cloud her peace secure!

The day is done in the west, mother,
But her memory dear we'll keep
In that halo of love sent from above
To crown her last sweet sleep.

—Christian Register.

G. W. C.

COMING WEEK.

ARDWICK: WHITFIELD-STREET.—On Monday, parents' tea party.

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher-Williams, on "Jesus Christ."

HUDDERSFIELD.—On Sunday evening, at 6.30, musical service. On Wednesday, literary and musical evening.

HULL.—On Sunday evening, at 6.30, the Rev. J. M. Dixon will lecture on "An American's View of Religion in England."

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD CHURCH.—On Sunday evening Discourse by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams on "Charles Kingsley."

PENDLETON.—On Wednesday evening, lecture by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., on "Unitarianism a Positive Faith."

PLATT.—On Sunday, annual sermons, at 11 and 6.30, by the Rev. C. C. Coe.

STALYBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture, at 6.30, by the Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., on "Religious Influence."

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday, at 10.30 and 6.30, the Rev. Eli Fay will preach.

Births.

ASHTON.—On the 26th inst., at Dukinfield, the widow of the late Rev. Fredk. Ashton, M.A., of Glossop, of a son.

GLOYN.—On the 30th ult., at Longmont, Colorado, U.S.A., the wife of Chamisso Gloyd, of a son.

HARRISON.—On the 23rd inst., at 9, Torr-street, Everton, Liverpool, the wife of John Harrison, of a daughter.

HOUGH.—On the 24th inst., at 82, Greengate, Salford, the wife of Mr. William Hough, of a son.

Deaths.

FRANCIS.—On the 26th inst., in the 94th year of his age, John Francis, Esq., of Frederick-road, Edgbaston.

LOW.—On the 18th inst., at 104, Crumlin-place, Belfast, Elizabeth Low, relict of the late Archibald Low, and daughter of the late James Coffey, Belfast.

SCRIVEN.—On the 8th inst., at West-street, Crewkerne, William Scriven, aged 76 years.

Crown 8vo, 8opp, limp cloth. Price 1s. 6d.

MORNING PRAYERS in the HOUSEHOLD OF A BELIEVER in GOD. By F. W. NEWMAN. London: Trübner and Co., Ludgate Hill.

HARRIET MARTINEAU'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY. With Memorials by M. W. CHAPMAN. 3 vols. Illustrated with PORTRAITS and VIEWS. New and uncut, cloth extra, 12s. 6d.; published at £1. 12s. Only a few copies for sale at this price.—Apply to HENRY YOUNG, 12, South Castle-street, Liverpool.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION FUND LIBRARY.

Volumes for 1878. Three Volumes for 21s.

Just Published.

1. BAUR'S (F. C.) CHURCH HISTORY OF THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. Translated from the third German edition. Edited by the Rev. Allan Menzies. Volume I.

2. HAUSKATH'S HISTORY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT TIMES. Translated by the Rev. C. T. Poynting. Volume I. shortly.

3. EWALD'S COMMENTARY ON THE PROPHETS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. Translated by the Rev. J. Frederick Smith. Volume III. shortly.

New Subscribers may have the previous Volumes at subscribers' price, viz., 7s., instead of 10s. 6d. per volume.

KEIM'S LIFE OF JESUS OF NAZARA. Volume IV. is in the press, and will form the first volume for 1879.

* A list of the contents of the first five years may be had on application. 15 vols., 8vo, published at £7. 17s. 6d. to Subscribers for £5. 5s.

WILLIAMS and NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET SCHOOLS.

THE BRITANNIA BUILDING SOCIETY

MEETS on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in every Month at Lower Mosley-street Schools from 7.30 to 8.30. FIVE PER CENT INTEREST ON LOANS.

Shares may taken up and Loans Paid daily to HENRY PAULDEN, Secretary, 1, Cooper-street, Manchester.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street afore-said, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, November 29, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—919.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doing and Saying	439
Scottish Notes	439
American Notes	439
Books and Authors	437
What to Teach our Daughters	437
Baby	438
Theologians and their Beseating Sin	438
Reaction in India	438
Religion in Relation to Social Difficulties	439
Isaiah Eadon, of Middlesbrough	440
Fireside Readings—The Emperor's Error	440
Ministerial Clowns	441
News of our Churches	441
Correspondence	442

CHARGE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Ten lines and under 6d. a line.
After the first ten lines 5d. a line.
For 6 consecutive insertions, a reduction of 25 per cent.
" 13 " " " 50 per cent.
Half column £1. 6s. od.
For all insertions of "Births" or "Marriages" a uniform charge of 1s.

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC
will be ready on or about December 12th.—Orders should be sent to JOHN PHILLIPS, at once, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester.

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—The Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT will preach on Sunday next, Evening, "Our Daily Bread." At 7.45, Fellowship of Christ's Last Supper. All Seats Free. Offertory.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. E. PARRY, B.A., is Open to SUPPLY a VACANT PULPIT for a period of three months.—Address 28, Rue Sedaine, Paris.

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—WEEK EVENING LECTURES.—Each Lecture to begin at Eight o'clock.

Wednesday evening, Dec. 11th, Rev. WILLIAM BINNS on "Milton's Paradise Lost and Regained."
All Seats Free. The Offertory.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

On Sunday afternoon, December 15th, a SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS' EXPERIENCE MEETING will be held in the Lower Mosley-street Schoolroom. The Meeting will be opened by Mr. JOHN HEYS. Tea at 4: fourpence each. Chairman, Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT, President. Friends are invited.
24, Shakspeare-street, WM. H. MELLOR, Hon. Sec.
Ardwick.

FLOWERY FIELD CHURCH.

This New Church will be OPENED for Public Worship on Thursday, December 19th, 1878, at Three o'clock p.m.

At the OPENING SERVICE the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., will offer the Dedication Prayer; the Rev. H. E. DOWSON, B.A., and Rev. J. KERTAIN SMITH, will conduct the Devotional Service; and the Rev. CHAS. BEARD, B.A., will preach the SERMON.

At the close of the Afternoon Service TEA will be provided in the Schools, after which a SOIREE will be held, when THOMAS ASHTON, Esq., J.P., will preside. The following gentlemen will take part in the proceedings: Revs. Chas. Beard, B.A., Jas. Black, M.A., R. C. Dendy, H. E. Dowson, B.A., J. Kertain Smith, Harry Rawson, Esq., and others.

Songs and Glees will be given by the Church Choir. John Ogden, Esq., and Mr. James Broadbent, Junr., will preside at the Organ in the Afternoon, and the Piano in the Evening.

On the following Sundays the Opening Services will be continued. Morning at 10.45; evening at 6.30.—

December 22nd.—The Rev. T. R. ELLIOTT will conduct the Devotional Service, and the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., will preach, morning and evening.

December 29th.—The Rev. CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A., will preach, morning and evening.

On the Opening Day the Collection will be devoted to the Sustentation Fund, and, on the two following Sundays, to the ordinary expenses of the Church.

Price of ticket for Tea and Soirée, 1s. 6d. each.

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

On Tuesday evening, 17th December, 1878, HENRY HARWOOD, Esq., M.A., will read a Paper on "The Duty of Christian Churches in Times of General Depression." To be followed by discussion. The Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., will take the chair at 7 p.m. Tea will be provided from 6 to 7 at Sixpence each.
W. C. BOWIE, Hon. Sec.

Memorial Hall, 5th December, 1878.

DOB LANE NEW CHAPEL.

The Building Committee earnestly appeal for further assistance. The New Chapel must be opened free from debt, and our funds are still inadequate to the work in hand.

HALLIWELL THOMAS, Minister.
HARRY RAWSON, Trustee.
LUKE POLLITT, Treasurer.
JOHN F. ALLEN, Secretary, Oldham Road, Newton Heath.

The Committee thankfully acknowledge the following donations:—

R. N. Phillips, Esq., M.P. (2nd donation)	£ s. d.
H. R. Greg, Esq.	5 0 0
John Wood, Clayton Bridge	2 0 0
	2 2 0

WHITCHURCH FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

SALE of WORK, TEA MEETING, and PUBLIC MEETING, Tuesday, December 10th, 1878. Among others the Rev. J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., of London, and the Rev. JAMES BLACK, M.A., of Stockport, will attend and give Addresses. Chairman—JOSEPH LUPTON, Esq., J.P., of Leeds.

The Rev. W. Carey Walters begs to acknowledge with sincere thanks the following contributions received in aid of the Fund for the Reduction of the Church Debt:—

	£	s.	d.
Previously advertised	£76.	9s.	6d.
Liverpool Fellowship Fund	10	0	0
X. Y. L.	10	0	0
Alfred S. Bolton, J.P., Cheadle	3	0	0
Rev. J. E. Carpenter, M.A., London	0	10	0
Charles Brocklehurst, J.P., Mayor of Macclesfield	5	0	0
F. S. Bolton, Birmingham	2	2	0

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, BOLTON.

AN APPEAL.

The Committee of the above Church have entered into negotiations for the purchase of the Lark-street Temperance Hall. For this purpose, and for needful alterations, the sum of £900 will be required, and the Committee appeal to all friends of Free Religious Thought to aid them in the work they have undertaken. The Congregation from its commencement has been entirely self-supporting. The Sunday school is doing a good and useful work in a neighbourhood where a school is much needed. It was opened in August, 1873, when it commenced with 12 scholars; now it numbers 146.

Towards this sum the members have raised £300. The following persons have kindly consented to receive Subscriptions, which will be acknowledged through the columns of the Unitarian Herald:—

Mrs. Stephen Winkworth, Ravenswood, Heaton, Bolton.
J. P. Thomasson, Esq., Woodside, Heaton, Bolton.
Rev. H. Shean Solly, M.A., Padisham.
Mr. Bernard Dawson, The Laurels, Malvern Brink.
Mr. Herbert V. Mills, Theological Student, Memorial Hall, Albert Square, Manchester.

MISS ARDERN, Princess-street, Knutsford, wishes to find an ENGLISH GOVERNESS of some experience for her School: accomplishments not indispensable.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—For Prospectus apply to Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, Principal.

CROYDON.—School for Girls.—Miss Biddell, who has passed in honours the Cambridge and Kensington Examinations, receives Boarders: home comforts: terms 40 to 60 guineas.—2, Ailsa Villas, Wellesley Road., next Free Christian Church. Half-term commences November 4th.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL.

For Boys from ten to sixteen years of age: Junior Classes for children under ten years of age. Pupils are now working for the London Matriculation Examinations of June, 1879, and June, 1880. The arrangements of the School permit of some Girls being received with their brothers. The NEXT TERM begins on Wednesday, January 22nd, 1879.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE, Heath Brow, Hampstead, London, N.W.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.

Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., of the Universities of London and Heidelberg, assisted by Mr. G. H. HENSON, University of London, thoroughly prepares Boys for college, the local examinations, or for business. The school possesses an unusually complete provision of apparatus and specimens for the teaching of science. No means is neglected which the experience of fourteen years has shown to conduce to the progress and interest of pupils in their studies. Good cricket ground and playground.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties' Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

THE UNITARIAN MAGAZINE,

24pp. Monthly. Price Twopence. Single copies post-free for Twopence-halfpenny in stamps. Orders to be sent to Mr. R. STEWART, 13, Queen-street, Glasgow.

Now ready, 8pp. quarto, price 1s. 6d.,

MUSIC FOR THE FOURTH SERVICE.—DUTY—in PETER DEAN'S "PRAYERS AND MINISTRIES."—Post-free from the Adaptor, JAMES ANDERSON, 2, Sandwell-street, Walsall.

Just published, gopp., neat wrapper, Ninepence,

CITY LIFE: SEVEN LECTURES ON Business, Politics, Society, Recreation, Culture, Music, The Drama—delivered in the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, by Henry Woods Perris.—Johnson and Rawson, or (post-free) from the author.

Just published.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES for SUNDAY SCHOOLS. Edited by Rev. J. Cuckson. 8vo., 150 pages. 1s. 6d. each. 25 copies or more, 1s. each.
Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!" And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Pretty bindings. Price 9d.
Publishers: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., London.

* * * Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—

25 BOOKS FOR 12s. 6d.
If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News," for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

1879. { DIARIES, ALMANACKS, { 1879.
CHRISTMAS CARDS, best de signs.
and great variety. A large lot of SCRI-B-
BLING PAPER at 6d. per lb.
JOHNSON & RAWSON, 89, Market-street, Manchester.

THE HOME PAGE TRACTS. A BARGAIN.

TO BE SOLD, the whole STOCK of the HOME PAGE TRACTS heretofore kept in store at the Unitarian Herald Office, but now obliged to be disposed of owing to the removal of the Herald business. The "Home Page Tracts" are 236 in number (some of which, however, have been sold out.) Edited by Rev. Brooke Herford. The stock now remaining amounts, in all, to about 200,000 to 250,000; and at the wholesale price as supplied per thousand, they are worth upwards of £150. There has been a steady demand for them up to the present time. The whole will be sold for £30, the purchaser to arrange for removal and carriage.—Apply immediately to JOHN PHILLIPS, Unitaria Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester.

Hirst, Smyth, and Son, 137, Gower-street, London.

NEW PARLOUR DRAMA FOR CHRISTMAS.

Now ready, in cloth, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

THE PRINCE'S TRIUMPH: A Drama for Home Representation.

N.B.—New Books at 1d. in the shilling discount for cash, free by post. Parcels of £2 and upwards at 25 per cent discount.

Now ready. In small 8vo, pp. xvi.—240. Cloth, red edges. Price 2s. 6d. (to Congregations, 1s. 8d.)

A BOOK OF PRAYER: IN THIRTY ORDERS OF WORSHIP. With additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. Edited by R. CROMPTON JONES. Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

Now ready, Numerous illustrated, No. 36 of

YOUNG DAYS.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

Contents: Our Christmas Dress Party—A Misunderstanding—The Idle Life—Ida Mayhew—Christmas Again—What will you do with your Christmas Presents?—The Adventures of Whisky and Frisky—Santa Claus—Puzzle Bag—Holiday Whys and Wherefores.
Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.

Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tarif sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expansors for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any 'spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale.

We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to

24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester.

H. OGDEN & SON, MANUFACTURERS OF USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, } MANCHESTER.
MANUFACTORY—CORNBROOK, }

NEW WELLS, WAKEFIELD. ESTABLISHED 1772.

S. HOLDSWORTH & SONS, CABINET MAKERS, UPHOLSTERERS, AND GENERAL HOUSE FURNISHERS, ONE OF THE LARGEST STOCKS IN THE KINGDOM.

Terms—Net Cash. All Goods Delivered Carriage Free.

PAPERHANGINGS.

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE:

93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS PAINTERS VARNISHES, &c., &c.

DOING AND SAYING.

The Jesuits are preparing a great scheme for evangelising a portion of "The Dark Continent" discovered by Livingstone and Stanley.

A member of the Jewish community of Florence, who died a short time ago, has bequeathed the munificent sum of 1,200,000 francs for the construction of the new synagogue now being erected in that city.

Russia has the smallest proportionate number of children in elementary schools, about 150 per 10,000 inhabitants; the United States of America the largest, 2,180 for every 10,000 inhabitants; Great Britain and Ireland, 800 for every 10,000 inhabitants.

A memorial has been published on behalf of the Positivist Society, by Professor Beesly, which says: "As Positivists, we condemn our Indian Empire; on principle we therefore deprecate all extension of it as a repetition of the original crime, and making retirement more distant."

An official calendar recently published at Madras contains full particulars of the establishments connected with the Catholic Church in India, Ceylon, Burmah, and Siam, from which it appears that in 1877 there were 23 vicars apostolic, 21 bishops, 1,098 priests, 1,088,309 professing members of the various churches, besides 1,422 schools, containing between them 51,494 pupils.

Through the columns of the London press, Lords Shaftesbury, Ebury, and Kinnaird, Dean Stanley and other philanthropists, appeal to the charitable to enable them to carry on the present work of feeding some 8,000 poor children weekly with a good meat dinner, each child paying a sum not exceeding 1d. for its dinner. During the past year they gave in this way 141,085 such dinners, being 12,365 more than in the previous year.

The Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh has placed on record his opinion that the great reformers could not possibly have accepted the Prayer-Book as it is, and that if the Church Association (the Low Church organisation) would win other laurels than merely legal ones, it must exert itself to expose the effects of the 1662 alterations, which opened the way for the Sacerdotalism and the Ritualism now rampant, and of the "atrocious Act of Uniformity," which has inflicted such grievous injuries upon Protestant Churchmanship.

When Professor Monier Williams, in a recent number of the Contemporary Review, described the religion of the Mass of Hindus as "Simple Demonolatry"—probably every English reader accepted that statement as an unquestionable fact. We are corrected, however, by the following remarks of our contemporary the Brahmo Public Opinion:—"No doubt the lower classes of the Hindus are terribly afraid of demons, but does that justify the conclusion that their religion is 'demonolatry?' The learned professor is always original."

The Nonconformist says that in connection with "the forbidding reminiscences" of Prince Bismarck, just published by Dr. Busch, "there is something repulsive in testimony from such a source to the value of Evangelical religion. Without any wish to be uncharitable, it is difficult to conceive that a man whose whole policy is one of violent self-assertion, and who believes only in physical force, can have the faintest notion of the divine principles embodied in the doctrine of the Cross. When we hear such a man tracing his whole success to his religious belief, it is impossible to resist an impression that there is something rotten either in his profession or in the religion he professes."

The elaborate judgment in the Agar-Ellis case, delivered by the Court of Appeal, may well make a thoughtful woman shrink from the risk of marrying a husband of a different communion from her own. The suitor may give an absolute, unconditional, and unqualified promise that the children of such a marriage shall be educated in accordance with the religious opinions of the mother; but after marriage, the promise is simply void in law.

The father cannot be deprived of the right to educate his own children in accordance with his own views. If this is sound law, the wife, in the case of a mixed marriage, loses, as a matter of course, one of the privileges which she is likely to value most.

Liverpool has a modest but most efficient organisation called the Liverpool Council of Education. It has two main objects—first, to get a large average of children to the primary schools in regular and punctual attendance; and, secondly, to open up means by which scholars from these schools may receive higher education at superior institutions. In both of these chief undertakings it has been wonderfully successful. The attendance prizes even on a reduced scale to which the Council have resorted for economy's sake have far exceeded the means at their disposal, and the result on the numbers of children at school is immensely gratifying. Before the Liverpool School Board was constituted, only some 31,000 children were in attendance, and a large proportion of these very irregularly. When the Council of Education was established, in 1874, the number in attendance was only 39,133. It has since risen steadily, until this last October it was 53,457, and the regularity and punctuality of the attendance have improved quite in equal proportion. Not less encouraging, and still more surprising, has been the result of the scholarships. Not only have the boys who have passed by this means to schools of a higher grade justified their promotion, but by the general testimony of those best able to judge, several of them promise to confer high distinction on the superior schools to which they have been transferred. There is no visible limit either laterally or virtually to the good which such an organisation may do.

Dean Stanley, in acknowledging an address drawn up by the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, explained at some length how, some eight or ten years ago, the President of the Wesleyan Conference waited upon him, and in courteous terms asked that a monument might be admitted into Westminster Abbey to the memory of Charles Wesley, "the sweet psalmist of our English Israel," and he had then said, "And why not, John?" A monument to the memory of the two illustrious brothers was accordingly erected in the Poet's Corner of Westminster Abbey, close to a monument erected a century before to the memory of the poet Isaac Watts. Passing on to speak of the claims which the character and career of John Wesley had upon their reverence, and not on theirs only but on the whole of English Christendom, he admitted that in their claiming him as founder they enjoyed a peculiar privilege. "Among the various communions," he said, "which have from time to time broken off, or at least varied from the communion of the Church of England, the founder of the English Baptists is comparatively unknown; the founder of the English Congregationalists—I say it without a shadow of disrespect—is also comparatively unknown; the founder of the English Unitarians is comparatively obscure, and the founder of the Society of Friends, even George Fox, has been superseded in celebrity by William Penn, and by other illustrious Friends who have arisen in that society. But it is in no disrespect to the great Society of Methodists, and to the many eminent and revered persons who sit around me, that I say no one has arisen in the Methodist Society equal to their founder, John Wesley." Proceeding to consider in what particular John Wesley had attained his pre-eminence, he referred to him in the language of a modern English critic, who wrote: "He had a genius for godliness," and referring to his entreaties to his followers not to part from the mother Church, said there were possibly those in America who thought the Methodist might possibly be one of the links between the mother Church of England and those who were more or less astray from it, but upon this and whether a unification was at all likely to take place, he would pronounce no opinion; he knew that separations once made were very difficult to reconcile.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE SCOTTISH LIBERATION SOCIETY AND DISESTABLISHMENT.

THE annual conference of the friends of the Scottish Branch of the Liberation Society was held in Edinburgh—Mr. J. Dick Peddie presiding. The report of the Council referred to the organisation of local committees in connection with the Society in the most important towns of Scotland, to the electoral action of the Association, and to the attitude of the Nonconformist and Established Churches to the question of Disestablishment. On the motion of the chairman, who replied to Principal Pirie's attack on Voluntaryism, the report was adopted. Mr. Duncan M'Laren, M.P., who addressed the conference, deprecated any resolution by the Society which should pledge members to be disestablishers first and Liberals afterwards. Dr. Hutton, Paisley, afterwards took the opposite view, declaring that he could not vote for any candidates opposed to disestablishment, and that if a Tory got in he was not responsible, but only those who by mismanagement were ruining the Liberal party. Dr. Hutton and the Rev. Mr. Croom also replied to recent utterances on disestablishment by Principal Tulloch. Resolutions expressive of satisfaction at the progress of the cause and of determination to prosecute the enterprise were adopted, as also a proposal that the Council should prepare and publish practical suggestions indicating the legal measures to be adopted for the disestablishment and disendowment of the Church of Scotland.

AMERICAN NOTES.

A NEW MOVEMENT.

THE Christian Register reports a new movement which it justly regards as a sign in the firmament, adding—"we have long believed that the people were ripe and ready for such united action, and that only the ministers have been wanting in faith. Who knows but the time may come when good men of every name will join hands in doing the good things which they all want done?" The movement referred to is an Association of Universalists and Unitarians of Salem, Mass., and surrounding towns. Having met and discussed the question, "What have Universalists and Unitarians to say to other Christians, and what to all men, whether Christians or not?" they resolved to hold meetings every Sunday evening in one of the churches in Salem, and twice a month in each of the surrounding towns, in this way occupying each Universalist and Unitarian church once in a month. Three speakers, representing both sects, are to be prepared to speak on a given subject at each meeting, and the fifteen ministers who constitute the union will be engaged to speak in one of the churches every Sunday night. The first meeting of the kind was held in the First Church, Salem, on November 10th, when the church proved entirely inadequate for the crowd which came. The popular response shows that the sympathy of the people is wholly with this novel attempt at fellowship, and with the effort to obtain a wider publication of the truths held in common by the two denominations.

WHAT DEAN STANLEY DID.

THE Freeman's American correspondent writes that attentions to Dean Stanley were the order of the day wherever he went. In somewhat apocryphal anecdotes he figured as "my lord." His red ribbon of the order of the Bath was the subject of lively discussion, and how so great a man could be so little was a problem which the reporters loved to deal with, although they failed to solve it. His sermons have been apparently planned on a widening scale; until on All Saints' Day he actually managed to say a good word for all the five brothers of Christendom—the Eastern, Roman, Lutheran, Calvinistic, and English Churches. He concluded very pleasantly that it was "impossible for us to dispense with any Church." The Methodists gave the Dean a reception, in which he was honoured for putting up a monument to the Wesleys; at Union Seminary he dwelt much upon the great work of Dr. Edward Robinson, whose grave he afterwards visited; he dipped into science at Columbia College; he drove to the great fair now crowding the new Catholic cathedral on Fifth Avenue; then he appeared at the polling booths, and studied the pure and sweet methods of a New York election; and, in short, the Dean was equal to every occasion, and made himself seen and heard in all the strange latitudes of life and society in the country he had come to visit.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

Report of the Conferences on the Terms of Religious Communion, held in Leicester and London. Judd and Co., Doctor's Commons, London.

THE Report contains representative speeches delivered at the two conferences, and we can only wish that matter of such value had been presented in a better type. The committee who promote the movement are very desirous to obtain the names of as many as possible who are favourable to the cause pleaded in these addresses. The Report affords full information as to the nature of the movement. The committee have issued a circular with a view to ascertain to what extent the principle of open Religious Communion commends itself to the sympathy and approval of the religious public. No one is committed, in joining the association, to any opinion, positive or negative, except only an acceptance of the principle that Religious Communion is not dependent on agreement in Theological, Critical, or Historical opinions. Those who approve are asked to send their names to the secretary, the Rev. Joseph Wood, Leicester; and where it is convenient, an annual subscription, however small in amount, will be gladly received. Copies of the Report may be obtained of the secretary.

City Life: Seven Lectures. By Henry Woods Perris. Norwich: "Norfolk News" Office. London: Whitfield. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson.

MR. PERRIS has reprinted the lectures he recently delivered at the Octagon Chapel, on the subjects of Business, Politics, Society, Recreation, Culture, Music, and the Drama.

For freshness in style, grasp of thought, variety of illustration, and close application to the life of to-day, these lectures are far above the average. A single quotation will show what a solid wisdom also pervades them:—

Most earnestly would I endeavour to guard any ardent young man or woman who hears me against the dissipation of energy which follows surely in the wake of over-ambitious intellect. "Seekest thou great things for thyself? Seek them not," is, after all, the key-note of the noblest lives. There is a golden mean between emptiness and sated appetite. It is natural that you should want, like the student in Faust—

To know
Whatever man may learn below,
All that we contemplate on earth,
And all that in the heaven hath birth;
To roam through learning's wondrous maze,
And comprehend all Nature's ways—

But it is impossible. Art is long, and time short. Knowledge is, indeed, at once food, shelter, and unfailing companionship to the mind that grasps the secret of well-balanced activity. But the wasted lives of many who might have been easily and nobly great had they not wanted the concentration which a high moral purpose gives, may warn some of us away from the banks of selfish policy and shoals of feverish egotism that lie in our life-course, and test our wills to the utmost. There is a natural limit to our powers, and they are happy who have found out where it lies. We know not how far it may be possible to retrieve blunders and disasters in the future, but we do know that the past itself is beyond re-call. A chastened spirit divines mysteries that are hidden from the wise and prudent, and grows in the shadiest spot and the poorest soil; but to mere intellect, though it be clear and strong as that of Lucifer, the sublimest conquests are of necessity denied.

What is the Bible? By J. T. Sunderland. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1878.

THIS is the only book we know which presents in a clear, brief, popular way such a scientific, rational, reverent, and tender study of a great subject—the Bible. No literature is so generally read, and there is none about which denser clouds of ignorance gather, than that contained in the Bible. A knowledge of texts, isolated and often mistranslated, is considered learning enough for the people. Here is a book which aims to give a comprehensive idea of the Bible as a whole—whence, how, and under what circumstances it came into its present form, and what relation it bears to the sacred books of the world. Its four chapters are admirable statements of condensed thought and research contained in expensive volumes of French, German, Dutch, and English Biblical works. Pointed quotations from great authorities preface each chapter, and extensive foot-notes add to the information of the text. As many readers of the Herald may never see the book, a statement of its main points may be the most useful notice we can give.

Position.—The Bible is one of the six or eight sacred books of mankind. Like them it, too, has rolled out from the heart of nature. Like them it is quite natural in its creation, preservation, and translation. They all stand on the same level of humanity: the Bible's greater excellence is in its brighter light, its loftier sublimity, its more spiritual hope and trust. In this fundamental position its inspiration is measured, and the claim of infallibility is set aside.

Growth of Scriptures.—Long before a people have a literature there exist, in the national mind and heart, stories, legends about extraordinary persons and events, ballads, war songs, and hymns. As civilisation advances, and writing becomes common, written accounts of religious rites, moralities, and worship, are added. A great man appears on the scene, whose personality profoundly impresses his contemporaries, whose influence starts new movements; his written or remembered words, his acts, his life, are treasured in the memory at first, then written accounts appear. Here are the materials of Bibles.

How Bibles are formed.—A period of intellectual stagnation comes, the sources of original thought and creative genius are dried. Naturally at such a time the human mind turns to the hymns, stories, biographies, prophecies, prayers which use and time have made sacred. In the struggle for life which goes on among such things the fittest survive, the best are still repeated, sung, prayed. They gradually are formed into a collection, history can't tell exactly how or when, and thus the Canon is formed.

Authority.—By and by use, the priest, time, and reverence, which is so little discriminating, clothe the collected books with an authority which soon becomes unquestioning and infallible.

Results.—This view of infallibility blinds students to the faults of their Bible; and so casuistry is born, reading between the lines is necessary, twofold and manifold meanings are sought in the text. This infallible view can allow the Bible no rivals. It is the only word of God; all others are shams and superstitions. New theories and ideas have a hard time of it. First they are held to be directly contrary to the Word of God; then, as they grow in influence, they are seen to be in harmony with revealed truth; at last, when popularly received, they are represented as the clear teachings of divine revelation, known and believed from the beginning.

What is the Bible?—It is a collection of Jewish literature, consisting of sixty-six miscellaneous books; it is a varied literature, consisting of history, mythical and real; poetry, lyric, dramatic, epic, didactic; collections of laws and proverbs; expressions of faith, duty, and piety of great power and beauty. Old Testament literature covers a period of at least ten centuries; that of the New Testament possibly a century and a quarter. The authors represent most divergent states of mental ability, moral culture, and spiritual insight. The Bible is a representative collection of literature of the most religious people of antiquity.

Authorship.—As a rule the books of the Bible, their headings notwithstanding, are anonymous. Many of the books are, in this respect, of a composite nature, several hands being apparent in them: e.g., the Pentateuch, Isaiah, Psalms, Proverbs; each one has several authors. Many are mere compilations: e.g., the books of Kings, Chronicles, &c. The books of Job and Daniel are still riddles which the acutest criticism cannot unravel. The original Gospel is lost; advanced criticism acknowledges four only of Paul's epistles; the Fathers themselves doubted several of the remaining epistles. Fourteen books are missing entirely from the Old Testament; as many as sixty-eight from the New.

Is the Bible infallible?—Can such a collection of books, as their origin and growth are here represented, be infallible? Were the Hebrew language, the copyists, the translators, infallible? Can books, with a clear and interesting story of evolution in religious ideas touching God, duty, and immortality, be the entire and infallible word of God? No: there is

A Wiser View.—The Bible is like a mine of gold, inestimably rich, but still a mine. Quartz and earth in no small measure are mixed with the gold as in all mines; but there is also the true gold of God, more precious than we have yet fully found out, mixed plentifully with the dross. The part of rational men is, not to call the earth and quartz gold; not to throw away all, and declare there is no gold; but delving earnestly and deeply into the mine, to cast away without hesitation the baser material, and to treasure with glad appreciation and thankfulness the rich stores of what clearly is gold.

These are only a few points, briefly retold sometimes in the author's own words, of a very valuable popular book. Results of a wide and critical reading are clearly stated, though we miss what we did not expect to find in a popular book of this kind, an exposition of method. The reader who wishes to pursue the latter subject has the way mapped out for him in a useful and extensive list of books appended to the volume, many of them foreign works, but all translated into English. How different in orderly arrangement, easy flowing style, and spirited tone, are American books—of writers of even average ability—from the heavy, lumbering works of the British press. The book has been well received in America, and we doubt not, when the publisher and price are known, it will have a large and appreciative reading here.

WHAT TO TEACH OUR DAUGHTERS.

TEACH them self-reliance.

Teach them to make bread.

Teach them to make a shirt.

Teach them to foot up store bills.

Teach them not to wear false hair.

Teach them to wear thick, warm shoes.

Teach them how to wash and iron clothes,

Teach them how to make their own dresses.

Teach them to cook a good meal of victuals.

Teach them how to darn stockings and sew on buttons.

Teach them every-day dry, hard, practical common sense.

Teach them to say No, and mean it; or Yes, and stick to it.

Teach them to wear calico dresses and do it like queens.

Teach them that a good, rosy romp is worth fifty consumptives.

Teach them to regard the morals and not the money of their beaux.

Teach them all the mysteries of the kitchen, the dining-room, and the parlour.

Teach them not to have anything to do with intemperate and dissolute young men.

Teach them that the further one lives beyond his income the nearer he gets to the poor-house.

Rely upon it that upon your teaching depends in a great measure the weal or woe of their after lives.

Teach them that a good steady mechanic is worth a dozen loafers in broadcloth.

Teach them the accomplishments, music, painting, drawing, if you have time and money to do it with.

Teach them that God made them in His own image and no amount of tight lacing will improve the model.—New York Scholar's Journal.

B A B Y.

DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.

WHERE did you come from, baby dear?
Out of the everywhere into here.
Where did you get those eyes so blue?
Out of the sky as I came through.
What makes the light in them sparkle and spin?
Some of the starry spikes left in.
Where did you get that little tear?
I found it waiting when I got here.
What makes your forehead so smooth and high?
A soft hand stroked it as I went by.
What makes your cheek like a warm white rose?
I saw something better than any one knows.
Whence that three-cornered smile of bliss?
Three angels gave me at once a kiss.
Where did you get this pearly ear?
God spoke, and it came out to hear.
Where did you get those arms and hands?
Love made itself into bonds and bands.
Feet, whence did you come, you darling things?
From the same box as the cherubs' wings.
How did they all just come to be you?
God thought about me, and so I grew.
But how did you come to us, you dear?
God thought about you, and so I am here.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

THEOLOGIAN'S AND THEIR BESETTING SIN.

THAT the zeal of the Theologian has many times blinded him to considerations of simple morality, especially in the matter of truthfulness, has often enough been remarked, and history abounds with examples. But it is something to have a Bishop laying emphasis on the sad fact, as did the Bishop of Oxford the other day in replying to an address of three hundred former students of Cuddesdon—an address repudiating the imputation of disloyalty and unfaithfulness to the Church of England. His Lordship is reported to have said: "It would be an impertinence on my part if I were to assure you that I believe your word. English gentlemen are not accustomed to exchange such assurance, but it is the unhappy property of theological disputants [?disputations] to make men forgetful of the conditions which, in other relations of life, Christian gentlemen are wont to observe." After such remarks it is agreeable to know that in the present case the Bishop did find the language of the students believable, and was able to add that "these imputations on the teaching of the college proceed from persons who have had no opportunity of knowing what it is."

It is to be hoped, however, that a religious teacher and Church authority, possessed of so great influence and under such deep responsibility as a Bishop of the Church, will not permit words like the above to pass from his mouth and to meet the public ear without showing a serious resolution to deal with the evil to which he has so pointedly referred. It is not one to be trifled with. It was all very well for a downcast and poetical spirit to have said in its haste that all men are liars. But for a Bishop to say in his deliberation that those who contend for the truth once delivered to the Saints are more especially liars, must "give us pause" and might strike us dumb. We shall, however, take courage to ask: Why is it, Bishop, that Theologians are not as finely honourable as other gentlemen are? It has been said that slaves are notoriously given to falsehood; and we know that children tell fibs to escape the rod. Some have thought that in commerce men lapse into frauds through hasting to be rich, or in the very struggle for existence. Cynics have told us that the women are given to prevaricate because of their weakness. It cannot be that the defenders of the faith are either under bondage or a fear of penalties; that they seek worldly advancement or find themselves pressed in a struggle against rivals or adversaries; and none would charge them with the failings of effeminacy. But the melancholy fact is that, by their propensity to avoid the truth, they get mixed up with examples of that kind. And the least the Bishop can now do is to rescue them from so undignified an association by showing wherein the difference consists, and what it really is that moves the Theological tongue to utter the thing that is not.

REACTION IN INDIA.

REACTION is the order of the day. We mean reaction in the Conservative direction. A reaction the other way will come surely enough. Meanwhile it is significant to read in the Indian Mirror of a return of Young India, recently so enamoured by everything European, to the tastes and ways of its own country. This is visible, says the Mirror, in all departments of life and speculation:—Take for instance medicine. Among the educated classes there is a great demand for Kabirajes and Kabiraji medicine at the present moment. Ten years ago nothing but European medical treatment was in fashion, and the very name of a Sahib Doctor inspired confidence. The poor Kabiraj was almost dead and gone. But his trade is thriving again. Among the enlightened leaders of native society how many there are who have lost their faith in the European system of medicine which they once idolized, and have taken to the precious legacy of Charak as their only hope in cases where all other remedies fail. Turning to the general mode of living which now obtains among our educated elders, we find the same reactionary tendencies. The practice of daily anointing the head and body with fragrant oil extracted from flowers, which had almost gone out of fashion, is again finding favour among the higher classes, and though soap is occasionally used for cleansing purposes, oil is deemed indispensable for cooling the system. There was a time when a decided preference was shown for flannel shirts and tight trousers, but the old dhoti is winning back Anglicised renegades. Beef-eating propensities, so largely developed in Young Bengal and so irresistibly strong for a number of years, are gradually losing their force, and once more there is a cry for the simple vegetable dishes of our forefathers. Enlightened natives have been taught to use chairs, it is true, and have shown a love for drawing-room furniture. But they are already turning the tide of their affection to the old carpet spread over the baitakkhana floor. In religion, as in social life, we see the same re-awakening of national feelings. Everything that had the smell of Hinduism was at one time most repulsive to the English educated native, and he could not even bear the touch of a Hindu book or a Hindu institution. But now we find even amongst the most advanced men a sincere desire to cull great truths from oriental books, and conform to such Hindu usages as are pure. The Indian Mirror sees in this unexpected return to nationality, after extreme denationalisation, the inevitable action of a natural law. The native mind was too far strained by high pressure reform, and hence the rebound.

AFFIRMATIONS OF UNITARIANISM.*

REV. T. W. FRECKELTON.

THESE are, in brief, our great affirmations:—God in the universe: The soul in man: The possibility, and actuality, of intercourse between these two: The existence of a Moral Righteousness in the order of the universe: The Supremacy of Conscience as the law of the individual life of man, and the possibility of Immortality, justified into a bright and beckoning hope, and, at length, into a full assurance of faith in holy souls, who in the ripeness of experience and discipline have risen into perfect trust in God. I am not about to attempt now to prove the truth of all or any of these affirmations; what I shall do will be only to touch them with illustrative light, and to point out how they all arise out of Nature and Human Nature; seeking there their proofs and sanctions; and, that, assuming them, they are sufficient, not only for all the practical purposes of Religion, but for all its highest hopes, aspirations and consolations. I think, also, it is not difficult to show that they have a somewhat close logical connection with each other, and follow naturally in the order of thought.

The Affirmation of God is founded upon the necessary suggestiveness of the mysteries of the Universe, unfolded by the wonderful beauty, order, and manifold utilities of nature; which, the more they are understood, seem to us the more to reveal a Supreme Power, an underlying life, a universal authority and law, which in our poor speech can only be translated into terms of personality, mind, and will, as expressive of the motor-force of all things. And this suggestiveness is more than confirmed by the native instincts of the mind, which, cultured up to a certain point of self-consciousness, and reinforced by the reflective faculties, naturally seek some ground of causation, and find themselves unable to rest except in a conception of fundamental unity and permanence as the ground of all variety and change. But it does not follow that this affirmation of God shall seek for itself severe and logically defined forms. The very conception of God is one which perpetually escapes definition. No attempt to express it in terms of logic, however subtle, can be trusted for a moment to enclose all that God is, and shut out everything that He is not. Even our thought fails in trying to bound Him. Dr. MARTINEAU has truly and wisely said, that "to think that God is only what we can think Him to be, is little short of blasphemy;" and they neither understand us, nor quite realize what belief in God means, who lay down a series of defining terms, such as "Personal," "Almighty," "Omnipresent," "Omniscient," and the like, and, because we cannot accept them in their sense, charge us with not believing in God at all. To the best and holiest minds, the Supreme Power and Father of us all is felt rather as "a perpetual presence which cannot be put by,"—making the beauty, the sacredness, the sweetness, the joy of life,—than realized by the intellect, as something that can be bounded by thought, and expressed in creeds.

The Affirmation of Soul in Man seems to be a natural deduction from the history of the development and growth of the human race in the world. Without aiming at scientific precision, nothing can be more certain than that man is differentiated from all the forms of life we know by qualities that express differences of kind, much more than of mere degree, and which must have some ground of cause in human nature itself. But what we mean by Soul is more particularly a deduction from self-consciousness, which postulates a living will, and an inward creative power, which persist in being self-conscious, and in maintaining the sense of personal identity, through all the changes of growth and development, and all the mutations of life, which do not, like sleep and insanity, temporarily cloud the personality. Upon no other hypothesis than that involved in some idea of Soul, can man be at all understood; he is a riddle to himself; a mystery to others; an incongruity in nature; the most deceptive and delusive of all phenomena. But it is one thing thus unwaveringly to affirm the reality of Soul in man, and another to labour after mechanical definitions, and all inclusive descriptions of what Soul may be; landing oneself, at length, in the absurdity of defining simply by negations, and refining away the conception until nothing at all is left that the mind can grasp. It is none the less real because left undefined. A man does not cease to say, "I am," "I will," because he is unable to solve the mystery of existence, or to understand the marvel of the soul at once dependent and creative.

* From a sermon on Unitarianism versus Evangelicalism.

The possibility of intercourse between the Soul and God seems to be a natural consequence of the existence of these two, and the fact that the Soul realises God only upon the lines of its own inward activities; within the measures of its own thoughts; and by virtue of recognised analogies between the action of its own root-power of being and activity, and those which seem to reveal themselves in the powers of nature and the order of the universe. If the Soul is in these respects made in the image of God, however faintly, and is also the offspring of God, how shall the child not recognise its parent, and the father not hold communion with his child? The actuality of this intercourse is a matter of experience, but not entirely so; for if God be taken to be the innermost and all-penetrating life of things, then non-contact and non-communication is a self-contradictory hypothesis; but here experience is the clearest and the safest test. If in all ages and lands; in all churches and creeds; the truest, saintliest, most self-sacrificing, and heroic men and women have believed, upon the testimony of their own experience, that the pure in heart see their God, and that to all seeking and striving souls God is a presence nigh at hand and not afar off; and that they who rise superior to selfish passion and ignoble desire may hold communion with him face to face—who am I that I should say this is not so? nay! rather I add by experience to theirs and say, "this God is our God also;" "I called upon the LORD and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears; they looked unto him and were lightened, and their faces were not ashamed." In this matter we hold, moreover, that it is better to rest upon experience than to formulate theological, or to insist upon historical conditions of acceptance and communion with God. In this matter each soul stands alone. If it is conscious of such communion, a stranger may not intermeddle with its joy; if not, and it be yet a living soul, it alone knows its own bitterness of loneliness, and is not to be helped by the officious nostrums of a meddling theology which reduces by its mechanism the highest mysteries of the religious life to the level of the poorest common-place things.

Upon similar grounds, we affirm the supremacy of the human conscience in all matters of faith and duty; which follows necessarily, from the facts of possible intercourse between man and God, and the disciplinary nature of life. The first of these transcends all conceivable outward authorities and makes them impertinent; the second affords a sphere for the discipline of each soul by itself, the strength and guidance of which come from its personal contact with God; so that to each mind the divine light shines; the divine voice speaks; and each soul, alike in its seeking, its striving, and its trusting, is, as to the best and highest things, led by no less a hand than the hand of God.

Of our affirmation of Immortality, I only say now that, if these other things be true, they predicate immortality by the very extent and intensity of their truth. Without this, we could not but ask "Wherefore is it?" and say, even to God, "Why hast Thou made all men in vain?" Life would be but a prelude, leading to no drama of grand perfection; a porch, beautiful indeed, and inviting, but leading to no temple, but to a dreary tomb only, filled with the dust of death, the hopelessness of annihilation, the rayless darkness of oblivion. As to the form that this Immortality may take, we are without knowledge; and can only follow the suggestions of analogy and the projected lines of continuity. Indeed, as to the fact itself, one may, for oneself, believe with a most unhesitating faith, but one would hesitate to dogmatise; but this much may be said, there is nothing in the nature of things even to suggest its impossibility; and all things considered, there is surely more than enough to lift it to a very high degree of probability. I think that, assuming its truth, it is natural to expect that truth to be most certain and self-evident to those people who have most experience of the sublime heights and the intense concentration which the spiritual life reaches even here, in the souls that are most pure and true, and noble, in the lives that are most full of righteousness, and most capable of heroic self-surrender.

RELIGION IN RELATION TO SOCIAL DIFFICULTIES.*

THERE has been of late years a gradual change of opinion as to the proper scope and aim of religious work amongst the people. The Unitarian Churches, though often engaging in works of benevolence have, until recently, kept closely to the belief that their proper mission was that of "saving souls." They represented the present life as a dreary pilgrimage, and religious exercises and impressions as the price to be paid for admission to a better country. Their missionaries, on entering the homes of the poor, read a passage of holy writ, or repeated a prayer, as if this were a panacea for every ill. Religion was thus presented to the people not as God's best gift, but as a needful medicine for their soul's health. And the form and manner in which its message came made it almost appear as if man were made for religion, and not religion for man.

Our liberal churches have at least theoretically taken a more enlightened view of this matter. They have recognised that religion affects humanity in all its relations, and applies to time as well as to eternity. They have also remembered that the letter is not the spirit, and that the Bible and the creeds do not constitute religion. In consequence they have sought in their Christian work, to bring Christianity to bear as a pervading influence, or spiritual power, and not as a fixed system to be accepted or rejected at will. Their missionary enterprises have been designed to elevate the lower levels of society, rather than to pluck here and there a brand from the everlasting burning. And our ministers to the poor have been encouraged to engage in every form of activity that was clearly of a kind to advance the Kingdom of God.

As a further step in this direction, we have begun to acknowledge that religion must be allied with other influences in order to uplift society and inspire it with ideal hopes and aims. She must once more avail herself of the help of science, art, and philosophy, and even allow these at times to occupy the place where theology has lately reigned supreme. And in the present state of society those who bring her message of peace to the troubled multitudes around us, should be animated by the breath of a true patriotic feeling. This will act as a safeguard against a sectarian spirit, while in no way involving the severance of those ties which should bind together God's great family on earth. And what is this union of religion and patriotism but the blending together of the love of God and man? It is this combined influence that has worked so powerfully in the breasts of all the truest friends of humanity. This moved the heart of Christ when he wept over Jerusalem, bemoaning the wrongs he could not redress, and the coming doom which he was powerless to prevent. In this respect our free Christianity contrasts favourably with some other manifestations of the religious life. The Ultramontane and the mystic, for example, have no Fatherland. The one finds the converging point for his allegiance in the halls of the Vatican, the other, if consistent, allows no claims of nationality to break his immediate communion with God. We, on the contrary, in our religious efforts, have generally sought to make religion and patriotism go hand in hand. And this is especially needful at such a time as this when England is cast into sore trouble in her outward circumstances, as well as in her inner life.

Having now indicated in what directions the scope of our religious undertakings may be widened, and how Christian zeal may be strengthened by the love of country and of human progress, the question yet remains whether religion, with all these aids, can heal the social and spiritual maladies of the time? Can it infuse fresh hope or comfort, or a sense of higher aims and duties into those sunk in the slough of a practical or theoretical materialism? Can it act as a solvent on English secularism, or charm away the latent Communism of Belleville? Can it restrain the Nihilism of Russia, or counteract the Socialistic tendencies at work in Germany and America? These questions naturally suggest the inquiry to what extent false social conditions and corrupt forms of religion have given rise to these various movements. As far as concerns Continental countries, we have here simply the natural result of the repression of free speech, a free press, and free religious feeling. Misgovernment, oppression, or neglect, joined to the evil legacy of wrongs and falsehoods handed down from the past, will produce in any country a lava-flood of evil passions, such as threatened to lay Paris in ruins some eight years ago. And the active or passive opposition to religion which characterises all these movements is found, on close inspection, to be for the most part a hatred of Christianity as part of an oppressive aristocratic system. Religion stands over against them embodied, for the most part, in hostile ecclesiastical organisations, displaying little of the spirit of Him who was the friend of publicans and sinners. And consequently the cry has been raised that Christianity must be cleared away, not only as useless in itself, but as the foundation of a social fabric which is fated to destruction. There is no higher world than this, say a legion of writers and demagogues. There is no Kingdom of God either here or above, no power save a blind chance or an inflexible necessity, no spirit within us save what has been developed from matter, and no ideal hopes save those composed of the stuff that dreams are made of.

In that country where such assertions were most frequently and vehemently made a few years ago, there is now a cry for the revival of religion. And we most firmly believe that, could the material condition of the peoples of Europe be improved, and freer institutions and juster laws be secured, religion would again find a response in the breasts of thousands who seem for the present to have forgotten that they are of Christian blood. And, at all events, it would be more becoming the dignity of the German Government to try the efficacy of such a remedy, than to allow Bismarck to draw a cordon round Berlin, and try to stamp out Socialism like the cattle plague. Statesmen are too apt to forget that the want of moral elevation and spiritual vitality cannot be atoned for by external order, or even by material prosperity, and that no progress in literature or the arts, and far less the glare and glitter of a superficial civilisation can supply the place of these higher elements of a people's life. And it is also too frequently forgotten that revolutions do not change the characters of men, and that the re-arrangement of society will not always promote their higher welfare. All efforts for the elevation of humanity, in order to be successful, must be carried so as to ensure reform within as well as without. External reforms may accomplish much, but only the power of pure religion can prevent self love degenerating into selfishness, and raise men to the height of self-control, or secure them the unchanging happiness of the peace of God.

A witty prelate was asked if he did not think that such a one followed his conscience. "Yes," said his Grace, "I think he follows it as a man does a horse in a gig; he drives it first!"

Man's trust in the order of the universe is never more grandly proved than when he goes forth from some poor house, where the children have scanty bread, and carries the precious grain and scatters it on the ground.—P. H. Hamerton.

* This article is the substance of a speech delivered by the Rev. A. Chalmers at the annual meeting of the Church of the Messiah Mission, Birmingham, and forwarded to us by request.

Isaiah Eadon, of Middlesborough.

THE Middlesborough News contains an obituary notice, by Mr. C. Bell, of the late Isaiah Eadon, a member of the Middlesborough Unitarian Church—a working man who had devoted himself zealously to the re-establishment and reorganisation of that church. He died on Friday, the 22nd November. In the course of his warm-hearted in memoriam Mr. Bell says: Isaiah Eadon was one of the many sons of toil—a firm believer in the dignity of labour. He believed that

It was no curse which said to man
Labour thy lot shall be,
And with the sweat upon thy brow
Thy hand shall nourish thee.

With but scanty means and a slender education to begin with, he became not only a highly educated working man, but a genuine, sterling, energetic advocate of education for others, believing that education was the birthright of all, and that it was not

Foolish to imagine that it could be free as air,
'Common as the glorious sunshine to the child of want and care.

I have said that he was highly educated, and he was; not, however, in what are called the refinements of education; but in the cultivation of an originally vigorous intellect; in being a skilled and scientific workman; in the possession of large stores of information upon the main topics of the age; in an acquaintance with political economy, moral philosophy, scientific researches, and true Christian ethics, there were few his equals, even in the ranks of those who have possessed the best opportunities for mental culture. As a proof of the appreciation which his fellow-townsmen and fellow-workmen had of his mental qualities and his efforts in the cause of education, it may be mentioned that when the first School Board for Middlesborough was elected, he was one of its first members, and the name of Isaiah Eadon held an honourable position on the poll. It was not his lot to reach the allotted span of human life, for only 46 summers passed over his head; but, in the beautiful language of Festus—

Life is more than the quick round of blood;
It is a great spirit and a busy heart:
We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs, he most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

On this principle Isaiah Eadon lived a longer life than the many drones of society, though they die at double his age. This working man was well known as an ardent political reformer; he had a firm belief in the maxim of Bentham, "The greatest good for the greatest number," and he laboured hard to send the men to Parliament who would strive for the realisation of this ideal. He was a staunch Liberal or Radical in politics. He was a moral and social reformer, a promoter of peace, purity, and progress. As a friend his feelings were warm and ardent; as a husband and father he was firm, but faithful. As a citizen he discharged his duties zealously and truly. Finally, he was a religious reformer; he hated priestcraft as determinedly as he hated kingcraft and statecraft. He thought he saw much in theology that wanted reforming, remodelling, and adapting to the wants of the age, and he worked for this end. He thought he detected much superstition and ignorance, handed down from dark ages, and he did not spare them. But he was not a mere Iconoclast—he had strong religious sympathies, he felt and believed that the religious element was an instinct of our being. He had a supreme reverence for a wise and intelligent power as the governor of the Universe.

Above the pulpit in the old West-street Chapel, from which he many times both preached and lectured, was a motto which embodied his religious creed—"God our Father, Christ our Saviour, Heaven our Home." He looked upon God as the Great and Good Father, and upon man as a brother. He regarded Christ as the Teacher, the Exemplar, the Redeemer of his race; who, by his life and teachings, taught the grandest of truths, and by his sublime sacrifice sealed them with his blood. He was no bigot.

He worshipped God with inward zeal,
And served him in each deed,
He would not curse another's faith,
Nor have one martyr bleed.
Justice and Mercy formed his code;
He put his trust in Heaven;
His prayer was—"If the heart mean well
May all else be forgiven."

"To love God, to love man, to be good, to do good; to think God's thought which is Truth; to feel God's feeling which is Love—and to will God's will, which is the Eternal Right," was to his mind the very essence of religion. He had a firm belief that when this mortal race was run there was another and nobler sphere of action for those God-like powers of reason, conscience and affection with which we are endowed. Such was Isaiah Eadon. A true man; an earnest worker; a lover of truth; a friend of humanity, and an ardent reformer. He was human, and, like all of us, would doubtless have his weaknesses and failings, his foibles and follies; but to those acquainted with these, we say it is the part of charity to

Be to his faults a little blind,
But to his virtues ever kind.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

THE EMPEROR'S ERROR.

A HISTORICAL INCIDENT.

I.

IN the year 1807, there dwelt in an Italian village, one Mardochée Blum, with his wife, Rebecca, and his son, David. As in other Jewish families, the head attended to business, the son studied the Holy Writings, and the mother managed the household. Mardochée Blum was not remarkably rich, but he turned his capital to the utmost account by his industry and activity, and enjoyed such credit that he could warrantably undertake heavy enterprises, which he brought to a successful issue. Like his business rivals, he bought, sold and lent on real estate and solid securities, and did a little in bill discounting. Fair in trading, pleasant and kindly, he was generally liked and respected, or, at least, as much so as an Israelite could be in those days and in Alsatia, for a popular prejudice that all Jews were usurers was then of too old a growth to be easily uprooted.

David Blum was tall and handsome at his twentieth year, calm and thoughtful, but his cold and timid aspect concealed pure thoughts and noble feelings. He had not only studied the Rabbinical literature, but had also read a little in German and French history in musty chip-books left over from the sale of an émigré noble's library. He was therefore regarded as the bookworm of the place, and all the marriageable maidens envied his betrothed, Sarah, who was to bring him a substantial dowry.

The Blum family happily and contentedly were awaiting the wedding day, when all their joy was dissipated at the promulgation of an Imperial decree. This edict, an ineffaceable stain on Napoleon's reign for its intolerance, injustice, and disregard of the rights of man, ordered that from the 17th March, 1808, any French Jew on whom the lot of the conscription fell would have to serve as a soldier without the option of finding a substitute. Amongst further Draconian regulations, it was proclaimed that no Jew could obtain payment of any note, letter of change, promise of bond of another Frenchman unless there was proof that the holder had paid its full amount for it. Naturally, such a rule upset business in Alsatia, where trade, and mainly the financial portion, was carried on by the proscribed nation. But no victims were so hardly used as the Blums. The fatal lot of the draft fell on David. He was obliged to leave home with his mother's scalding tears on his cheek at the farewell kiss; the father of his betrothed, pressed to obtain money even at the cost of his heart, tremblingly told him that he must not expect Sarah to wait for the soldier's dubious return, and, indeed, he would soon hear of her union to another.

He had hardly joined his regiment before he received racking news; profiting by the decree, the debtors of Mardochée Blum had refused to pay him unless he proved he had paid over the full amount of the notes he had discounted, and as this was totally impossible, he was ruined from heel to crown in one day. But, still more dreadful, his credit was gone. Those to whom he owed money and were not of his race, claimed their scores, and, as he could not have met them even if he had not been bewildered, and as he could show no books from the secrecy which he felt bound to keep concerning his transactions with brethren abroad and at home, he was adjudicated a fraudulent bankrupt and sent to prison for two years. No one knew how deeply he suffered, for he made no moan, but his hair bleached, his eyes lost their light, and his profound distress betokened his speedy doom a week before he was found dead on the dungeon's fetid straw. Rebecca had borne all with religious resignation up to this, suppressing her tears when she paid him a visit, but over his body she burst into cries of desperation, threats and fits of rage which presaged the overturning of her wits. She was not long shut up in an asylum ere she was called to her husband's home on high.

The words of man cannot paint David's stupefaction at this fatal intelligence. He was in Spain then, ironbound by military service. His legitimate grief was allowed no free course. He would have lightly tossed aside his life to have defended his father and comforted his mother, but the regulations chained him to the colours, and he had not the poor consolation of piling a stone of memory on their graves. He exhaled his bitterness in hateful denunciation of the Emperor (and who knows but what they swelled a chorus of the sufferers which was not unheard of heaven?) and his eyes were aflame with the fury escaping from the craters of his broken heart. But he soon became dead to the life around him. He served exactly but mechanically; he marched equally heedless in battle as on parade. The cruel blight had swept away the leaves and the blossoms and the trunk remained impervious to the blast and the woodpecker Care.

One day when General Guilleminot was inspecting his division, he noticed the young soldier of lethargic air, and asked who he was of an officer, who answered, "One of those borderland Jews, not much of a soldier, leaden-livered and scant of pluck." Then did David's cheek flush with unwonted red, his hand flew to his sword, but the flush of animation vanished, and the orphan's pale face resumed its daily quietude. Ever after nothing in life ruffled his sleep.

Four years after he was in Russia, amidst the ruins of the Kremlin and in the furnace of Moscow, "fanned by the patriots of the land and their God,"

Before the blazing war
Of yon flames that shed afar
Their glorious light—thy star
Hath declined!

Napoleon may have paled, but the thousand dangers did not daunt the Alsatian soldier.

A day or two afterwards, the 24th of October, 1812, on the banks of the Lougas River, Kutusoff's pursuing forces so threatened an interception of the French line of retreat that General Guilleminot, who was in command, ordered a hundred grenadiers as a forlorn hope into a wayside church to hold it at all hazards. David was among the remains of two companies which volunteered. They loopholed the church and so stoutly defended it that their five volleys repulsed the foe and gave their commander time to rally and defeat the Russians, though but 18,000 to 50,000.

After this brilliant action, the General called the survivors before him to whom the success was owing. David was singled out as the most intrepid. "I am David Blum," said he, "the Jew from Alsace who was pointed out to you once in Spain as 'leaden-livered and lacking pluck!'"

"You are a brave man and shall be an officer." "Thank you general, but no grade for me, I fought to save my comrades from the Cosacks, but I would not wag my little finger to save your Emperor who has ruined, disgraced, and destroyed my beloved parents."—Translated from the French for the Jewish World.

MINISTERIAL CLOWN.

The qualities required to constitute a good minister and a successful clown, are so different that they are rarely found in a single individual. We have heard of a man who could preach on Sunday and dance negro jigs between meetings, to illustrate stories that he told in private, but such instances are so rare that persons possessed of such a combination of talent are quite phenomenal, and should be regarded with corresponding interest. As ministers generally are not well adapted to act the part of clown outside of the pulpit, it is not advisable for them to undertake it when in the pulpit, by relating stale jokes and silly stories, accompanied with such turns and quips as are bids for the applause of the ignorant. A quaint remark or a telling illustration may sometimes cause a smile or tear, but the earnest man who confines himself to preaching the word of God, will not be a success as a ministerial clown. The wondering multitude turn from him to find something more sensational than he can furnish in the home of prayer. The Christian man who devotes himself to sensationalism, will be likely to find at last that he has made a great mistake. Dignity and character are worth something. An Elijah alone on Mount Horeb has more power than Jezebel with all her truckling hordes of false prophets and deceivers; and so the man of God who is strong in integrity and uprightness, in sobriety and divine power, has something which the mere sensationalist may seek in vain to obtain. Christ's ambassadors are neither apes nor actors. They deal with mighty themes; they have to do with eternal interests. Silent as those giant forces of nature, the warmth, the sunshine and rain, by which in a brief space the world around us is transfigured, so Christ and his followers laboured in quiet and sowed the seed which fills the world with precious fruit.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

SWINTON: FAREWELL TEA PARTY.

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. WM. HARRISON.

ON Monday evening week a farewell tea party took place, at which there was a large attendance. This was followed by a meeting at which a presentation was made to the Rev. Wm. Harrison, who is leaving Swinton for Glossop. The chair was occupied by Mr. ERMON.

Mr. JAMES LONGWORTH, secretary to the presentation fund, read letters expressing regret that they would be prevented from attending the meeting from the Rev. J. Harwood, the Rev. H. F. Walker (Congregational minister), and Mr. Henry Lee, Morefield.

The CHAIRMAN then said they were all sorry to lose Mr. Harrison, but they wished him success. (Applause.) It was over ten years since he came there as a stranger, and he left them as a friend—he hoped as a life-long friend. All his work and aim had been to benefit them in a pecuniary and spiritual way. When he came they had a debt of many years standing. Through his work it was soon cleared off; a new organ replaced for the old one, and the chapel was beautified, and he left it in an excellent condition for his successor. (Applause.) He left a compact congregation, a committee working well together, and a well-attended Sunday school. He had passed the best years of his life with them, and his memory would remain so long as feeling and memory lasted. (Applause.)

Mr. JAS. LONGWORTH said since Mr. Harrison came to Swinton a great many changes had taken place. Those who were boys and girls had grown into men and women, and those who were young men and young women are now verging on to middle life; and alas, most of those who were old he has seen quietly put to rest in the little graveyard at the front. Many who were teachers and scholars in the Sunday school when he came had been joined together at his hands, and had now little families springing up around them. With such associations as those binding them together it would not have been natural if they had allowed Mr. Harrison to go from their midst without at least meeting together to say "good-bye, and thank you for the many happy hours we have spent in your company." Addressing Mr. Harrison, he said: And now, sir, as the humble representative of this congregation, who wish to impress upon you their great sense of your services rendered to this place, and also their recognition of your many virtues, I ask you to accept this beautiful timepiece and ornaments as a token of their esteem and affection. (Applause.)

The clock and ornaments were supplied by Mr. Peter Holland, of Swinton, the price being £20. A silver plate on the timepiece bore the following inscription:—"Presented to the Rev. William Harrison by the congregation of the Swinton Unitarian Free Church as a mark of their respect, and in acknowledgement of his faithful services as minister and friend for upwards of ten years. November 25th, 1878."

Mr. GEORGE DAWSON then proposed: "That the members of this church, in taking leave of the Rev. W. Harrison, desire to acknowledge that during his ministry of ten years and a half, his exertions to promote the interests of the congregation have been unceasing. That they hereby thank him for his successful efforts to pay off debts, to carry out various improvements, to make the services of their church attractive and edifying, and to promote the cause of Unitarian Christianity in Swinton. They assure him that they have a high regard for his character as a preacher, a pastor, and a gentleman; that long after his removal his loss will be lamented by those who have had the benefit of his sympathy in time of trouble and bereavement, and they wish him health, happiness, and success in his new sphere of labour." (Applause.)

Mr. JOHN THORLEY seconded.

Mr. HY. PEARSON, in supporting the resolution, said he hoped God would grant Mr. Harrison, Mrs. Harrison, and their family, health and strength in their new sphere of labour. (Applause.)

The resolution was then put and carried amidst applause.

Mr. BRADLEY said he felt a pleasure in presenting two books to Mr. Harrison from the Good Templars of Swinton and Pendlebury.

The Rev. W. HARRISON, in replying, said his connection with the church commenced ten years and seven months ago, and during that time he felt he had had a pleasant homely time of it. He had never looked upon himself, and perhaps it had been a disadvantage not to do so, as a paid servant of a congregation—he felt he was a kind of big brother amongst a lot of brothers and sisters, that he had had a good deal of his own way, that they had been very willing to listen to what he had to say, and he might say his connection with members of other denominations had been most friendly. He was exceedingly pleased at a few simple words which had come from members of the congregation through Mr. Longworth. He said on Sunday, and he said truly, that he was not leaving for the purpose of bettering his worldly prospects. It was true he was going to get a larger salary, but that was not his fault—it was not that which induced him to go. He thanked every one who had contributed towards the purchase of the timepiece and ornaments very much, and could only assure them that nothing could have been presented to him which he should have liked better. The present from the Good Templars he should value very much. He had met men in the Good Templar Lodge he had learned to respect. That lodge was composed principally of Methodists, and he had met them, but they had never had a jarring word which on theological matters. He heartily thanked all of them, and bade them good-bye, and hoped God would bless them, and that they might hear good accounts from one another. (Loud applause.)

Mr. John Dendy, jun., secretary of the Manchester District Unitarian Association, and Mr. Smith Golland each said a few words, and then the Rev. William Harrison proposed, and Mr. James Longworth seconded, a vote of thanks to the chairman. Mr. Ermon briefly replied, and the meeting was brought to a close by a hymn and a prayer.

YORK: OPENING OF THE KENRICK ROOMS.

A NEW Sunday School building which has been erected in Spen-lane, in connection with the Unitarian Chapel in St. Saviourgate, was opened on Monday by Mr. J. Lupton, of Leeds. The building, which is of a substantial character and will accommodate about 250 children, will cost, including the site, between £900 and £1,000, and of this sum £730 has been already subscribed, Mr. T. Hollings, Mr. E. Swaine, and the late Rev. John Kenrick, who was for many years associated with the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, being the principal subscribers. The building was first promoted by the Rev. Dr. Vance Smith. The room was very prettily decorated for the opening ceremony which was commenced with a public tea, to which about 150 sat down, and subsequently a public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. Lupton, and was well attended.

The CHAIRMAN, in declaring the school open, said the building was well worthy of the body which had erected it; and he hoped that the school would be productive of a large amount of good. It had been erected for the purpose of educating those who had no other means of being educated. The name which they had applied to it recalled to him the most lively recollections of the city of York and the history of the Unitarian body. They could not have given to it a more appropriate name than the Kenrick Rooms. (Applause.) The Rev. J. Kenrick was the friend of the city and of the body to which he belonged. Having referred to the liberality of the late Mr. Kenrick and Mr. Hollings, the chairman said the main object of the building was for a Sunday school, but it would be eminently useful to them for social and congregational gatherings. Alluding to the cost he said it had been erected on the most reasonable terms, and as there was only about £150 to be paid there was every prospect that the debt would glide away before Christmas. He should be happy to contribute his mite. (Applause.)

The Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE said the position of Unitarians was the most English of all denominations—of all religious bodies throughout the land. (Applause.) The Church of England was a great national Church, and had certainly much of the English life in it, but it had also got a great deal not at all from English life but partly from the old English Church before it, and partly from the Protestants of the Continent. He did not say that other Dissenters were un-English, but they had a great deal of foreign growth in them—Calvinism for instance; but Unitarianism had for the last 200 years grown as an English body with the national growth. If they were to compare their religion with that of other bodies, if they understood that to be their raison d'être, then it would be a failure. Was their object and vocation the same as that of other bodies—to gather as many as they possibly could into their churches, and by having popular preachers to attract the masses? He thought that was a total misunderstanding of their position, which was one of witnessing to the great truth of national growth. They did not seek merely to aggrandise themselves and to get men to their own chapels, but to take care that truth was their only interest. (Applause.)

Mr. GEO. LUCAS next gave some advice as to the management of the school.

The Rev. F. E. MILLSON congratulated the meeting in having obtained such suitable rooms, and said it was really a great step forward. He took it that the school was not intended merely for Sunday-school work, but for something which had assumed more importance than Sunday-school work—namely, social union, which was essential to congregational life.

The Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED, who was received with applause, alluded to the losses which the congregation had sustained by deaths and removals during the last three years; but yet, he said, the attendance at the services had not diminished. And more than that, they heard, on going about, of great sympathy being expressed in the most unexpected quarters. They did not want to achieve a great sectarian success; they rather prided themselves on the absence of any denominational or sectarian spirit. Yet it was pleasant to feel that a number of people sympathised with them. (Applause.)

Mr. Councillor E. T. WILKINSON, the Rev. DENDY AGATE, Scarborough, and the Rev. JOSEPH LEE, Barnard Castle, having addressed the meeting, Mr. George Bell, the treasurer, read the list of subscribers, and the proceedings were brought to a close.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Herbert V. Mills, of the Home Missionary Board, has accepted an invitation to the pulpit of the Free Christian Church, Bolton. His ministry will commence in July next. In the meantime he will preach occasionally.

ARDWICK.—On Monday last the annual parents' party was held, when there was a good attendance, and the Rev. Chas. T. Poynting, B.A., occupied the chair. Addresses were given by Messrs. John Reynolds, John Chadwick, and John Hey. The choir gave a number of glees, and the meeting closed with the usual votes of thanks.

BELFAST.—On Tuesday, November 19th, a service of sacred song, illustrative of "Christiana" (part second of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress), took place in York-street Nonsubscribing Church. There was a large attendance. The Rev. R. J. Orr, M.A., read the selections, and the choir of the church, under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Quinn, who presided at the harmonium, sang the various hymns and melodies in pleasing style.

CHOPPINGTON.—On Monday Nov. 25th, Mr. J. Robinson, of Newcastle, assisted by some friends, gave a magic lantern entertainment in the Unitarian Chapel, which was filled with a most appreciative audience. The proceeds were devoted to the Sunday school.

FLOWERY FIELD.—The Rev. J. Kertain Smith, who has hitherto held the position of Missionary of the East Cheshire Christian Union at Flowery Field, has received and accepted an invitation from the congregation to become their minister and occupy the pulpit of the beautiful new church which Mr. Thomas Ashton has built for them. We heartily congratulate the congregation and their pastor on a change in their relation to each other, which binds them more closely together and shows advancement in the position of our cause at Flowery Field.

HULME: DOMESTIC MISSION.—The Good Templar lodge having removed to other quarters, the teachers of this Sunday school resolved to establish in its place a Band of Hope. The first meeting was held on Tuesday evening, November 26th, when, notwithstanding the cold and foggy character of the weather, there were 82 present. The children were entertained by singing and short addresses. At the close 62 signed the pledge, and 36 paid their fortnightly penny subscription, which will entitle them to a free tea and entertainment at the end of the quarter. When one observed the scant clothing of many of these children, girls as well as boys, and remembered the severity of the weather, as well as the dreary homes from which many of them came, it was impossible not to feel what a blessed thing it was, altogether apart from the temperance question, to have gathered them into that warm, bright schoolroom, to listen to interesting stories, and join in singing joyous and elevating songs. The Rev. Jas. Harrop presided.

HULL: BOWL ALLEY LANE CHAPEL MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY.—On Wednesday evening, November 27th, a lecture was delivered to the members and friends of this society by the president, the Rev. J. M. Dixon. The subject was "George Dawson." The lecturer spoke of Mr. Dawson as a man, a preacher, a lecturer, a politician, a friend of education. In closing a very interesting, vivid, and discriminating lecture, Mr. Dixon said Mr. Dawson did his day's work in a manly way. And now he rests from his toil in the spirit land. On the occasion of his funeral sermon his church was not draped in black. It was adorned with ferns and flowers, part of nature's truth and beauty, honest kindred of the honest man. His mortal life was not a long one; but as years roll on and we recall the handsome, manly face, and the wholesome words of George Dawson, we shall feel that the master talker still lives in our midst. His voice of health mingles with and forms part of the moral music of the ages, nerving us to nobler deeds and winning us to purer lives.

KEIGHLEY.—The mission here has of late acquired new vigour, and since the visit of the Rev. G. Wooller, the attendance has largely increased. Last Sunday service was conducted by Mr. E. E. Prince, of Leeds, whose discourse was entitled "The Great Work to do, and the Little Man to do it." The Sunday school is also progressing, and through the exertions of Mr. Simpson, the secretary, a service of song is in preparation in Mill Hill Chapel.

KING'S LYNN.—On Friday evening last Mr. George Bridges, the secretary of the Sunday school, gave an interesting and amusing lecture to the scholars and friends assembled in the Foresters' Hall. His subject was "Wonder Land," and from the general attention given, and the repeated applause which followed his illustrations and experiments, will long be remembered by those whose privilege it was to be present as a pleasant hour's excursion into the ever-fascinating realms of ventriloquism, clairvoyance, and magic. The lecture was interspersed with recitations, songs, and music, rendered by the Misses Eglington, Gage, the school band, and others. At the close the Rev. Barnard Gisby proposed a vote of thanks to the lecturer, and to all who had contributed to the manifold enjoyment of the evening, which was carried unanimously. He remarked that it is a distinctive feature of the Faith which we profess that it is a religion of hope, and sweetness, and joy, and in this respect, perhaps more than any other, it strikingly differed from orthodoxy, which was in its ideas, conceptions, and effects, too often a religion of gloom and melancholy, if not despair. Our Faith taught us to believe that amusement, music, and laughter were good and ennobling things, and he thought everyone there would return to their homes the brighter and healthier for the pleasures enjoyed that evening. The entrance fees were appropriated to the Band fund of the school.

LEEDS.—The Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A., on Sunday evening, delivered the first of a series of discourses on "The Difficulties of Belief in God." There was a full congregation, the subject being the "Mystery of Evil."

LEICESTER: THE FOREIGN POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.—On Wednesday evening week a lecture was delivered in the Temperance Hall, under the auspices of the Liberal Association, by the Rev. J. Page Hopps, the subject being "A Review of the Foreign Policy of the Government and its consequences." Mr. Hopps's lecture was of an elaborate character, and was frequently cheered. A vote of thanks was accorded to him amid loud cheers.

LONGTON.—The Rev. J. C. Williams has just concluded a course of four lectures, on "The History of the New Testament," to large congregations, and additional interest has been excited in our services.

MANCHESTER: STRANGEWAYS.—On Thursday, the 28th ult., the annual parents and old scholars party was held in the schoolroom, on which occasion there was a large attendance. One old scholar was present who was made queen at the school fête held on the day of the coronation of Queen Victoria, June, 1838, and several were present who had been connected with the schools 20 or 30 years. The programme was a varied and interesting one, members of the congregation having cheerfully offered their assistance. One pleasing feature of the evening was the fact that many of the scholars took part in the proceedings. In the unavoidable absence of the Rev. J. T. Marriott, the chair was taken by Mr. Edwin Winsor, who gave the welcome to the parents and the old scholars, and addresses were also given by Mr. Parry, one of the superintendents, and Mr. Wigley, one of the teachers. During the intervals the young people, and some of the older ones as well, were highly amused by electric shocks given them from a battery belonging to and worked by Mr. W. Leach. The meeting was very successful, and it is hoped that the work of the school, and the interest of the parents and scholars, past and present, will be increased thereby.

MOUNTPOTTINGER.—On Wednesday, November 20th, a lecture was delivered in Mountpottinger Church, by the Rev. Dr. Chotzner, of Belfast, on "Heinrich Heine." The Rev. D. Thompson occupied the chair. The lecture was listened to with marked attention by a numerous audience, and, at its close, on the motion of Mr. William Spackman, seconded by Mr. James M'Williams, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Dr. Chotzner.

NEWRY.—On Thursday evening a literary and musical entertainment was given in the Needham Place Schoolroom. The spacious apartment was crowded. Neat and appropriate mottoes adorned the walls. The Rev. J. A. Crozier occupied the chair and opened the proceedings by a brief reference to the history and progress of the society. He said—It originated in March, 1877, beginning with some 20 or 30 members, and now, at the end of a year and eight months, well on to 200 members have been enrolled, with results of unmistakable good in the temperance cause. Our objects are threefold—first, to save from intemperance those who are already its victims, and secondly, to promote the growth of the principles and practice of temperance both in young and old. We would here spread our honey to catch and keep weak and silly flies, not to destroy them, but for their good. We seek to provide a better and healthier substitute for the enticement of strong drink and the attractions of the public-house. Here we offer a place where an evening—or with our band and choir practice meetings, two or three evenings if desired—may be weekly spent peacefully, pleasantly, and profitably, after which we guarantee that the sleep shall be sweet, no headache in the morning, no incapacity for remunerative work, and no racking sense of remorse. Then followed amusement. At the close a hymn, "Invocation," was sung by the choir, after which the band played some selections, concluding with "God save the Queen."

NOTTINGHAM: CANON FARRAR'S "LIFE OF CHRIST."—On Sunday evening, November 24th, the Rev. R. A. Armstrong delivered an eloquent discourse in the High Pavement Chapel, on Canon Farrar's "Life of Christ." The discourse is given at length in the Nottingham Daily Express, and we hope to make some citations from it in an early number.

OVER DARWEN.—Mrs. Osler has once more organised a series of cookery lectures, which are being given in the Co-operative Hall. His Worship the Mayor of Darwen took the chair at the first of the series, which was held on Monday, the 25th November. The second, which was held last Monday, was presided over by C. Shorrocks, Esq., and at the third of the series the chair will be taken by W. T. Ashton, Esq. The lectures are being given by Miss Clewis, of the Manchester School of Cookery, who is a pleasing lecturer. The interest in these lectures appears to be increasing; the number present at the last was about 120. It is hoped that the present effort may lead to the establishment of a regular school of cookery in the town.

PENDLETON.—On Tuesday evening a concert and entertainment was given by the Sunday school teachers and others to a good audience. The proceeds are to be devoted to the School Building Fund. On Wednesday a lecture was given in the church by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., on "Unitarianism, a Positive Faith."

READING.—A paper on "Disestablishment and Disendowment" was read before the Redlands Literary and Scientific Society, last week, by Mr. T. Reed, hon. sec. of the Unitarian Free Church.

RAWTENSTALL.—On Thursday evening last the Rev. F. B. Jones, B.A., of Oldham, gave to the teachers and friends of the school a most useful and instructive lecture on "Lessons in Religion," based on the lessons given in the Teachers' Notes. The Rev. A. Lazenby and several friends from Newchurch joined the teachers. There was an audience of forty-five. The Rev. H. Hill, minister, occupied the chair. Votes of thanks to lecturer concluded an interesting and helpful meeting.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION FOR NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.—A movement having been set on foot in the North for the organisation of a Sunday-school Association for Northumberland and Durham, a committee has been appointed, consisting of the Revs. Alfred Payne, of Newcastle, and R. C. Smith, of South Shields, together with representatives from Sunderland, Choppington, &c., the result of which is that an Association, to be called the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Sunday-school Association, has been formed, the first meeting of which is to be held at Newcastle in January, 1879, when a paper will be read by the Rev. Alfred Payne.

TODMORDEN.—Last Saturday afternoon, about 200 of the teachers, scholars, and friends connected with the Unitarian Sunday school sat down to an excellent tea. Afterwards a meeting was held, presided over by the Rev. L. Taplin, M.A. Addresses were given by Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., and Mr. John Heys, deputation from the Sunday School Association, and the Rev. E. W. Hopkinson, of Accrington. The bell ringers were in attendance with their peal of bells numbering over 70, on which they gave a selection of music. The choir also enlivened the proceedings with a number of glees and part-songs. A very pleasant evening was spent, and the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the speakers, chairman, singers, trayholders, &c.

WAKEFIELD.—The annual services in aid of the Sunday school in connection with the Westgate Congregation have been held during the week. On Sunday, two sermons were preached by the Rev. J. T. Marriott, of Manchester. In the morning Mr. Marriott selected for his text, Luke ix. 25—8, "Who is my neighbour?" In the evening the portion of scripture selected was from the Psalm—"Out of the Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."—On Monday evening, a tea meeting took place in the schoolroom, when nearly 100 persons sat down to tea, which was presided at by Mrs. Bamby, Miss Clarkson, Miss Conway, Miss Everett, Miss Walsh, and Miss Hinchcliffe. Among the company were several ministers from other towns, but others who had been expected were unfortunately unable to be present. After tea, the proceedings took the form of a conversation or musical re-union, chess, draughts, and other games being indulged in, interspersed with short addresses. The Rev. Goodwyn Bamby, the pastor, presided, and briefly welcomed the friends present. He then called upon Mr. Backshell, of New Wells, who proposed, and Mr. T. W. Marriott, of Sandal, Grange, seconded, a vote of thanks to the Rev. J. T. Marriott, for his sermons on Sunday. The Rev. Mr. Marriott responded. The Rev. D. Scott, of Dewsbury, bore testimony to the pleasant intercourse which had always subsisted between the daughter church of Dewsbury, and the mother church of Wakefield. He hoped that intercourse would continue. The Rev. J. Thomas, of Huddersfield, addressed a few words to the meeting, in which he commented on the success that he had found at his own church attendant upon the establishment of a musical service. Crowds were attracted thereby, and he recommended the fact to the consideration of other churches. The remainder of the evening was most pleasantly spent in singing and games, and in inspecting the various objects of interest provided for the visitors' delectation.

A Washington paper tells an amusing story of a Protestant clergyman who, on his first visit to the capital of United States, endeavoured to enter the Senate House. He was stopped by an official, who demanded whether he was privileged to enter, by being either a governor, an ex-member of Congress, by a foreign minister. "I am a minister," replied the clergyman. "Of what Court and country?" demanded the janitor. "Of Heaven," was the reply. "Our Government entertain no relations whatever with that country," drily observed the doorkeeper.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

SCHOOLS FOR OUR CHILDREN.

To the Editors.—It was with feelings of mingled amusement and surprise that I read, in your paper last week, Mr. Dobson's letter on this subject. Whilst concurring with him in the views he expresses as to the importance of religious teaching, it does seem strange to me that, feeling the interest he professes in the matter, Mr. Dobson yet appears to be unaware that for some twelve months and more Mr. Briggs and myself have been endeavouring to establish just such a school as he assumes to be much wanted, but not to exist in the south of England. I have yet to learn that Hastings is not in the south of England, or that it is, in any respect, a less suitable place for such a school than Brighton. True it is we have not the advantage of Mr. Dobson's recommendation; but it will, at all events, be only just if those parents desiring such a school as Mr. Dobson mentions, for their sons, will write for information and references to Mr. Briggs or myself as well as to Brighton. Allow me too, one word of personal explanation. As some of your readers will know, I have been educated at Manchester New College for the Unitarian ministry. Though circumstances necessitate my residing at Hastings, I have not therefore neglected the object of my training in London. It is partly owing to my constant assistance that Mr. Briggs is enabled, in the face of many adverse circumstances, to keep open three Unitarian places of worship in this neighbourhood, viz., Hastings with two services, Battle with one, and Northiam with a fortnightly service.—Believe me, respectfully yours,

Anderida House,

PHILIP VANCESMITH.

St. Leonards-on-Sea.

BOOKS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

A correspondent writes that at this time of the year our Sunday-school Prize Committees are buying books for boys and girls of all ages. As many such Committees merely go to the wholesale booksellers and select there and then from the stocks before them, it is thought to be very desirable that those teachers and others who know from personal of certain books which can be particularly recommended for certain ages, dispositions, mental capacities, &c., should give such information for the benefit of others. This would save time, and avoid many disappointments and unhappy disposals, and would ensure a much wiser and more satisfactory distribution.

THE BOSNIAN APPEAL.—As supplementary to Miss Gibson's appeal, inserted last week, we give the following extracts from a report sent to us issued by the Orphan Relief Fund Committee. They say: "We hoped last spring that the fugitives would have been able to return to their native land, rebuild their ruined homes, and till their deserted fields. But spring and summer are gone, autumn is passing away, and we hear from both sides of the frontier, from private and official sources, that it is improbable that peace and order can be so far established in Bosnia as that the fugitives may be able to go home before another spring. How are these people to live through a fourth winter of exile?" And towards the close of the report we find the following: "We entreat further funds for the support of the schools, and for the purchase of corn, clothing, and blankets, to save human life. The need, alas! would be equally great even if the fugitives should be able to return at this season of the year to their bare and wasted lands, for the houses and villages have been destroyed during three years of civil war, and no crops can be reaped till next autumn. May we hope that some of those who have so generously helped will help again, and enlist new helpers?"

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET SCHOOLS.

THE BRITANNIA BUILDING SOCIETY

MEETS on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in every Month at Lower Mosley-street Schools from 7.30 to 8.30. FIVE PER CENT INTEREST ON LOANS.

Shares may taken up and Loans Paid daily to HENRY PAULDEN, Secretary, 1, Cooper-street, Manchester.

COMING WEEK.

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, on "The Story of Adam's Fall."

PENDLETON.—On Wednesday evening, lecture by the Rev. William Binns, on "Milton's Paradise Lost and Regained."

STALYBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture, at 6.30, by the Rev. J. G. Slater, on "Success."

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday, at 10.30 and 6.30, the Rev. J. T. Marriott will preach.

WHITCHURCH.—On Tuesday, effort to clear off the debt, sale of work, tea, and public meeting.

Deaths.

REED.—On the 28th ult., at Hampstead Lodge, Marlborough Hill, N.W., Eliza, the dearly-loved wife of Thomas Reed, aged 55 years.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 3, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, December 6, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—920.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Doing and Saying	444
Scottish Notes	444
American Notes	444
Books and Authors	444
Our Sunday Schools	445
A Secular Chapter	445
The Old Pastor's Dismissal	446
Duty of Churches in Times of Depression	446
Progress	446
True Worship	446
Mr. Macrae Moves Again	446
The Contemporary Review on the Gaskell Commemoration Meeting	447
Canon Farrar's Life of Christ	447
The Devotional Service	448
Fireside Readings—Hope on, Hope Ever	448
The Emperor's Error	449
Eloquent Silence	449
King's Lynn: Presentation to Mr. John Wingate Aikin	449
Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and the neighbouring Counties	446
News of our Churches	450

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC will be ready on December the 20th.—Orders should be sent to JOHN PHILLIPS, at once, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. E. PARRY, B.A., is Open to SUPPLY a VACANT PULPIT for a period of three months.—Address 28, Rue Sedaine, Paris.

MINISTRY TO THE POOR.

The ANNUAL COLLECTIONS in aid of the MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION will be made on Sunday, the 15th inst., after Sermons, in Cross-street Chapel (10.30), by the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., and (6.30) by the Rev. H. E. DOWSON, B.A.; and at Platt (11) by the Rev. C. T. POYNTING, B.A.

Donations have not come in during this year as usual. The Committee earnestly entreat friends of simple ministry at large amongst the poor and helpless, the sick and sinful, to supply them with Donations and Annual Subscriptions.

The Mission is characteristically Christian and unsectarian. It is not an almsgiving institution, but during many years of quiet labour has devoted itself to acquiring a large experience and a considerable personal acquaintance amongst our poor "neighbours." This winter, however, it is quite impossible for the Missionaries not to feel obliged to give food, and clothing, and firing, to relieve the terrible needs of those whom they visit.

The Committee have made arrangements for a regular and increasing distribution of good stores and cooked food, clothes, and materials.

It is a principle of the Society to discourage indiscriminate alms. While they know no distinction between "neighbours" who are in want, they endeavour to give such gifts only where and in such a manner that they may afford really healthy relief and help to body and mind.

For this special effort the Committee earnestly beg for immediate subscriptions.

Money, or clothing, or materials, or orders on shops for such things, may be sent to any of the undersigned.

During the illness of Rev. S. A. Stenhal, the Secretary, to Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE, Treasurer, 26, George-street, Manchester; or to

Rev. J. HARROP, 3, Poynton-street, Greenhill-street, Greenheys; or to

Rev. B. WALKER, 3, Franklin-street, Rochdale Road.

DISTRESS FUND.—ALREADY PROMISED.
	£ s. d.
The Mayor's Charity	40 0 0
Friend	10 0 0
J. W.	10 0 0
Friend	5 0 0
Friend	5 0 0
Miss B.	5 0 0
Mr. Schwabe	5 0 0
L. T.	5 0 0

FLOWERY FIELD CHURCH.

This New Church will be OPENED for Public Worship on Thursday, December 19th, 1878, at Three o'clock p.m.

At the OPENING SERVICE the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., will offer the Dedication Prayer; the Rev. H. E. DOWSON, B.A., and Rev. J. KERTAIN SMITH, will conduct the Devotional Service; and the Rev. CHAS. BEARD, B.A., will preach the SERMON.

At the close of the Afternoon Service TEA will be provided in the Schools, after which a MEETING will be held, when THOS. ASHTON, Esq., will preside. The following gentlemen will take part in the proceedings: Revs. Chas. Beard, B.A., Jas. Black, M.A., R. C. Dendy, H. E. Dowson, B.A., J. Kertain Smith, Harry Rawson, Esq., and others.

Songs and Glees will be given by the Church Choir. John Ogden, Esq., and Mr. James Broadbent, Junr., will preside at the Organ in the Afternoon, and the Piano in the Evening.

On the following Sundays the Opening Services will be continued. Morning at 10.45; evening at 6.30:—

December 22nd.—The Rev. T. R. ELLIOTT will conduct the Devotional Service, and the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., will preach, morning and evening.

December 29th.—The Rev. CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A., will preach, morning and evening.

On the Opening Day the Collection will be devoted to the Sustentation Fund, and, on the two following Sundays, to the ordinary expenses of the Church.

Price of ticket for Tea and Meeting, 1s. 6d. each.

Friends coming from Manchester to the Opening will find convenient trains from London Road Station at 1.50 and 2.20 p.m.; and a SPECIAL RETURN TRAIN to Manchester will leave Hyde Station at 9.53 p.m.

BLACKPOOL: UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

A CHRISTMAS TREE on Wednesday, December 18th. Tea at Five o'clock. Tickets, One Shilling.

YORK: SAINT SAVIOURGATE CHAPEL.

A BAZAAR, in aid of the School Building Fund, will be held in the Kenrick Rooms, Spen Lane, on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 17th and 18th December.

A great variety of Useful and Ornamental Articles, specially adapted for Christmas presents, will be offered for sale at moderate prices.

The Phonograph, or talking machine, will be exhibited. Music and other entertainments.

Admission 6d., which will be returned in goods.

Doors open each day from 3 to 9.30 p.m.

THE CROSS STREET CHAPEL CHORAL SOCIETY.

will give their FIRST CONCERT, in aid of the Piano Fund, in the Memorial Hall, on Wednesday next, Dec. 18th, at 7.30 p.m. Tickets, 1s. 6d., 1s., and 6d., may be obtained from Messrs. Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; Messrs. J. F. Jones and Co., 44, Corporation-street; Mr. Vickers, Cross-street Chapel; Mr. T. P. Jones, Memorial Hall; or from any member of the Society.

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

On Tuesday evening, 17th December, 1878, HENRY HARWOOD, Esq., M.A., will read a Paper on "The Duty of Christian Churches in Times of General Depression." To be followed by discussion. The Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., will take the chair at 7 p.m. Tea will be provided from 6 to 7 at Sixpence each.

W. C. BOWIE, Hon. Sec. Memorial Hall, 5th December, 1878.

DOB LANE NEW CHAPEL.

The Building Committee earnestly appeal for further assistance. The New Chapel must be opened free from debt, and our funds are still inadequate to the work in hand.

HALLIWELL THOMAS, Minister.

HARRY RAWSON, Trustee.

LUKE POLLITT, Treasurer.

JOHN F. ALLEN, Secretary, Oldham Road, Newton Heath.

The Committee thankfully acknowledge the following donations:—

	£	s.	d.
R. N. Phillips, Esq., M.P. (2nd donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Charlton, Chester, per H. R. (2nd subscription) ..	5	0	0
H. R. Greg, Esq.	2	0	0
John Wood, Clayton Bridge	2	0	0

OLD MEETING, GREAT YARMOUTH.

APPEAL FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION.

Owing to the great and continued increase in the attendance of children at this School, together with the want of accommodation for conducting with efficiency and convenience the social and public work of the Church, the congregation feel themselves compelled to enlarge the present schoolroom.

As the congregation have not at their command sufficient means to provide the whole of the estimated cost, they are under the necessity of soliciting subscriptions from all those who are in sympathy with the religious education of the young, and who are desirous of obtaining in our respective towns all requisite facilities for the teaching and practical application of the principles and aims of Unitarian Christianity.

Subscriptions will be received by the following gentlemen, Members of the Committee of Management:—

SIR THOMAS B. BEEVOR, BART., Chairman,

20, Regent-road, Great Yarmouth.

JOHN LEACH, Hon. Treasurer.

Market-place, Great Yarmouth.

CHARLES RUMBOLD, Jun., Hon. Secretary,

4, Dene-side, Great Yarmouth.

All subscriptions received will be acknowledged by the Secretary through the post. Amount received to this date, £48. 17s. 2d.

26th November, 1878.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, BOLTON.

AN APPEAL.

The Committee of the above Church have entered into negotiations for the purchase of the Lark-street Temperance Hall. For this purpose, and for needful alterations, the sum of £900 will be required, and the Committee appeal to all friends of Free Religious Thought to aid them in the work they have undertaken. The Congregation from its commencement has been entirely self-supporting. The Sunday school is doing a good and useful work in a neighbourhood where a school is much needed. It was opened in August, 1873, when it commenced with 12 scholars; now it numbers 146.

Towards this sum the members have raised £300.

The following persons have kindly consented to receive Subscriptions, which will be acknowledged through the columns of the Unitarian Herald:—

Mrs. Stephen Winkworth, Ravenswood, Heaton, Bolton.

J. P. Thomasson, Esq., Woodside, Heaton, Bolton.

Rev. H. Shean Solly, M.A., Padham.

Rev. W. Carey Walters, Whitechurch, Salop.

Mr. Bernard Dawson, The Laurels, Malvern Link.

Mr. Herbert V. Mills, Memorial Hall, Albert Sq., Manchester.

WANTED, a trustworthy Plain COOK, not under 25; also a strong, willing HOUSEMAID.—

Address Mrs. W., 38, Monkgate, York.

AS HOUSEKEEPER, Companion, Attendant, or any Situation of usefulness and trust: middle aged: experienced: knowledge of cooking: high references.—Address "Hope," Hammett's Circulating Library, Taunton.

RE-ENGAGEMENT Required by a Young

Lady as GOVERNESS in a Boys' Preparatory School, or in a family, to boys under twelve. Acquirements: English, Latin, French, and Music.—Address R. F., care of Messrs. Smart and Allen, 5, London House Yard, E.C.

1879. { DIARIES, ALMANACKS, CHRISTMAS CARDS, best designs, and great variety. A large lot of SCIBLING PAPER at 6d. per lb. 1879.

JOHNSON & RAWSON, 89, Market-street, Manchester.

Just published.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES for SUNDAY

SCHOOLS. Edited by Rev. J. Cuckson. 8vo., 150 pages. 1s. 6d. each. 25 copies or more, 1s. each.

Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Hirst, Smyth, and Son, 137, Gower-street, London.

NEW PARLOUR DRAMA FOR CHRISTMAS.

Now ready, in cloth, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

THE PRINCE'S TRIUMPH:

A Drama for Home Representation.

N.B.—New Books at 1d. in the shilling discount for cash, free by post. Parcels of £2 and upwards at 25 per cent discount.

Now ready. In small 8vo, pp. xvi.—240. Cloth, red edges. Price 2s. 6d. (to Congregations, 1s. 8d.)

A BOOK OF PRAYER: IN THIRTY ORDERS

OF WORSHIP. With additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. Edited by R. CROMPTON JONES.

Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!"

And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Pretty bindings. Price 9d.

Publishers: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., London.

* * * Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—

25 BOOKS FOR 12s. 6d.

If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News," for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

THE HOME PAGE TRACTS.

A BARGAIN.

TO BE SOLD, the whole STOCK of the HOME PAGE TRACTS, heretofore kept in store at the Unitarian Herald Office, but now obliged to be disposed of owing to the removal of the Herald business. The "Home Page Tracts" are 236 in number (some of which, however, have been sold out.) Edited by Rev. Brooke Herford. The stock now remaining amounts, in all, to about 200,000 to 250,000; and at the wholesale price as supplied per thousand, they are worth upwards of £150. There has been a steady demand for them up to the present time. The whole will be sold for £30, the purchaser to arrange for removal and carriage.—Apply immediately to JOHN PHILLIPS, Unitarian Herald Office, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD.—BOARD-

ING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—For Prospectus apply to Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, Principal.

MISS ARDERN, Princess-street, Knutsford, wishes to find an ENGLISH GOVERNESS of some experience for her School: accomplishments not indispensable.

CROYDON.—School for Girls.—Miss Biddell, who has passed in honours the Cambridge and Kensington Examinations, receives Boarders: home comforts: terms 40 to 60 guineas.—2, Ailsa Villas, Wellesley Road., next Free Christian Church. Half-term commences November 4th.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL.

For Boys from ten to sixteen years of age: Junior Classes for children under ten years of age. Pupils are now working for the London Matriculation Examinations of June, 1879, and June, 1880. The arrangements of the School permit of some Girls being received with their brothers. The NEXT TERM begins on Wednesday, January 22nd, 1879.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE, Heath Brow, Hampstead, London, N.W.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL,

NOTTINGHAM.

Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., of the Universities of London and Heidelberg, assisted by Mr. G. H. HENSON, University of London, thoroughly prepares Boys for college, the local examinations, or for business. The school possesses an unusually complete provision of apparatus and specimens for the teaching of science. No means is neglected which the experience of fourteen years has shown to conduce to the progress and interest of pupils in their studies. Good cricket ground and playground.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties' Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock

Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE,

39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.

Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE

HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

ARMSTRONG AND RICHARDS, St. Ann's

Place, Manchester. SHIRTS of superior quality, 48s. for half-a-dozen, made to order. Youths' and Boys' Shirts to order.

ARMSTRONG AND RICHARDS, St. Ann's

Place, Manchester, HOSIERS and GLOVERS, &c. Children's best NOTTINGHAM HOSIERY in great variety.

DOING AND SAYING.

The electric light has been experimentally tried in the nave of Bristol Cathedral, the result being most satisfactory.

This year's collections on Hospital Sunday in Birmingham amounted to £6,400, the largest amount yet received.

Hospital Saturday Fund in London for the year is £6,550, an increase of £1,047 over the receipts of the previous year.

The total amount promised from London districts to the Wesleyan Thanksgiving Fund is £31,200, which, with other districts, will make a total of £34,660.

A Memorial of the late Dr. Livingstone is about to be erected in Westminster Abbey. With the consent of Dean Stanley it will take the form of a stained-glass window.

Lina Berger, a young Swiss lady, has taken the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Berne University, after a brilliant examination; and two other ladies, American and Austrian, have passed as doctors of medicine.

It is intended to found in Oxford an institution for nurses, in memory of the late Mrs. Acland, wife of Dr. Acland, Regius Professor of Medicine. To give effect to the plan a sum of from £3,000 to £4,000 will be required.

A gentleman connected with the Press has paid Carlyle a visit. He was delighted to find that in the course of conversation the Earl of Beaconsfield was held up to ridicule. The old Sage of Chelsea has a poor opinion of all the actors on the modern stage.

The Chicago Standard, having noted that the young Duke of Norfolk will soon be in receipt of an income of 1,500,000 dollars (£300,000) from his Sheffield possessions, adds: "If he keeps off the racecourse, and refrains from starting a daily paper, he ought to pull through."

M. Guillaume Guizot, in his interesting lectures on English literature at the College of France, astonished some of his auditors by describing Mrs. Browning as not only the greatest English poetess, but the greatest the world has ever produced.

Mr. George Henry Lewes has left a considerable mass of MS., including the remainder of his work on theology in its philosophical relations. It is said that a new and full edition of his works will shortly appear, under the editorship of Mrs. Lewes (George Eliot), who is, unfortunately, in very delicate health.

In a paper on Manchester journalism read at the Literary Club by Mr. Henry Franks, Bishop Fraser was described as "a newspaper without an editor." The description was made the more epigrammatic by another member who referred to his lordship as "an unedited newspaper."

The Ritualists in the Church of England now accommodate both parties in their churches by administering the Communion in two ways, with and without the offensive additions. The rector at Wilton-place advertises:—Holy Communion, 8 30 a.m.; ditto (plain), with sermon, 11 a.m. Very like a restaurant bill of fare.

Thirty families at Tasso, in Corsica, have embraced Protestantism, and have secured an Italian pastor from Geneva. The priest challenged him to a public discussion in Italian, but when the time came insisted on the use of French. To the pastor this was immaterial, but the villagers objected to a language they could not understand, whereupon the priest retired.

Whilst some of our Protestant cathedrals are being restored there is to be a new one dedicated to the service of the Church of Rome in memory of Cardinal Cullen. Mr. Gray, M.P., proprietor of the Freeman's Journal, has offered to subscribe £1,000 towards the new building.

The American Oriental Society are stated to have in contemplation an expedition for the purpose of Assyrian research.

Mr. Hamilton, a gentleman who has edited the Old Quarter Sessions Record of Devonshire, making a most instructive book out of them, draws special attention to the fact that, in the Commonwealth period, he has not met with many of those curious scriptural names supposed to be characteristic of that time. The Athenaeum thinks that his experience in this matter will tally with that of every other student who has turned his attention to this subject. "It is only in the pages of tale-books and plays" says our contemporary, "that those odd names which many people suppose to be characteristic of the Puritans are to be found in any great profusion."

In a word for what it terms "much-abused preachers" the World says:—Would even the censorious layman find it an easy matter to discourse, week after week, on well-known themes that have been threshed and winnowed time out of mind? Or to the same people, with precisely the same surroundings, familiar to all? Or to a 'mixed congregation,' some wofully ignorant of even elementary truths, others utterly careless and indifferent as to the most awful and sublime interests that can affect humanity? And might not the preacher very often retort on his lay critic somewhat after the fashion of a certain nobleman, who was once in early life a candidate for parliamentary honours, on the hustings? Persistently chaffed by a non-elect in the crowd below, the would-be representative bore it for a while in good humour. At last, to the infinite amusement of bystanders and the delight of the mob, he lost both his 'speech' and his temper, and roared out to his tormentor, 'Come up here, old fellow; and see if you can do it better yourself.'

The Rev. J. G. Rogers, in a recent address, remarked that Principal Tulloch was very earnest, and also, he was bound to say, very savage, upon one point. He said, "Perhaps one would not like a Prime Minister to choose your Church dignitaries, but at all events I should prefer the Prime Minister to Tozer the buttermilk man." Now, he (Mr. Rogers) would rather have Tozer the buttermilk man than Lord Beaconsfield. He thought it probable that they did not know who Tozer the buttermilk man was. He (the speaker) had been a Dissenting minister for thirty-two years, and had never hit upon him; and yet whenever this controversy arose they had this wonderful individual, this unhappy old horse, trotted out until, he should have thought, both those who had him in charge and he must have become weary of the operation. Here was the difference between such a man and the Prime Minister. Granted that Tozer was a very vulgar man—a very Philistine of Philistines, as Matthew Arnold would say; let them grant—to quote Mr. Arnold's expression—that he belonged to a lower plane of society, that his sense of beauty was rather dwarfed, and his religious conceptions were not of the most exalted character. But, on the other hand, they had the Prime Minister, who might be a Christian or who might not, who might be interested in the prosperity of the Church or who might not, who might be an earnest and devoted champion of Christianity, or an apologist for Bulgarian massacres and the patron of Mahomedan idolatry. It did not matter what he was, he had possessed the power. Here was the difference with Tozer, who was interested in the Church and could do nothing unless the Church agreed with him. Tozer's voice was only one, and unless he had spiritual insight and sagacity to fix upon the right man—to such an extent, at all events, that he could make others agree with him—his power was limited to a solitary vote. Therefore he preferred being governed in church matters by members of the churches and by men selected by the free choice of the members—by men who thought and worked for the Church, and who if they erred did not err from want of sympathy, but entirely from want of judgment. Of course they might make mistakes; all liberty was liable to abuse, and all deacons were not perfect men; but after a somewhat extensive experience, admitting the failures he had seen on the part of deacons, and looking also at the mistakes which they as ministers had made, he confessed he was just as much surprised at the patience Nonconformist churches showed from time to time with ministers as he was indignant sometimes at the insolence, possibly, of deacons, who ought never to have been in office at all.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

TRAM-CARS ON SUNDAY.

THEY are going ahead in Scotland. The most doctrinal Presbytery in the most Sabbatarian city in the world, Glasgow, has given out that tram-cars are necessary to religion. The fathers in solemn council last week passed a resolution that for works of necessity and mercy, or for persons coming from the suburbs to the town for divine worship, tram-cars may, within assignable limits, be run. The Presbytery does not see that there should be one law for the rich and one for the poor, or why the former should be permitted to use his private carriage in going to church, and the poor man be proclaimed a heretic if he goes thither in a tram-car. This is altogether a leap in advance of anything yet attempted in Scotland.

AMERICAN NOTES.

HOW CHURCH DEBTS ARE PAID.

THE Boston Congregationalist gives this account of the way in which some church debts are paid:—"In a New Jersey Church not far from New York, which freed itself under Mr. Kimball's lead, and whose male members are mostly mechanics working on reduced wages, one man who earns 450 dollars a-year (£90) gave 300 dollars (£60). Another, who earns 800 dollars a-year (£160) gave 600 dollars (£120), the entire savings of three self-denying years."

NEW YORK CHURCHES AND SALOONS.

IN New York (population over a million) there are 375 churches divided among the following sects:—Protestant Episcopal, 73; Roman Catholic, 54; Methodist Episcopal, 50; Presbyterian, 41; Baptist, 31; Jews, 25; Lutheran, 21; Dutch Reformed, 20; African Methodist Episcopal, 9; United Presbyterian, 7; Congregational, 6; Reformed Presbyterian, 5; Universalist, 5; Unitarian, 4; Friends, 3; miscellaneous, 21; among the last, 1 True Dutch Reformed, 1 Swedenborgian, and 1 Greek Catholic. There are 2,000 drinking saloons in the city; showing one church to every 2,800 inhabitants; one saloon to every 500.

As an experiment in "Indian Policy," the Government of the United States is transplanting a little colony of Indians from Dakota to Hampton, in Virginia, where large buildings are being prepared for the reception, in the first instance, of some fifty boys and half as many girls. Until the large wigwam is ready for occupation the immigrants will be accommodated in tents; for those who are well acquainted with their habits have warned the Government against cooping up boys and girls accustomed to live in the open air in badly-ventilated houses. The experiment at Hampton is said to be watched with interest in America. As one of the newspapers says, "It is well worth trying, viewed simply from an economical point of view; for while it costs the Government not less than 10,000 dols. to kill an Indian, less than 200 dols. a year will suffice to educate him at Hampton." The Government, it is stated, pays the current expense of these Indians so long as it chooses to continue the experiment; but the buildings, which, should the Indians be withdrawn, are required for the purpose of negro education, must depend upon voluntary gifts.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

The House Surgeon or the Doctor at Home, containing instructions for the prompt treatment of Accidents and Emergencies. By the late Alfred Smee, F.R.S. London: The Accident Insurance Company, Limited.

THE doctor is sometimes wanted at home before he can arrive, and the ignorance as to what ought to be done in the meantime is something dreadful to think of. A bad cut, a severe burn or bruise, a broken bone require immediate attention; not to speak of such accidents—not happening in the house—as drowning, where momentary action affords the only hope of recovery. The right kind of suggestions for all those cases will be found in the little work named above, which has the great advantage of being supplied with a number of little woodcuts illustrating the methods to be adopted. We need scarcely add that, with clear and accurate advice like that given here, the doctor may very often be dispensed with.

Ida Mayhew. By Mrs. Herbert Martin. London: The Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

THIS is a very excellent story of a girl who had grown up rude and selfish, changed by judicious treatment into a self-denying and useful member of the household. The scheme of it is this. Ida's mother dies, and her father, who holds an appointment in India, marries again. Ida had been indulged by her father, and she was too self-asserting towards her stepmother to get on well with her. The father conceived the idea of sending Ida to her aunt Penelope's in England, a maiden lady, a strict disciplinarian. She arrives, but the unsympathetic angularities of the aunt drive Ida into open rebellion, and she, while confined to her room at Lime College for disobedience, runs away to join a travelling circus at Norton, but falls ill and is taken to the house of Dr. Shirley, who proves to be an old schoolfellow of her father's. Here she is carefully tended, is physically and morally improved, and eventually of her own choice she goes to the home of her aunt's, to whom she is reconciled, and shortly after the aunt dies, her father returns to England and takes up his abode at Norton, where Ida is restored to him a changed creature—a result achieved by the exercise of love and sympathy towards a spoiled self-willed girl. The story is well written, and will be good reading for every family of young people. It is a capital prize book or Christmas present for girls of from 12 to 16 years of age.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

PROVIDENT HABITS.

MISS EMILY FAITHFULL recently delivered an address on the above subject to a large audience in the Mansion House, London, which we recommend as a lesson for our Sunday-school teachers.

Miss Faithfull commenced by saying that for some years we have heard an ever-deepening cry against the want of prudence and reckless expenditure now so prevalent. It was indeed the old string which Samuel Smiles had touched with a master hand in books which ought to be scattered broadcast throughout the kingdom. But in spite of all that has been said and done, Mr. Gladstone lately stated, and none could gainsay him, that if you compare England with France you will find the French people understand thrift far better than we do at home. A very different spirit prevails in England. People live for the present moment. They work hard, but they spend hard. They are industrious, but they are improvident, and all classes seem striving to attain to a standard of living which can be easily reached only by those of the highest rank in the social scale. Few people saw more of the fatal consequences of extravagant living than she did; and that was why she felt impelled to speak upon the matter. She continually saw in the hours of their deepest misery the widows and daughters of men who had been spending their hundreds a year, but who had left debts behind them, and their families penniless. For years she had tried to help them, now she wanted to plead for prevention rather than cure. She thought something could be done, and that women had something to do in the matter. They had certainly a great deal to do with spending money. By some they were accused of being the direct promoters of the extravagance now seen on every side of us. If we walked by Rotten Row, or attended a fashionable church, we had to confess this prodigal display in dress is the outward and visible sign of what is going on throughout our social system. But men were equally to blame. Tailors' bills, flower and cigar bills, life at St. John's Wood and Pimlico, gambling, horse-racing, &c., play their part on the stage of modern extravagance. After alluding to Sir Charles Napier's brave protest when he resigned his command in India, Miss Faithfull said that the extravagance he complained of was small compared with the expenditure which prevails among the officers of the present day, and spoke of the letter which recently appeared about "Regimental Dinners," and the expenses of subalterns, whose parents probably pinched themselves to place them in the army at all. In fact, Englishmen and women seem to be expending toil, and life itself, to obtain outward luxury, thus stifling every nobler aspiration, whether for this world or the next. The poison was spreading through all classes. The same love of vanity was to be found in high and low, master and servant, mistress and maid. Accordingly, we hear on all sides of the difficulty of obtaining good servants. Fine ladyism has descended from the drawing-room to the kitchen. The servants of the period shirked their work, were idle, thriftless, and untrustworthy, emulating their mistresses in spending all they had on their backs, counting their appearance on their Sunday out as a better investment than money placed in a savings' bank against a rainy day. Their hearts are not in dusting, sweeping, or cooking, but in gay attire in which they may display themselves like their betters. They, too, live to the best of their ability on the skirts of the sensational life of the classes above them, eating of the same disastrous tree of knowledge, and living in equally unhealthy and still grosser pictures of romance. Miss Faithfull then dealt with the various causes which have produced this state of things. Material prosperity, with its concomitant—the spirit of equality—were the first causes dwelt upon; then the love of money—an inheritance from our Saxon ancestors. After speaking of the way in which the higher ranks of society must lead, whether they will or no, the lower, Miss Faithfull pointed out how the aristocracy of money is fast swamping the aristocracy of birth and culture. The poet had said love rules the world, but it seemed to her in these days the French song was nearer the mark—"C'est l'argent qui fait tourn le monde." The greatest evil she attributed to the modern way of living was the credit system, and its twin-brother—debt, well described as the curse of the middle classes, and which, like drink, is carried on in a blind, stupid, reckless fashion. The man who is trying to maintain a false position commences running accounts; hence arise fatal opportunities to extravagance, and he drifts into debt; and some people live, live, ay, the whole of their lives, heavily handicapped with needlessly incurred debt; and no road is more easily travelled than the road from debt to dishonour. She would like to see St. Paul's maxim, "Owe no man anything," written in letters of gold in every home in the country—from the Duke's palace to the peasant's cottage. In indicating the cure Miss Faithfull dwelt upon the power of the press. Napoleon had said he feared three newspapers more than a hundred thousand bayonets. She would have the press fearlessly outspoken about the shams of the present day; she pleaded for a braver spirit throughout society. Let each man stand on the pedestal of his own independence, and dare to say, "I cannot afford it; I will live within my income." Our children should be taught lessons of thrift in our national schools, as they are on the continent. We have at present corrupted the very word economy, and as Mr. Ruskin says, tortured it into meaning saving money, whereas it means the best possible administration of time, labour, and money. She thought great changes would be brought about by the further spread of education—or more strictly speaking culture, for the pretension of which she had complained belonged to ignorance, and the instinctive feeling of insecurity. And there were other methods of encouraging habits of providence. She spoke of the work done by the Crossleys, Akroyds, Sir Titus Salt; the good achieved by Savings' Banks, Prudential and Insurance Societies, the Birbeck and Building Funds, and the Ready-Money system introduced by the General Expenditure Assurance Company. Ready money dealing was twice blessed.

"It blesses him who gives, and him who takes."

She urged everyone to give up that bad speculation—the credit system. She was certain from personal experience that no one who did so would ever regret it. Everyone should protest against the notion which carries such deadly mischiefs in its train, that money is the measure of worth; the acquisition of it the purpose for which men are to live and die. The whole tone of society would be raised by a system that made integrity a necessity, punctuality a rule, and providence a habit. Miss Faithfull resumed her seat amid loud and continued applause.

A SECULAR CHAPTER.

WHERE ARE THE NINE?

THE Derbyshire Gazette of Friday last is rather hard on the late Mayor of Derby. It recites the following:—

Where are the nine? They are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger."—Luke xvii., 17, 18.

That is our text. Our subject is "gratitude." In the first place, let us see what there is to be grateful for. On the 28th day of October, 1878, Mr H. H. Bemrose, then Mayor of Derby, was minded to gather together all the Sunday school teachers of the various orthodox Protestant communions to the end that they might rejoice and strengthen one another over a social cup of tea. Wherefore he sent out invitations far and wide, and there flocked unto him in the Drill Hall the Rev. S. D. C. Douglas with his people, the Rev. W. H. Askwith with his people, the Rev. R. Hey with his people, the Rev. J. Chancellor with his people, the Rev. S. B. Brasher with his people, and the Revs. Kent, Crosbie, Mirams, Tetley, Wilkinson, and others, with their people. But the High churchmen kept aloof and would not come. And the Roman Catholics were not asked. Then those who were assembled partook of the Mayor's hospitality and indulged in sweet converse until late in the evening, and so departed well pleased to their several homes. And it came to pass after this, that on the 21st day of November, 1878, a complimentary dinner was given to Mr. Bemrose on the completion of his term of office, and the inhabitants of the town willingly contributed to the banquet, being desirous of showing the respect they felt towards him from his public services and private virtues. So the cloth was laid and the viands put thereon, with wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and the guests sat down at the table. Then the Mayor looked round for the Rev. S. D. C. Douglas, the Rev. W. H. Askwith, the Rev. R. Hey, the Rev. J. Chancellor, and the rest of those clergymen and ministers who had participated in Mr. Bemrose's bounty to find one who could say grace; but, behold, none of them was there. But the Rev. Canon M'Kenna, a Roman Catholic, forgetting and forgiving that he and his people were not allowed to join the Sunday-school teachers at their meeting in the Drill Hall, was present to testify his esteem for the late Mayor, and he invoked a blessing on the feast. Which, now, of these owed gratitude to Mr. Bemrose? Where were the nine? Why was the duty of giving glory to God left to "this stranger?"

SOUTH SHIELDS.—On Sunday the town was visited by a severe storm, and the streets were almost impassable. Two discourses had been announced by the Rev. R. C. Smith, bearing upon the Evangelistic mission which is being carried on daily in the town by the Rev. W. B. Cullis, the popular American revivalist. The discourse in the morning was "The Nature of Jesus." Owing to the storm, however, a very small muster was present, numbering less than 20, and including only one lady. It was decided, therefore, to shorten the service, and to have a discussion upon the discourse. This plan was adopted, and the discussion was both animated and prolonged, a desire being universally expressed that the sermon should be re-delivered at an early date, and a suggestion was made by Mr. Smith that opportunity should be given by which his sermons could be discussed at a properly organised meeting between each Sunday. Altogether the service was a most interesting one. In spite of the continued severity of the storm a good congregation assembled in the evening to listen to a discourse on "The Revivalist View of the Atonement," and although a lengthy one the lecture was listened to throughout with rapt attention.

THE OLD PASTOR'S DISMISSAL.

ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

"We need a younger man to stir the people,
And lead them to the fold,"
The deacons said, "We ask your resignation,
Because you're growing old."
The pastor bowed his deacons out in silence,
And tenderly the gloom
Of twilight hid him and his bitter anguish
Within the lonely room.
Above the violet hills the sunlight's glory
Hung like a crown of gold,
And from the great church spire the bell's sweet anthem
Adown the stillness rolled.
Assembled were the people for God's worship;
But in his study chair
The pastor sat unheeding, while the south wind
Caressed his snow-white hair.
A smile lay on his lips. His was the secret
Of sorrow's glad surcease.
Upon his forehead shone the benediction
Of everlasting peace.
"The ways of Providence are most mysterious,"
The deacons gravely said,
As wondering eyed, and scared, the people crowded
About their pastor—dead.
"We loved him," wrote the people on the coffin,
In words of shining gold;
And 'bove the broken heart they set a statue
Of marble, white and cold.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

DUTY OF CHURCHES IN TIMES OF DEPRESSION.

WHILE the above subject is brought before our notice in the announcement of Mr. HENRY HARWOOD's paper for the meeting of the Beard Memorial Union on Tuesday next, we have the same topic presented from another point of view in a pamphlet on Bad Trade, by Mr. EDWIN GUTHRIE.* It is not our intention to enter here into any discussion of the question as to the causes of bad trade or the remedies which may best be applied for the immediate relief of sufferers, or for the more difficult, but at the same time more permanently important object of preventing such calamities so far as they may be prevented. Mr. GUTHRIE's review of the case may be safely recommended as thorough, far-seeing, impartial, and in its last lesson not Utopian but hopeful. He has some stern words for all parties, each in their turn; but he shows that the ills which befel a locality or a class are naturally and efficiently counteracted when that place or that class enters into its true relations with other places and classes. And he concludes in the words:—"Let the nations learn wisdom and common prudence, and there will be no very serious bad trade. Nature is sufficiently prolific to support in comfort more than the whole present population of the world; but as that increased wisdom and prudence will only be a matter of slow growth, the hours of labour of those who work to produce may only be reduced in like tardy proportion. Let there be free trade in its broadest and true sense—in its individual sense, in its local sense, in its national sense, and in its international sense, and couple with that freedom the exercise of healthy industry and real peace;—and the 'hard times' complained of will be speedily ameliorated, and so long as a prudent and common-sense policy is continued will 'come again no more.'"

These are wise, and we think quite scientifically accurate words. Meanwhile, there is the pressing work of true charity to be done—that kind help which helps the momentarily helpless to rise from their fall. We ought to regard the general depression of trade as a public, not a private calamity. It comes upon the whole district—not on masters alone, or men alone, or some men and some masters. The position of some renders them proof against such a visitation; while others are exposed to all its trials and terrors. At the present moment the outlook is most sad. Heartrending tales of starvation begin to appear in our journals, and the depth of winter is before us. They say it may not improbably be worse with us than in the Cotton Famine. In these circumstances the common duty of fellow-feeling, which is the essence of religion, and which it is the glory of the Christian religion to have brought into full recognition, indicates the course we ought to take. "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." Here is the far-reaching principle that governs the household and gives opportunity for all the sweetest and holiest graces of character. Society, we have agreed in England, is safest and happiest when it makes the household its centre and model. The special function of the Church is to effect this for the general community; to make duty gentle and acceptable through unfolding the affections; to bring man and man together, rich and poor, wise and unwise, strong, and weak, where they may feel their true relationship and may enter into sympathy and companionship. A religion that cannot do this for us is dead already.

PROGRESS.

No church in the Christian world can escape the influences of progress and the growing desire to question authority, founded nearly altogether on the opinions of uncultured and uncritical ages. Absolute ignorance is the only salvation from progress. But, as such ignorance is impossible, no church has a perfect protection against the incoming of new ideas, and the tendency to progress, less or more.

Conscious progress has deep meanings and infinite longings. It grows out of strong faith that the constant love of God arches over our heads wherever our lots may be cast. It recognises neither limits nor finalities. It aims at nothing less than perfection in Deity, through eternity. It has a limitless trust in the soul of man and in the resources of the universe. It is the Spirit of the Highest moving on the waters of human life. It is the path marked out by the Infinite Wisdom for the activities of the race. It is the direction in which all present appearances point. It is the way in which all true and rational believers of our time are willingly and knowingly travelling.

Progress implies that the universe is so constituted that no insurmountable difficulty can be presented to the full and harmonious development of all our faculties, that man can rise from one degree of knowledge to another for ever, that there is something within man that will always prompt him to seek new truth, and to make him dissatisfied with present attainments, and that he believes that wisely-directed and persevering efforts will be fairly rewarded with fresh discoveries and the possession of new forces. Progress is an expression of the soul's aspirations, and is thus an absolute necessity of human nature, and is, therefore, a law of God.

There are people who affirm that God spoke His last word to the human family eighteen centuries ago, and that we need no other revelation of His will. We maintain that the three-fourths of our thoughtful century, which have almost passed away, have received and utilised some of the divinest revelations that Deity has ever vouchsafed to man; and we believe, judging from the past and the present, and from the constitution of the universe, so far as we are able to comprehend it, that God will always reveal Himself to His intelligent children, and that man will always hearken to the whispers of his Creator. The revelations of the past could not be interpreted or understood if there were no revealing in the present day; for, as only a poet can understand and appreciate a poet, as only a philosopher can comprehend philosophy, and as only a scientist is qualified to expound science, so only a prophet, or one spiritually illuminated, is able to receive, utilise, and enjoy the words which fell from the lips of those who "spoke as they were moved" by the revealing spirit.

TRUE WORSHIP.

IN the human heart love and worship are inseparably connected. Once let the invisible filaments of love reach out and fasten to any object, real or ideal, and the whole being is bowed in adoration before it. The processes of unbiassed judgment have little or no play within this Elysian domain. In some way all are idolators, and the fact is greater than our knowledge or comprehension of it. It produces a nebulous consciousness enveloping us like a cloud, and preventing any just discernment of its why and wherefore. Many Christians do not know that their whole religious life is a mere person worship of JESUS CHRIST, full of idolatrous love for his person. They easily forget to properly estimate and worship the divine philosophy of the principles he taught, for which he came and suffered death. They do not comprehend the universal application of his teachings to the individual and social necessities of human nature, reaching like the laws of mathematics to an infinity of combination. Said a certain Methodist divine: "his life, his example, his teachings were nothing in comparison with his blood." It was this he worshipped, and the estimate produced its kind of character and manhood. Such ideas are not phenomenal. In every religion which has yet challenged the attention and secured the devotion of mankind, has this immutable law of human nature asserted itself. The purpose of the founder to unfold and set at work some sweet, grand principle of eternal right, which should become the "healing of the nations," is gradually forgotten, and a love-sick idolatry takes its place.

MR. MACRAE MOVES AGAIN.

ON the Greenock and Paisley U.P. Presbytery taking up the consideration of the Declaratory Statement of the Synod on the subject of the Subordinate Standards, the Rev. D. Macrae brought forward a series of resolutions in which, while the Act was heartily welcomed as liberating the Church from some of the errors of her professed creed, objections were urged against it, on the grounds, amongst others, that it made the Church's relation to her creed more self-contradictory than ever, and attempted to preserve an appearance of consistency by "devices essentially Jesuistical." After a warm discussion between several of the members of the Presbytery and Mr. Macrae, it was agreed by a large majority not to accept the resolution. Well, Rome was not built in a day. With perseverance and courage on the part of Mr. Macrae his proposals will no doubt be accepted in time. Only a very few years ago the only discussion on the part of his Presbytery would have been as to the quickest way of throwing him out of the Church.

* Bad Trade considered in relation to the present condition of the Cotton Industry in England. By Edwin Guthrie. Manchester: Alex. Ireland and Co.

THE "CONTEMPORARY REVIEW" ON THE GASKELL COMMEMORATION MEETING.

IN the December number of this Review we find the following, which will deeply interest our readers:—"The recent celebration at Manchester, with something like splendour and much noble feeling, of the golden wedding of the Rev. William Gaskell with his congregation, was not a literary event, but of course it made everybody (who knew of the relation between them) think of his wife: the sweet novelist, who was taken from him and from us in the prime of her powers and in the middle of one of her best stories, if not her best, a few years ago. It is no mere customary phrase, that her loss was irreparable. "There is none like her, none," nor will be till a good many of "our summers have deceased." She lay, if we may push metaphor so far, closer to the household heart of our best fiction than any novelist. She was very modern; altogether herself; and as little tintured with the transient moods of the time as could well be. We cannot read Mrs. Oliphant, excellent writer as she is, without many a pang—she does not write happy, or unhappy-making books. Even when her writing is in the mouth sweet, it is too often felt as bitter below the diaphragm. This is a pity, for she has more than a touch of genius—however, she works too hard, and her hand has now fixed habits; also, on the whole, she is almost above mere casual criticism. The author of the "Sad Fortunes of the Rev. Amos Barton" might have kept as near the household heart as Mrs. Gaskell, if she had survived; but her place was long ago taken by the author of "Romola" and "Daniel Deronda." Mr. Hardy, if he had been a woman, might have done it in some respects; but "Cranford" he never could have written. What æons have we passed through since poor, simple "Ruth" raised storms in tea-cups, and men like Kingsley wrote to comfort the author and assure her that the good and wise were with her! But we are still in doubt whether society would not even now prefer the coarse équivoque which is so common in fiction to the straightforward handling of certain topics by Mrs. Gaskell in "Ruth." The only serious mistake we can recall of hers was the one she made in the Memoirs of Charlotte Brontë—an undoubted blunder, both in art and in true good manners: and the first edition had to be cancelled, some sort of an apology being made (as we think we remember) by the publishers. The great charm of Mrs. Gaskell lay in the human-hearted singleness of the eye with which she told her story—she made no speculative digressions, indulged in no inuendoes, did not try to be clever or literary, but went straight on with homely pathos or homely humour. Though her style is even already getting a little antiquated, fashions change in that matter, and simplicity like hers will win. The world will come back to her when it has tired of writers more subtle, more brilliant, and more profound. Leaving aside the earlier writings of George Eliot up to and including, say "Silas Marner," we can already count the pages of George Eliot which will in fifty years be as nearly obsolete as "St. Leon;" but that fate is not in store for "Cranford" or "Wives and Daughters."

CANON FARRAR'S LIFE OF CHRIST.*

REV. R. A. ARMSTRONG.

I DECLARE to you that, as I ponder, it comes to me with fresh and startling amazement what this man was. I have no dogma about his perfect wisdom or his sheer impeccability. I have no means of knowing what self-rebuke, what penitence for deeds or thoughts unrecorded the man may or may not have harboured. But of these things I trace no sign unless it be in the perfection of his sympathy with brothers and with sisters in whom burnt remorse or shame. And I seem to myself to see in the meagre, all too meagre sketch, we have of him, obscured with its legend, darkened with misunderstanding, the figure of a man consummate in wisdom for the solution of all the problems which have ever agitated the ages, with a philosophy of life simple and perfect beyond all the laboured attainments of all the sages, with insight into the labyrinth of human nature by any other absolutely unapproached, with a fulness of the moral and spiritual life in himself that made his soul a temple of God, pure as the holy of holies behind the awful veil. Yes, this is what, the more I ponder, the more I find—not in the Jesus of the churches, not even in the Jesus of the whole of the Gospels—but in that Jesus of Nazareth, brother of our own, whom I trace as the source of all that is sweet and pure, and true, and noble in the Christianity of the Bible, and in the Christianity of Ecclesiastics through eighteen hundred years. Canon Farrar has written a noble life of Christ. With lofty instinct and true prophetic power, he has selected the traits in the Gospels that show the true fulness of the measure of Christ, and set them forth in colours vivid to attract and rejoice the eye. But he has not written the "Life of Christ" that is to be. He has not removed the film of unreality in miracle and portent that clouds the luminous reality of Christ. He has not vindicated that great humanity from the abnormal mixture of Deity, which under the plea of making this being both man and God, produces a figure that is neither. I know not when the man shall arise, scholar, philosopher, prophet, who shall have skill to write that book. Perhaps centuries may intervene. But it is my cherished hope, nay, almost my faith, that one day shall be published to the world the book in which shall be drawn Jesus, the Nazarene, pure man, with that divinity which is in all mankind, and that alone, but that nurtured through the years to that incomparable vitality and strength which have sufficed to deceive mankind, and fill them with the dream that this was God himself clad in the garb of human flesh. In that book it will be shown how Jesus, the simple, loving boy, increased in spiritual as in bodily stature. The dream of an initial perfection, leaving no scope for growth, will be dispelled. The building up of the mighty soul in him will be traced even in the quiet home. The perpetual steady enlarging of his spirit in contact with the good and the evil, the proud and scornful as well as the sorrowing and sinning all through the wondrous ministry will find its record. It will be shown how every human touch, whether of the outcast woman or of the haughty rabbi, was nutriment to the development of his spirit. Above all, the line will be drawn distinct and deep between him, the glorious human Son, and God the Eternal Father; and so will be displayed, clear and shining for the blessing of mankind, the marvellous intimacy of communion with the uncreated heavenly Father to which the created human spirit may attain,—a supreme lesson of the Christ to man which is irreparably destroyed the moment it is alleged he was aught save pure man, as we are men, or was himself the God to whom he prayed. The question is often asked how Christianity, from such obscure beginnings, got the power to spread, how from that little group of peasants it drew the force to traverse and subdue the world and build an empire mightier than that of Rome upon Rome's ruins. Canon Farrar, with all orthodox writers, avers that the initial force for this vast conquest could only spring from the stupendous miracle of the resurrection. But surely that is a rash asseveration? What! Cannot you, who are orthodox, see in the Christ whom you make to be the Eternal God himself sufficient force of personality to win a widening sway over the tribes of man without the thaumaturgy of the bodily resurrection to clench the power of his life and word? If that be so, then I, I, the poor Unitarian, I, whom you charge with the denial of my Lord, I, who call Jesus Christ a simple man, I have more faith in the potency of his life and person, his word and wisdom, his devotion and his love, than you who call him Lord and God. For I am so impressed with the incomparable wisdom of his teaching, with the persuasiveness of his speech, with the breadth of his sympathy, with the nobility of his example, with the perfectness of his devotion, above all with the unique and transcendent power that was in himself, that I count these enough to account for all the victory his name and fame have won, and ask no miracle beyond himself to explain how it is that the nations have flocked to his feet as the sheep are gathered to the shepherd. We must remember the race to which he belonged, the people among whom he moved, the age in which he lived and died. And remembering these things, realising the tone of thought and morals and the level of wisdom and of faith which were contemporary with him, the utter simplicity and perfection of his maxims and his manners will fill us with amazement. Only too feebly does Canon Farrar, in the one passage which I shall permit myself to quote at length from him, sketch the consummate meaning of that which Christ taught by word, by deed, by every breath he drew. "The faith of Christ," cries he, "was the Palingenesia—the re-birth—of the world. It came like the dawn of a new spring to nations effete with the drunkenness of crime." The struggle was long and hard, but from the hour when Christ died (say rather from the hour when Christ first opened his lips to teach) "began the death-knell of every satanic tyranny and every tolerated abomination. . . . The work of Christ. . . . expelled cruelty; it curbed passion; it punished and repressed an execrable infanticide; it drove the shameless impurities of heathendom into a congenial darkness. There was hardly a class whose wrongs it did not remedy. It rescued the gladiator; it freed the slave; it protected the captive; it nursed the sick; it sheltered the orphan; it elevated the woman; it shrouded as with a halo of sacred innocence the tender years of the child. In every region of life its ameliorating influence was felt. It changed pity from a vice into a virtue. It elevated poverty from a curse into a beatitude. It ennobled labour from a vulgarity into a dignity and a duty. It sanctified marriage from little more than a burdensome convention into little less than a blessed sacrament. It revealed for the first time the angelic beauty of a purity of which men had despaired, and a meekness of which they had utterly scoffed. It created the very conception of charity, and broadened the limits of its obligation from the narrow circle of a neighbourhood to the widest horizons of the race. And while it thus evolved the idea of humanity as a common brotherhood . . . it cleansed the life and elevated the soul of each individual man. And in all lands where it has moulded the characters of its true believers, it has created hearts so pure, lives so peaceful, and homes so sweet, that it might seem as though those angels who had heralded its advent had also whispered to every depressed and despairing sufferer among the sons of men, 'Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove that is covered with silver wings, and her feathers like gold.'" Brethren, have you really so little faith in the power of moral and spiritual force, that you must needs drag in miracles to the rescue ere you can believe that the man in whose bosom all that was gathered up—aye, and much more was gathered there—could by the sheer power of that conquering goodness win humanity to his side and become the religious master of the world? And you, the Englishmen and Englishwomen of to-day, profess yourselves the disciples of this being, be he Man or God. Let the controversy rest. They say that we who hold him pure and simple Man are Infidels. They utterly deny our claim to the Christian name. Well, let that be. Perhaps we have no claim. Perhaps we are in the wrong. Perhaps they are right who cry before the Christ, with Thomas in his passion of amazement, "Ah! my Lord and my God!" Let that be. You profess to be his disciples. You asseverate that he has the words of eternal life. And do ye the things that he said? The things that he said! Good heavens? Disciples of Christ? My God! In the temple ye cry, "Lord! Lord!" But in the home, in the shop, in the mart? What heed pay ye there to his words? Some much, some little, some none! Christian people! Christian Nottingham, with its whirl of vile amusements, with its reeking drunkenness, with its hotbeds of political vice, with men of permitted influence, whited sepulchres, spruce and clean without, within corrupt with worse than dead men's bones and all uncleanness! Christian England, with its jostling commerce marred and broken by its frauds, its drinking, its personal selfishness, and its fist this moment lifted to smite, no man knows for what, a weakling prince, and pour into his villages and field the Christian civilisation of iron and powder and blood. Christian Europe, each state with jealous eye upon its neighbour, no statesman trusting his brother statesman, people hating people, and huge armaments glittering with flashing steel and gaudy banner, while the rich look on indifferent and the poor groan beneath the tyranny. Is it to account for this that you want your miracles? Is this the consummation brought about in eighteen hundred years by God incarnate in the image of a man? How long, O Lord, how long? Once there breathed a brother of our own in whom dwelt that wise and lovely spirit which alone can cleanse the world and lead it forward into the kingdom of God. Other men have caught glimpses of that great spirit too, and laboured and prayed and died. But the great world with one voice has proclaimed that sweet brother of ours the Mighty God, has doomed to eternal fires all who bowed not to his name, and then turned greedy to its lusts and wickedness. Lord! multiply the men with somewhat of the spirit of thy wise, thy tender, thy loving Jesus; and so still the cry of the oppressed and hush the cruel clang of arms, and bring to earth at last the beautiful kingdom of heaven! Amen.

READING.—On Sunday last two sermons were preached here by Mr. Herbert Burrows, of London, whose discourses gave great satisfaction to the congregation, which in the evening was augmented by the presence of several strangers.

* From a Sermon in the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham.

THE DEVOTIONAL SERVICE.

THE LITURGY QUESTION.

THE Council of the Saratoga Conference presented, at the late meeting, a long and deeply interesting report signed by its president (Dr. H. W. Bellows), in which is discussed almost every matter of importance to the Unitarian and associated churches. The following passages dealing with Worship and the Liturgy question will be acceptable to our readers at the present moment. The Council draws attention to the fact that while religious opinions were never so freely and radically discussed as at present, in newspapers, reviews, magazines and novels, people were never less concerned to hear them discussed in churches. The reason given is that it is getting to be felt that the ministerial profession in some degree disqualifies a man from having and avowing the opinions best worth considering. At church what men of all opinions seek is to have—worship—a worship attractive to their children, or dignified and interesting in itself—not from the opinions expressed, but the sympathetic, or æsthetic, or symbolic, or rich and varied character of the service.

The report then proceeds—In this state of things the Council cannot but think that the maintenance and prosperity of our denomination in its home field—a thing very different from the extension of our opinions—depends largely upon the improvement of our worship, and the spiritual and religious influences promotive of reverence thrown about the young. In the indifference of old communities, not to opinions, but to ecclesiastical declarations of opinion, to church discipline or pulpit assertions, people will seek churches where the worship is most attractive, with less and less regard to merely official creeds. For a while social attractions had a deciding influence, and in the villages they have still. Where are we likely to find the best company, the most social ease, the pleasantest festivals, the gayest picnics? Where is the church the liveliest, the singing the loudest and the most festive, the hymns of the kind that sing themselves, and the minister nearest on a level with the people, and the people all on the same level? But that stage of prosperity by such means is, let us hope, at its highest watermark, and certain to decline in our cities and larger towns—at least in the part of the country where we mostly live,—from this time forward. For as fast as social opportunities open and increase outside of church relations, they are felt to be more wholesome and genuine in their claims than when connected with churches; and then happily mere social influence grows of less attraction in the church. Our churches, and the same is true of all churches that represent the same general social level, are at least less sustained by mere social attractions than any others; and we should be unwise, considering our constituency, to depend very much upon them except in particular cases, and in our village and new communities. But there is a permanent function that religious institutions, and specially churches, do and must permanently continue to represent or fulfill, and that is the function of public worship. It is a function that supports the Roman Catholic Church to-day in spite of opinions in any literal sense incredible to even ordinary intelligence; and no church can compete for popular suffrage with the Roman Catholic, which lives by its worship, not its teaching.

The Episcopal Church, in America, far from distinguished hitherto by its learning, its zeal, its eloquence, or its popularity, is fast gaining upon the more profoundly theological and even more active sects, though in long prepossession of the ground, purely by its dignified, impressive, and full form of worship. Old Unitarian congregations must now begin to understand that they cannot hold their churches together merely by force of opinion, or even by good preaching. The teaching function of the pulpit for the class of people to whom we minister is very much divided with the teaching function of modern literature. Intelligent and reading people do not get their opinions, even on religion, exclusively or mainly from the pulpit. But what is left is the all-important function of worship, of public prayer; and that is to be sustained and the indestructible demand for it met under conditions and circumstances of the gravest difficulty; namely, of doubt and question respecting the very foundations on which for a hundred generations Christian worship has seemed to rest. Nothing short of a spirit of reverence of spiritual faith and consecration surpassing any merely traditional trust, because founded upon clear thinking, can avail to render such opinions as a scientific theology forces upon free minds, capable of a genuine and hearty union with the spirit of public prayer and public praise and common worship. To effect this union is the real problem of rational Christianity. People of our way of thinking in old communities are only to be brought to church, and kept faithful to religious institutions, through their new and carefully fed interest in the purely devotional and worshipful side of their nature. The Council, therefore, advises the National Conference that nothing is more wanting to the success of our cause than the cultivation and expression of the sentiment of reverence, prayer, and worship, in forms consistent with our real convictions; that the devout element is the factor in our problem which requires additional stress and emphasis; that books of devotion and forms of prayer suited to our convictions are among our most urgent and pressing wants. If the time shall ever come when public worship among us attains to a dignity, richness, and symbolic beauty of its own, it will for the first time convince the world that our progress in opinion and our free criticism is not what many candid minds suppose it to be; a plan for making prayer needless and public worship impossible. This misapprehension has driven away already into secularism and a pure individualism thousands of the logical and sincere; and is at the bottom of the neglect of thousands more who still have an attachment of custom to give their steadfast and hearty support to public worship. It is the honest opinion of many that intellectual freedom in matters of religion has given the death-blow to the implicit faith which they fancy can alone sustain churches. They believe that ignorance is the mother of devotion, and that genuine public worship is the privilege only of the unenlightened and superstitious. But there is already a reaction upon this extreme tendency; and it is, perhaps, the most encouraging and hopeful sign in our body. It almost looks as if our so-called radicals were going to be the first to put worship in our churches upon its own independent grounds, and to cultivate it as the best part of public religion. The first effort they made naturally was to emphasize freedom and the duty and value of absolute frankness and fidelity in forming and uttering those intellectual convictions. The next was to lay a new stress upon morality, as the only unquestionable good in religion; the last is to recognize the essential value of devoutness, or the worshipful sentiment, as the permanent and most precious factor in the training of the spiritual nature. A Puritan asceticism, a true form of self-consecration and of mystic devotion, begins to appear in some of the more advanced of our old radicals. Of course this is possible only with men of constitutional reverence. To prove that the liveliest personal faith and the most tender reverence can exist with the least superstitious and the less traditional opinions, as that it can be made the crystallizing centre of instituted religion and public prayer, is the foreshadowing of that coming church which is only the true evolution and outcome of the church that has had lawful possession for eighteen centuries of the Christian world. Nothing can usefully be here said of the particular form of worship needed to give true expression to the church which we provisionally represent. Forms of worship, liturgies, prayer-books, cannot be wilfully contrived, invented, and forced upon liberal Christians. They will, they must, spring up naturally, spontaneously, and in a way to connect the present with the past,—the old experiences of the church with its new revelations. All sorts of experiments are going on under our system of congregational independence, to cover the bareness, vary the monotony, and enrich the worship of our somewhat naked, inartistic, and unattractive order of services. The solo of the pulpit, broken only by the resting-space furnished by the singing of the choir, is slowly being relieved by some more or less successful attempts at responsive psalms; by the singing of church anthems, and the saying by people and minister together of the Lord's prayer. The success thus far is but partial and not very encouraging; but the effort to secure some actual participation by voice and knee and posture in the uttered prayers and praises is plainly a significant omen. It is an effort in the right direction, and the only direction that can restore charm and interest to public worship in liberal hands. There must be confession with the lips, as well as in the heart, to make our dual nature one in its operation, or to make public worship a living reality. Prayer must be not only the act of the minister, silently adopted by the people, it must be their open act, and sealed with their own lips, before it will have the true effect to unite them as suppliants before God, or as disciples of a common Master. But this tendency cannot be forced, though it may be encouraged. By-and-by some devout and saintly man, moved by genuine sympathy and entering into the wants of the people, will devise out of the prayers and hymns of the church, and in a tender, historic spirit, some manual of public devotion, which on its own merit, tried and tested in some single congregation, will recommend itself for common and even general use among liberal Christians. We shall never know the power of any form of worship until it is used and honoured by our churches in general. Our common hymn and tune book and its services of worship have done us a very uniting service. A book of common prayer would effect a still more important service. But it must be freely adopted by our individual churches from experience of its value, not made any condition of union; and it must probably originate, as everything does in our ranks, from the spontaneous impulse or inspiration of some individual, and grow into use, instead of being wilfully devised by a committee, and adopted by resolution.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

HOPE ON, HOPE EVER.

WALTER MCARTHUR.

YES, my heart is ever hoping
In its house of clay,
As this life unfolding gently
Whispers—"Work to-day."
Life's path seems sometimes strewn with flow'rs
As on a bridal day;
Though joys fade, we shall not miss them,
If we "work to-day."
Work! though grief in sombre hues
Steals across our way,
Soon 'twill vanish—if but truly
We will "work to-day."
Sweetest music glads our pathway,
Then away it floats;
Are our souls no better, think you,
For its holy notes?
Should our spirits droop, and weary,
Overcome by grief,
Work! oh, brother! labour nobly
If you seek relief.
Never once our duty failing,
Strange though seem God's laws—
Light will dawn, as on we labour
For our holy cause.
Then, when lengthen out the shadows,
And Earth's light grows dim,
Work, in other spheres, my brother,
We may find for Him.

THE EMPEROR'S ERROR.

A HISTORICAL INCIDENT.

II.

A FEW weeks passed, and the routed herd was by the Beresina. Scores were laid by want and frost on the frigid ground which blunted the bayonet and refused them even a grave. Napoleon dismounted at a watch-fire, and was astonished at the good order and even cheeriness of this one group in the core of so much havoc and confusion. A sergeant spoke up:—
"Sire, we owe our preservation to David Blum; his exhaustless energy fed our waning stock; his courage inspired us when the lancers rode us down, and by his foresight we are alone never out of food and fuel."

"David, my soldier," said the Cæsar, in that voice which made thrones quiver, and yet, at such moments as this, could be sweetly winning, "Your place is ready for you in my Old Guard."

At the same time he unclasped a silver cross from his uniform, and handed it to the soldier "by reluctance," who, wrestling with the red leaven of hatred still fermenting within him and yet fascinated by the respectful fear universally emanating from "the fortunate Captain," sternly replied, though his features relaxed:—

"Sire, I am an Alsatian Jew, and can accept no reward, promotion, or decoration, for that would be to receive the blood-money of my family, disgraced by your shameful Decree of the 17th March!"

"Ah?" the sovereign observed discontentedly, "I have heard some such sad complaints before." Then he added curtly, "It was an error, but we can annul and can repair." The cloud remained on his brow, however, and a deep passion lined its heretofore placid surface.

As if to escape an important reflection which would then have been a superfluous woe, he broke away, sprang to horse and galloped on in the van of his tattered staff.

David saluted with one hand, whilst the worn thin finger of the other closed on the legionnaire's cross. He had been face to face with the tiger, and had almost pardoned when he had feared he would revenge. His head was full of singing reproaches, his heart throbbed violently, and his very brain seemed in suspense. His comrades flocked round to congratulate him, but hardly aroused him from his dreamings. But imminent danger, fully awakened him—the Cossacks were upon the fugitives again. They faced about and fought. Nearly all that rear guard was slain and David was wounded. He had so valiantly led the defence that he was assumed to be an officer, and as such spared for imprisonment.

In an Ural mine he was immured eight and twenty years and, nevertheless, when he was told that he was "free" and limped out into the open air, and, after one gush of gratitude at seeing the sky and earth, felt the extent of his isolation, he wished to return to the depths and to his keepers whips.

The chance sound "France!" thawed his bronzed soul, for he had been born somewhere—he had lived and loved in one vale of this cruel world, and, say what these barbarians might of the Jew, he had a country. With unflagging courage, he crossed Europe, his support a staff and the offerings of kindly hearts—his native land the polestar.

One December morning, in 1840, he reached home. The old, battered wreck had drifted back to the shipyard where it had been launched, gay, slight, trim and adored. Everybody said this was the place, but he could not recognise it. The garden where he had plucked flowers for Sarah was built upon by the smoky factory. For the first time since too long a tear of regret moistened his eyes, bleared with the coppery fumes of the mine. All the faces were new to him, and his very name was harsh on their lips. They eyed him suspiciously and askant. He prayed on a kinsman's grave, which the mill owners had spared.

He turned away to go to Paris, where the Emperor's funeral was to be celebrated. There he might meet some old comrades.

He arrived on the 14th, cold, fatigued, but too benumbed to feel pain. He wandered the streets, and heard men prate of the Imperial glories which would ever gild France, but not a drop of wine was poured out for him. If the rank and file but foresaw how far from grateful are the countrymen to whom their breasts were the bulwark, men would sooner take up vipers than arms. The old veteran slept on a theatre doorstep; was colder than Siberia!

He was musing that one man should have had the power to blight a hundred thousand households, when the shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!" startled him. The multitude were thronging to the Hotel des Invalides to offer homage to their idolised hero. Dread, envy, enmity, all had faded in every class, and nothing but the potent voice of history was left to speak over the giant's grave.

The sublime spectacle revolutionised David Blum's ideas. Suddenly he felt pity for the unhappy man who had been wedded to a caittiff mistress whom he despised, and who had been childless, and then to a noble lady who thought him honoured by her feelingless hand, and who gave him the shadow of a son. He remembered the Emperor's emotion when he had, like man to man, told him, "I was in error!" and bowing unto the demi-god's misfortune, he offered him oblivion of his life-long grudge. "We meet for the last time, O Emperor. You come from heart-breaking confinement, and the humble Jew from his living burial. In a land of justice, liberty and tolerance, some day—though heaven only knows—a Jew may sit in the judgment seat, for evil laws are but dogs that snarl their day, and freedom, tolerance, and fair dealing are eternal. The bells, drums and clarions sounded. A myriad of voices thundered: "Behold him here, amongst those he loved!"

Under the Arch of the Triumph of the Star ("Oh, Lucifer, pride of the morning, how hast thou fallen!") appeared the triumphal hearse, belted about by his mutilated generals, bedizened with famous names, draped with war-flags, craped and bristling with spread-eagles. David fell on his knees and prayed. His soul experienced a blessed calm. He swooned away as the cortège passed, fell against one of the triumphal columns.

Among the numerous casualties chronicled in the Moniteur may be read: "An old man was found senseless in the Champs Elysées. It is not known whether he was injured in the crush or perished from cold or want. Transported to the Beaujon Hospital, he died in a few hours. He was thence removed to the Morgue as he had no papers on him. In his clenched hand was a small parcel containing a cross of the Legion of Honour with Napoleon's effigy, and a printed paper so old and worn as to be hardly decipherable as the 'Décret impériale concernant les Juifs' of March 17th, 1878."—Jewish World.

ELOQUENT SILENCE.

A TOUCHING little incident occurred in the metropolis half a century ago. A popular writer was hurrying through the streets, breasting the driving sleet, when he saw a man sitting upon the pavement and leaning against a wall. The face was haggard and pinched. The few rags barely covered the blue limbs. But no hand was held out. He passed, and re-passed, and passed again, and at last impatiently and half-angrily said, "Why don't you beg?" With an eloquence never to be forgotten, the man lifted his head, slowly drew back the tattered sleeve, and said, "Is it beg, did ye say? Look at me hollow cheeks. Look at the bones pricking through me skin. Why, man, its begging I am with a hundred tongues." The mutest appeals often indicate the deepest wants, and speak most powerfully to the heart. The misery begs, the ignorance begs, the loneliness begs, each with a "hundred tongues."

KING'S LYNN: PRESENTATION TO MR. JOHN WINGATE AIKIN.

ON Friday evening a meeting of an interesting nature took place in the Free Christian Church. The objects—to hear a lecture and to present an address. Mr. R. Blackie occupied the chair. A lecture on "National Characteristics as displayed in Music and Song," was delivered by Mr. A. P. Allen. The subject was illustrated by selections from the songs of Germany, France, Russia, Turkey, Austria, Egypt, Greece, and Servia, which were admirably rendered by the choir.

Mr. ALLEN remarked that it was unknown to himself, and had escaped the notice of the other members of the church till quite lately, that their friend Mr. John Wingate Aikin had been amongst them so long. Chattering, however, one day with him respecting the jubilee of the Rev. William Gaskell's ministry, Mr. Aikin quite accidentally said it was rather singular that he should have been in Lynn and in membership with their church just fifty years himself. To me it then seemed that we ought to testify to him our love and respect, and I at once communicated with the committee, who very warmly supported my suggestion and this evening's meeting is the result. Mr. Allen then read the address. It stated that the members of the Free Christian Church had great pleasure in presenting Mr. Aikin with an address on the jubilee of his membership of the church. They found in him a true representative of his accomplished relatives, Dr. Aikin and the poet, Anna Laetitia Barbauld. They especially recognised in him a man who had quietly and unostentatiously been the bearer of their standard for the last fifty years, and consequently had much to contend with, arising from the ignorance and prejudice which always surround fixed creeds. At the same time it must be a pleasure to him to know that the thought which he had so steadily adhered to is fast becoming the thought of multitudes in Christendom, and their prayer was that the spirit which had pioneered him in his steady course may also bind them in the same beautiful thought of the Divine Spirit. They one and all most heartily congratulated him, and sincerely trusted he would long be spared to worship with them.

A letter was read from the Rev. Charles C. Coe, F.R.G.S., of Bolton, to the effect that he hesitated whether he should not make a pilgrimage into Norfolk, in order that he might have the pleasure of seeing the church at Lynn and do honour to his friend Mr. Aikin. He was indeed glad that they should have been moved to testify to his constant attachment to the cause of liberal Christianity.

The Rev. J. T. Marriott desired also by letter to avail himself of the opportunity of joining in their jubilee congratulations of Mr. Aikin.

The Rev. BARNARD GISBY (the pastor) said: I wish to say that I acquiesce in every one of the sentiments of respect and appreciation and love for Mr. Aikin that have been expressed in this address and otherwise to-night. I esteem Mr. Aikin as a noble man and a loyal Christian, and value his friendship most highly, as I believe all do whose privilege it is to enjoy it. In the history of all churches and communities there are distinctive and representative names, and in our church the name of Aikin is one we might well glory in possessing in record and in membership. Among the great families which in England and America during several generations have added lustre to our faith, and glory to our church by their devotion, and learning, and genius, and worth, the family of the Aikins occupies a foremost place.

Mr. AIKIN, in reply, said: My esteemed friends, permit me to say a word or two relating to the kind expression of your respect which it has been my happiness to receive. Although intimation had reached me of your kind intention to present to me an address of congratulation on my having reached my fiftieth year of membership with this society, I was altogether unacquainted with the fact that this was to be done on Friday evening last, or I should have been present, not that I felt any such manifestation of feeling was deserved in any way by me, but in order that I might have shown to you how deeply I value your esteem, and how grateful I am for your good wishes and the loving intention which I feel guided you all in this matter. As far as I can see there has been nothing in my position, character, or life, which merits the regard you have for me. The tendency of my family life has only revealed itself in me, and I do not see how I could well have acted or lived differently, as far as my religious opinions are concerned, than I have done. In me my faith has not been the result of the law of evolution in my mind, the faith adopted after long inquiry, and mental conflict, as in many cases in which congratulation is deserved and may justly be awarded, but the faith of my hope and family for generations, simply asserting its power over my mind and life, and therefore I think not a matter of such praise in me, as you have with so much sympathy conferred. I can only express to you my sincere acknowledgement for what I did not expect nor I fear deserve, and assure you that while my faith came to me as a heritage from my fathers, it has been none the less sustaining and consoling to my personal life, than it frequently proves to be to those who adopt it in preference to some former faith as the best interpretation of conduct and duty and worship, and as representing the most elevating ideas and views of the divine relationship to, and government of, humanity and the world. My sincere desire and hope is that our principles, in so far as they are good and true and ennobling, may prevail, and that multitudes may be brought to a knowledge of the truth, and be led to consecrate themselves to heavenly service.

MONTHLY MEETING OF PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS OF WARWICKSHIRE AND THE NEIGHBOURING COUNTIES.

THE annual meeting was held at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, on Friday last; the Rev. H. W. CROSSKEY in the chair. Among the ministers were the following:—Dr. Laird Collier, Boston, U.S.; J. Gordon, Kenilworth; J. Robberds, Cheltenham; H. Ierson, London; J. Black, Stockport; R. A. Armstrong, Nottingham; Geo. St. Clair, R. R. Rodgers, J. Cuckson, B. Wright, J. Alsop, and W. R. Smyth, Birmingham; E. Myers, Shrewsbury; M. Gibson, Dudley; D. Maginnis, Stourbridge; W. Cochrane, Cradley; W. E. Mellone, Kidderminster; T. B. Broadrick, Lye; J. Dean, Tamworth; P. Dean, Walsall; W. C. Walters, Whitchurch; C. D. Badland, Derby; H. M'Kean, Oldbury; J. W. Lake, Leamington; C. C. Nutter, Banbury.

The following summary of the proceedings of the year was presented and adopted:—"In the course of the year meetings have been held at Birmingham, Newhall Hill, and Church of the Messiah; Cradley, Evesham, Stourbridge, Walsall, and Whitchurch, with an average attendance of seventeen ministers, including three Congregational ministers, who took part in the proceedings. At four of the meetings sermons were preached. The following were the preachers and their subjects:—Rev. J. Alsop, "Love to God the Main Element of Christian Piety;" Rev. R. Collyer, "Starting for Canaan and stopping at Haran;" Rev. J. Robberds, "The Practical Importance of Truth;" Rev. W. C. Walters, "The Law of Evolution in Religious Truth." At the remaining three meetings papers were read, the readers and their subjects being as follows:—Rev. C. D. Badland, "Spinoza;" Rev. D. Laird Collier, "Liberty plus Organisation;" Rev. W. E. Mellone, "American Unitarianism." On all these occasions the ministers were hospitably entertained, and in most instances were met by a considerable number of lay friends, and various subjects relating to the progress of liberal religious principles were discussed in a friendly manner.

The meeting adopted resolutions expressive of its high appreciation of the character and services of three brethren who died in the course of the year, viz., Revs. T. E. Poynting, John Colston, and D. Griffith, and a resolution of sympathy with the Rev. Henry McKean under the heavy loss he had sustained by the death of his wife.

At the April meeting in reference to the Turkish war, a resolution was adopted expressing disapproval of any attempt to plunge this country into war, and declaring that the preservation of peace was as consistent with the promotion of our national welfare as it was necessary to the general interests of civilisation. The meeting recorded with regret the resignation of membership by the Rev. J. C. Odgers, who has been obliged to resign his charge of Evesham and remove to a warmer climate on account of the delicate state of his wife's health.

One member has been added to the roll within the year, viz., the Rev. Chas. Denman, Oakamoor, Staffordshire. The meeting at present consists of thirty-two members.

Its officers are the Rev. Henry McKean, Oldbury, hon. treasurer; and the Rev. D. Maginnis, Old Parsonage, Stourbridge, hon. sec.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. J. C. Hirst, late of Scarborough, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation from the congregation of Bayshill Chapel, Cheltenham, to be their minister, in succession to the late Rev. David Griffith, and will commence his pulpit duties on Sunday next, the 15th inst.—We are glad to be able to state that Mr. J. S. Baily has so far recovered his health as to be able to accept the unanimous invitation of the congregation at Christ Church, Bridgewater, and purposes to commence his ministry the first Sunday in January.

BIRMINGHAM: LAWRENCE-STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL. On Sunday afternoon Mr. A. W. Wills distributed the prizes at these schools; 229 scholars had gained them. The prizes were awarded for attendance and good conduct. They are of four classes—the special, the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd. To obtain a special prize 100 marks must be gained; the first, 95; the second, 90; the third, 80. To secure a special prize the scholar must have been present early every time the school was open in the year, and his conduct must have been satisfactory; no excuse is taken for absence or for being late. 101 scholars received special prizes; 62 first class; 23 second class; 43 third class. The prizes included certificates, clothing, books, and for the "special," in addition, the school medal. Among the special were eight scholars who received the bronze medal; one of these had gained medals for six years in succession, two others for five years, and five for four years. The medal is a beautiful work, designed and struck by Mr. Joseph Moore, the eminent medallist. Each medal bears on the rim the name of the recipient and the year in which it was given. Thanks were heartily given to the donors of prizes, to Mr. Moore for his gift of medals, to Mrs. and Miss Russell for the preparation and apportionment of the prizes, and to Mr. Wills for his services.

BELFAST: HOPETON-STREET.—The quarterly social meeting of the teachers was held last Friday night, and about 20 of our friends sat down to tea. A hymn was sung, and the Rev. J. C. Street offered prayer. On a motion by Mr. Alex. Robb, seconded by the secretary, a cordial vote of welcome was tendered our new minister and superintendent, the Rev. David Thompson and his wife. The motion was supported by the Rev. J. C. Street, who delivered to the minister-elect an earnest and heart-felt charge. The motion was also supported by Mr. Ed. G. David, and carried by acclamation. Mr. Thompson feelingly replied, thanking the friends for this cordial welcome, and asking their co-operation. In his remarks he stated the school and all its organisations are being well supported. A Band of Hope has been established; a night school (which meets three times a week), a sewing class, and a savings' bank are all in a flourishing condition. After transacting some other business, the remainder of the evening was devoted to social enjoyment, songs, readings, and recitations. After passing a vote of thanks to the ladies who presided at the tables, a most enjoyable evening was brought to a close by the friends joining hands and singing "Auld Lang Syne."

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—A course of four lectures has just been given in the Town Hall, Bootle, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams. The attendance has averaged ninety. Each lecture has been followed by questions, and the discussion on each occasion has been conducted in good spirit. The lecture on "Jesus Christ" elicited a long debate, and both it and the debate were reported at length in the Bootle Times, a paper which has given an excellent summary of each of the lectures.

COLNE.—A controversy is going on in the Colne and Nelson Times on "Eternal Punishment." It originated in a reported lecture by the Rev. William Matthews, who ably replies to objections and substantiates the position taken in the lecture.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Cambridge Independent Press says: "We feel certain that many of our Liberal friends will regret to hear that Mr. Herbert Burrows is leaving Cambridge, having been promoted to a more lucrative post in the Metropolis. During his residence in Cambridge he has rendered valuable services to the Liberal cause. Mr. Burrows has been an energetic supporter of the various religious and philanthropic movements in the town, and leaves behind him a large circle of acquaintances who will greatly miss his zealous co-operation. We are confident we are but expressing the sentiments of the more active members of the Liberal party, in wishing Mr. Burrows every prosperity." Mr. Burrows is widely known in our household of faith as the secretary of the Cambridge Free Christian Church.

HIGH-STREET CHAPEL, ILKESTON.—The anniversary services in connection with the above place of worship took place on Sunday last, when two excellent sermons were preached by the Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A., of Derby. The attendance was fair, and the collections about as usual. On Monday evening there was a public tea and entertainment, when a number of the members of the congregation and their friends sat down to an excellent repast. After the tea a really first-class entertainment was given by friends from Nottingham and Ilkeston, when the room was quite full with an attentive and appreciative audience. Such was the excellence of the respective artists that encores were freely given, especially to the Misses Lymn, Miss Perks, Miss Hawley, and Master Paling.

HULME: DOMESTIC MISSION.—On Saturday evening last a grand concert was given in the girls' schoolroom on behalf of the tea-urn and crockery fund. There was a lengthy and select programme. Besides those of our own immediate friends, the services of the Cross-street Chapel Choral Society (under the conductorship of Mr. Little), and of Mrs. Warren and Mr. Corker, were kindly and gratuitously given. There was a large attendance, and the frequent and hearty bursts of applause attested alike the high quality of the performances and the thorough appreciation of the audience. The Rev. James Harrop presided.

LIVERPOOL SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—A very pleasant meeting of this society was held in the Mount Pleasant School-rooms on the evening of Friday, the 29th inst. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. Geo. Eyre Evans, superintendent of the Renshaw-street Sunday School, and the evening was spent in an interesting conversation on the condition of each Sunday school in the Association, and on points of Sunday school work, the speakers being the Chairman, Mr. Ellison, Mr. J. A. Green, the Revs. J. E. Odgers, M. A. F. Summers, C. J. Perry, B.A., S. Fletcher Williams, and H. W. Hawkes, Mr. Hawkes giving an earnest and impressive address on the need of a deeper religious tone in Sunday school work, and urging the importance of each teacher engaging in prayer with the class. The meeting opened and closed with prayer by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams and the Rev. J. E. Odgers.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The Social Union was held last Monday evening, there being a full attendance. The subject (which aroused a spirited conversation, and in which nearly all took part) was "The Law of Supply and Demand."—Mr. Wright's two lectures on "Thomas Carlyle" are reported in the Leicester papers.

LEEDS: MILL HILL CHAPEL.—On Sunday evening our minister delivered the second discourse on "Difficulties of Belief in God," specially referring to the mystery of Temptation and Sin. After graphically describing instances of sin and wrong that seemed irreconcilable with the existence of an Infinite Goodness, the various attempted explanations were reviewed. All the pleas of free-will, the necessity of evil, &c., did not overcome the difficulty. The churches agreed that the path of sin was easy, and the path of right difficult, and goodness seemed like a huge fortress which few attained, while many fell by the way. God's ways and thoughts are not our ways and thoughts, and we cannot make all clear. If we try to gain some few rays of light, we shall discern in the world from its prime till now a growth and increase in goodness, and a general progress onward. Large congregations are attending these candid statements of religious difficulties.

MOUNTPOTTINGER.—A social meeting of the Bible class, which has been conducted by the minister during the past four years, was held on Monday evening in the classroom. There were 46 present. After tea a varied and interesting programme was gone through, which gave much satisfaction to all.—On Wednesday evening the Rev. W. S. Smith, of Antrim, gave a lecture to the members of the Mutual Improvement Society on "Dr. Priestley." The lecture was much appreciated by the audience, and a cordial vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Smith.—The Rev. D. Thompson preached a sermon on Sunday morning on "A Missionary Faith," after which a collection was taken on behalf of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

OLDHAM.—On Sunday, December 1st, the Rev. C. C. Coe preached in the chapel, both morning and evening, to good congregations.—On the Tuesday evening the Rev. P. M. Higginson, M.A., of Styal, delivered a lecture to the teachers and friends in the schoolroom, on "Amusements in Sunday Schools." The chair was occupied by the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., and there was a fair attendance. At the close a hearty vote of thanks were accorded to the lecturer and chairman.

PAISLEY.—The Paisley Daily Express reports a lecture on "Disestablishment" by the Rev. William Bennett, the lecturer having been called forth by a recent somewhat half-hearted address on the subject by Mr. Holms, M.P., for the borough.

TODMORDEN.—The first entertainment in connection with the Band of Hope was held last Saturday evening. There was a crowded audience, nearly 600 being present. A very interesting and instructive programme was gone through by the members. Mr. John Lord, of Waterside, presided, and Mr. Samuel Ingham, of Pavement, addressed the meeting. The Band of Hope in connection with the school was formed last October, and now numbers 226 members, out of 346 scholars.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ERRATUM.—Under the heading "Keighley," last week, the words "Mill Hill Chapel" were, by mistake, transposed. The Service of Song referred to was in preparation by the Sunday-school children at Queen-street Mission Room, Keighley.

AN IMPOSTOR.

To the Editors.—Let me caution your readers against a rogue who is just now busily engaged in getting money from a too sympathetic Unitarian public. He is a Dutchman, short of stature, and short-sighted. He is now "wanted" by several persons whom he has favoured with his visits. I trace him on his way from Derby to Sheffield, and from Sheffield to Manchester. No doubt he is continuing his successful tour in some of the neighbouring towns.—Yours truly,

J. T. MARRIOTT.

SCHOOLS FOR OUR CHILDREN.

To the Editors.—Reading in your last number Mr. Vancesmith's letter, I could not help coming to the conclusion that the gentleman is altogether mistaken. Mr. Dobson advocates—as far as I can understand—a school where the teaching of the principal truths of the Unitarian Church shall form part of the curriculum. Now Mr. Vancesmith says in his letter that Mr. Briggs, and he himself, have endeavoured for the last twelve months to establish just such a school. Words must either have a meaning, or they need not be written at all. In Messrs. Briggs and Vancesmith's prospectus—which I have before me—I read thus: "In regard to the very important question of religious teaching, Messrs. Briggs and Vancesmith do not themselves undertake doctrinal teaching of any kind, &c. Arrangements are made by which the services of a clergyman of the Church of England, or of a Nonconformist minister, as preferred, may be secured for any special doctrinal teaching which may be desired." Now, I do not think that this is "just such a school as Mr. Dobson assumes to be much wanted." In fact, I know that he wishes not for a mixed school, where boys squabble about their differences in religious opinion, but for a purely Unitarian high-class school, where, as stated before, religious instruction shall form part of the curriculum. That Brighton would just be the place for such a school is beyond question. In fact, the advantages of Brighton are such that there are here nearly 400 established schools, representing every fraction and share of religious opinion except—the Unitarian.—Yours truly, Brighton, Dec. 9, 1878. A. DE WASGINDT.

PRIZES FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

In response to our paragraph on this subject in our last week's issue, Mr. Wade wishes us to remind our correspondent of the catalogue of books recommended by the Sunday School Association, in addition to the catalogue of books published by them, where he will find exactly what he wants for children of all ages. On application to the rooms, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, these catalogues, and every information, would be most cheerfully given. Especially does he recommend for the objects of our correspondent—"The Gift of Life," "Dwellers in Our Gardens," "Footprints," "The Daisy Root," "Phil's Mistake," "Rosy's Three Homes," "Ida Mayhew," and for younger children, "The Cousins," "Mamma's Return," "Willie's Birthday Stories," and "Young Days" (3 vols.).

COMING WEEK.

BLACKPOOL.—On Wednesday, a Christmas Tree.

FLOWERY FIELD.—On Thursday, at 3, opening of the new church by the Rev. Charles Beard, B.A. Afterwards a soiree.

MANCHESTER: LOWER MOSLEY-STREET SCHOOL.—On Sunday afternoon, a Sunday-school Teachers' Experience Meeting will be held. Mr. John Heys will open the proceedings.

MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Tuesday, Beard Memorial Meeting, when Mr. Henry Harwood, M.A., will read a paper on "The Duty of Christian Churches in times of General Depression."—On Wednesday, first concert of the Cross-street Choral Society.

STALYBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture, at 6.30, by the Rev. G. H. Vance, B.D., on "Inspiration."

YORK.—On Tuesday and Wednesday, a bazaar.

Births.

WASHINGTON.—On the 8th inst., at 11, Lamb-street, Ardwick, the wife of Mr. James Washington, of a daughter.

WILSON.—On the 6th inst., at 1, Charles-street, Brighton, the wife of Mr. F. T. Wilson, of a son.

Deaths.

BRUCE.—On the 27th ult., at her residence, The Farm, Belfast, Jane Elizabeth, widow of the late Rev. W. Bruce, aged 79 years.

BURGESS.—On the 30th ult., at Battle, Rowland Burgess, of 43, Market-street, Brighton, aged 40 years.

GUY.—On the 8th inst., at his residence, Belle Vue Nursery, Ringwood, Mr. Aaron Guy, aged 61 years.

TAYLOR.—On the 9th inst., at his 79th year, Edward Taylor, Old Hall, Stand, Whitefield, formerly of Outwood, Manchester.

NEW WELLS, WAKEFIELD. ESTABLISHED 1772.

S. HOLDSWORTH & SONS,
CABINET MAKERS, UPHOLSTERERS,
AND
GENERAL HOUSE FURNISHERS
ONE OF THE LARGEST STOCKS IN THE KINGDOM.

Terms—Net Cash. All Goods Delivered Carriage Free.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, December 13, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—921.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Doing and Saying	452
American Notes	452
Thoughts on Religion	452
Rev. Wm. Mellor and The Rock	453
Christmas, 1878	453
Christmas Day	454
Letter and Spirit	454
Baron Baldarsi	455
Fireside Readings—The First Christmas Gift	455
Rip Van Winkle in the Far West	455
Curiosities	456
Flowerly Field—Opening of new church	456
Whitchurch Free Christian Church	456
The Beard Memorial Union	456
Consistory of the Hungarian Unitarians	457
Manchester Domestic Mission	457
Glossop: Welcome to the Rev. W. Harrison	457
News of our Churches	458

NOTICE.

As Christmas Day falls on Wednesday next, all news should arrive on Monday, and advertisements on Tuesday morning.

NOW READY.

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC.

Tuck and gilt edges, with diary	s. d.
Pelt case, red edges, "	1 0
Cloth, red edges, "	0 9
Cloth, blank paper	0 6
Paper cover	0 3

Orders should be sent to JOHN PHILLIPS, at once, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester.

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—CHRISTMAS DAY.—A SERVICE OF SONG, suited to the day, by the children and the choir. Service at 10.45 a.m. Special Offertory. All Seats Free.

UPPER BROOK STREET FREE CHURCH MUSICAL VESPER SERVICE (Christmas Thanksgiving), on Sunday evening, December 22nd, at 6.30.

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday next, the Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT will preach.—There will be Service at 11 o'clock on Wednesday, being Christmas Day.

FLOWERY FIELD CHURCH.

CONTINUATION OF OPENING SERVICES.

On Sunday, December 22nd, the Opening Services will be continued. Morning at 10.45; evening at 6.30. The Rev. T. R. ELLIOTT will conduct the Devotional Service, and the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., will preach, morning and evening.

December 29th.—The Rev. CHAS. HARGREVE, M.A., will preach, morning and evening.

The Collections on this and the following Sunday will be devoted to the ordinary expenses of the Church.

STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

On New Year's Day a DEVOTIONAL CONFERENCE MEETING will be held, at seven p.m. Several ministers and laymen are expected to take part. All who sympathise are requested to aid by their presence this attempt to promote a greater warmth of devotion amongst us.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, WHITCHURCH.

Previously advertised	£107 1s. 6d.	£ s. d.
Mrs. Charlton, Chester		5 0 0
Mrs. Wallace, Evesham		1 0 0
Mrs. Kempson, Leicester		1 0 0
Misses Atkinson, Hampstead		1 0 0
Fred. Collier, London		1 0 0
Miss Hughes, Birmingham		0 10 0

The Rev. W. Carey Walters desires to thank all who have kindly sent articles to the sale of work, and all contributors to the fund for the extinction of the debt, and begs to inform them that the Church is now entirely free from debt, and sufficient money is in hand for necessary improvements.

OLD MEETING, GREAT YARMOUTH.

APPEAL FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION.

Owing to the great and continued increase in the attendance of children at this School, together with the want of accommodation for conducting with efficiency and convenience the social and public work of the Church, the congregation feel themselves compelled to enlarge the present schoolroom.

As the congregation have not at their command sufficient means to provide the whole of the estimated cost, they are under the necessity of soliciting subscriptions from all those who are in sympathy with the religious education of the young, and who are desirous of obtaining in our respective towns all requisite facilities for the teaching and practical application of the principles and aims of Unitarian Christianity.

Subscriptions will be received by the following gentlemen, Members of the Committee of Management:

SIR THOMAS B. BEEVOR, BART., Chairman,

20, Regent road, Great Yarmouth.

JOHN LEACH, Hon. Treasurer,

Market-place, Great Yarmouth.

CHARLES RUMFOLD, Jun., Hon. Secretary,

4, Dene-side, Great Yarmouth.

All subscriptions received will be acknowledged by the Secretary through the post. Amount received to this date, £48. 17s. 2d.

26th November, 1878.

DOB LANE NEW CHAPEL.

The Building Committee urgently appeal for further assistance. The funds are still inadequate for the work in hand, and the Chapel has to be opened free from debt.

HALLIWELL THOMAS, Pastor.

HARRY RAWSON, Trustee.

LUKE POLLITT, Treasurer.

JOHN F. ALLEN, Secretary, 522, Oldham Road, Newton Heath.

The Committee thankfully acknowledge the following donations:—

John Edward Taylor, London (2nd subscription)	£ s. d.
Joseph Lupton, Leeds	3 3 0
James Seaton, Manchester (per H. R.)	2 0 0
William Hough, Salford	0 10 6

MINISTRY TO THE POOR.

The Mission is characteristically Christian and unsectarian. It is not an almsgiving institution, but during many years of quiet labour has devoted itself to acquiring a large experience and a considerable personal acquaintance amongst our poor "neighbours."

This winter, however, it is quite impossible for the Missionaries not to feel obliged to give food, and clothing, and firing, to relieve the terrible needs of those whom they visit.

The Committee have made arrangements for a regular and increasing distribution of good stores and cooked food, clothes, and materials.

It is a principle of the Society to discourage indiscriminate alms. While they know no distinction between "neighbours" who are in want, they endeavour to give such gifts only where and in such a manner that they may afford really healthy relief and help to body and mind.

For this special effort the Committee earnestly beg for immediate subscriptions.

Money, or clothing, or materials, or orders on shops for such things, may be sent to any of the undersigned.

During the illness of Rev. S. A. Stemthal, the Secretary, to

Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE, Treasurer, 26, George-street,

Manchester; or to

Rev. J. HARROP, 3, Poynton-street, Greenhill-street,

Greenheys; or to

Rev. B. WALKER, 3, Franklin-street, Rochdale Road.

ADVERTISED	DISTRESS FUND.	£ s. d.
S. L. Helm		85 0 0
J. Williams (Stockport)		5 0 0
J. S. D.		2 0 0
Clerks		1 15 0
Embsen-street Day School		1 7 6
Miss Hudson		0 10 0
Miss Worthington		5 0 0
G. Westermann		0 7 6
R. Potter		1 1 0
J. Leister		5 0 0
C. Tafel		2 0 0
W. Evans		2 0 0
Jas. McConnel		5 0 0
Mrs. Penrose		2 0 0
C. E. Schwann		5 0 0
Memorial Hall Trustees		20 0 0
Mrs. Behrens		5 0 0
Silas Leigh, Esq.		10 0 0
Mrs. Booth		10 0 0
R. Hilditch, Esq.		5 0 0
		£174 1 0

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, BOLTON.

AN APPEAL.

The Committee of the above Church have entered into negotiations for the purchase of the Lark-street Temperance Hall. For this purpose, and for needful alterations, the sum of £900 will be required, and the Committee appeal to all friends of Free Religious Thought to aid them in the work they have undertaken. The Congregation from its commencement has been entirely self-supporting. The Sunday school is doing a good and useful work in a neighbourhood where a school is much needed. It was opened in August, 1873, when it commenced with 12 scholars; now it numbers 146.

Towards this sum the members have raised £300. The following persons have kindly consented to receive Subscriptions, which will be acknowledged through the columns of the Unitarian Herald:

Mrs. Stephen Winkworth, Ravenswood, Heaton, Bolton.
J. P. Thomasson, Esq., Woodside, Heaton, Bolton.
Rev. H. Shaen Solly, M.A., Padiham.
Rev. W. Carey Walters, Whitchurch, Salop.
Mr. Bernard Dawson, The Laurels, Malvern Link.
Mr. Herbert V. Mills, Memorial Hall, Albert Sq., Manchester.

WANTED, a trustworthy Plain COOK, not under 25; also a strong, willing HOUSEMAID.—Address Mrs. W., 38, Monkgate, York.

WANTED, in March next, an experienced Certificated MISTRESS, for a Mixed School, at Sale. Apply by letter, stating age and particulars of experience, "Z," Box 633, Post Office, Manchester.

PUPIL TEACHER.—WANTED, at the Port-land British Boys' Schools, a PUPIL TEACHER, to begin teaching after Christmas holidays, and to take first or second year's papers at the end of January, 1879.—Apply to Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, 7, Regents Park Villas, Gloucester Gate, London, N.W.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!"

And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Pretty bindings. Price 6d.

Publishers: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., London.

* * Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—

25 BOOKS FOR 12s. 6d.

If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News," for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

1879. { DIARIES, ALMANACKS, { 1879.
CHRISTMAS CARDS, best designs,
and great variety. A large lot of SCRIB-
BLING PAPER at 6d. per lb.

JOHNSON & RAWSON, 89, Market-street, Manchester.

THE UNITARIAN MAGAZINE,

Monthly. Price Twopence. Orders to be sent to Mr. R. STEWART, 38, Annet-street, Govanhill, Glasgow.

"Such a magazine, if it could be widely diffused, would be the best possible missionary of our Liberal Religious Faith throughout Scotland."—Inquirer.

Hirst, Smyth, and Son, 137, Gower-street, London.

NEW PARLOUR DRAMA FOR CHRISTMAS.

Now ready, in cloth, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

THE PRINCE'S TRIUMPH:

A Drama for Home Representation.

N.B.—New Books at 1d. in the shilling discount for cash, free by post. Parcels of £2 and upwards at 25 per cent discount.

Now ready. In small 8vo, pp. xvi.—240. Cloth, red edges.

Price 2s. 6d. (to Congregations, 1s. 8d.)

A BOOK OF PRAYER: IN THIRTY ORDERS

OF WORSHIP. With additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. Edited by R. CROMPTON JONES.

Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUITSFORD.—BOARD-

ING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—For Prospectus apply to Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, Principal.

SCHOOLS FOR OUR CHILDREN.—

SANDERIDA HOUSE SCHOOL, St. Leonards-on-Sea, REOPENS January 21st.—Prospectuses, &c., by return of post.

SEASIDE EDUCATION FOR GIRLS.—

DYSART HOUSE, CLEVEDON.—Miss E. MARTIN'S Pupils will RE-ASSEMBLE on Monday, January 20th, 1879.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—Miss JEFFERY

receives as Boarders GIRLS attending the Bath High School, to whom she gives her personal care and supervision.—9, Norfolk Crescent.

CROYDON.—School for Girls.—Miss Biddell,

who has passed in honours the Cambridge and Kensington Examinations, receives Boarders: home comforts: terms 40 to 60 guineas.—2, Ailsa Villas, Wellesley Road, next Free Christian Church. Half-term commences November 4th.

BRIGHTON: UNITARIAN COLLEGE.—

This High-class School will be OPENED on January 21st, 1879. Only Academic Honourenment will be on the Educational staff. The Religious Instruction given in the School will be in full accordance with the principles of Unitarianism. Referee: The Rev. T. R. Dobson, Minister of the Unitarian Church, Brighton.—For prospectus, terms, and testimonials, apply to Mr. A. de Wasgindt, temporary, No. 12, Dorset Gardens, Brighton.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL.

For Boys from ten to sixteen years of age: Junior Classes for children under ten years of age. Pupils are now working for the London Matriculation Examinations of June, 1879, and June, 1880. The arrangements of the School permit of some Girls being received with their brothers. The NEXT TERM begins on Wednesday, January 22nd, 1879.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE, Heath Brow, Hampstead, London, N.W.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL,

NOTTINGHAM.

Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., of the Universities of London and Heidelberg, assisted by Mr. G. H. HENSON, University of London, thoroughly prepares Boys for college, the local examinations, or for business. The school possesses an unusually complete provision of apparatus and specimens for the teaching of science. No means is neglected which the experience of fourteen years has shown to conduce to the progress and interest of pupils in their studies. Good cricket ground and playground.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties' Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock

Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE,

39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.

Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE

HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

ARMSTRONG AND RICHARDS, St. Ann's

Place, Manchester. SHIRTS of superior quality, 43s. for half-a-dozen, made to order. Youths' and Boys' Shirts to order.

ARMSTRONG AND RICHARDS, St. Ann's

Place, Manchester. HOSIERS and GLOVERS, &c.

Children's best NOTTINGHAM HOSIERY in great variety.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale.

We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to

24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street

Manchester.

DOING AND SAYING.

The voluntary liberation of slaves proceeds satisfactorily in Cuba.

A complete edition of Shakespeare's plays is being translated into Spanish.

The Bishop of Oxford has declined to allow proceedings to be taken against Canon Carter, Rector of Clever, for alleged Ritualism.

The Rev. Thomas Patrick Hughes, of Peshawur, in the diocese of Lahore, North India, has translated the Scriptures into Pushto, the language of the Afghans.

The Bishop of Durham, being disabled by an incurable complaint from discharging the duties of his office, has resigned his See; but, having some private means (he is a Baring) he will not accept a retiring pension. He has thus shown a proper and generous regard both for his diocese and his successor.

The second and final revision of the New Testament was completed on Friday. There still remains a comparison of their work with that of the American revisers, and the adjustment of some questions which have been reserved till the end, before the English Company can bid farewell to their task.

All the friends of the Rev. Brooke Herford in this country, and they number the whole circle of our Connexion and many beyond, will rejoice with him and his congregation over the good news recorded in our American Notes. We offer them our heartiest congratulations on the extinction of their church debt.

Lord Shaftesbury, in presiding at the Wimborne branch of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, said he believed neither the present nor any future House of Commons would pass a measure to enforce ecclesiastical authority. They might rely upon it there was a great movement in the country, even amongst Conservatives, to get rid of the Establishment altogether, and allow different parties in the church to settle their feuds amongst themselves. Though Protestant in her Prayer Book, the church was far from this in her pulpit teachings.

The vote of the bishops upon the Afghan question is not at all unprecedented in its character. The bishops, as a body, have almost uniformly opposed every measure having for its object the public good and the public liberties, although, we believe, they have not generally cared to throw their influence in favour of war. In 1828 they opposed Roman Catholic relief by 27 to 2; in 1831 they voted against the Reform Bill by 21 to 2; in 1834, against the admission of Dissenters to the Universities by 22 to 2; in 1868, against the Irish Church Bill by 21 to 0. Nine bishops opposed the Corn Law Bill, and we know very well how they have voted on the Burials question. Is comment necessary?

Rev. Mr. Blank, pastor of a church in New Hampshire, delivered a very thorough testimony for the "evangelical scheme" one Sunday, and shortly afterward sought the criticism of one of his most intelligent hearers. "Brother Blank," said the parishioner, "I think you made your points very clearly; I never heard you do better." But the minister detected some latent mischief in the tone of the compliment, and pressed to know precisely what was meant. "Well, to tell the truth, I think there was one little mistake—merely in the name you gave the subject. You called it 'The Great Salvation'; then you clearly made out that only a small part of the human race could be saved. As a plan of salvation, I thought it a failure; but as a scheme of damnation, it was a perfect success. You should have called it 'The Great Damnation.'"

The results, so far as observed, of the Sunday closing legislation in Ireland, which (with respect to England also) may be regarded as tentative, are very narrowly watched. In Waterford, which is one of the exempted spots, it is interesting to find that the Roman Catholic Bishop has exerted his influence in persuading all, or nearly all, of the publicans to close their doors on Sundays. The reports from different parts of the country are not uniform; and the licensed victuallers, who are a well-organised body, finding that their "craft is in danger," very cleverly have set to work to point out discrepancies, and throw dust in the eyes of the public. Yet, making all due allowances, it does sufficiently appear that the drunkenness, which was fast becoming the bane of Ireland, has been appreciably checked by the recent legislation; and that, arguing from statistics of the police offices and magistrates' courts, there is a diminution in the charges of drunkenness to the extent of one-fifth or thereabouts.

In the struggle between Dr. Falk and the Roman Curia our sympathies are all with Dr. Falk, except when he imitates the ways of the Curia in attempting to dodge or coerce it. The Falk laws are believed by many who fear Rome, to be a profound mistake. It seems, however, that this is not to be admitted by the Prussian Government. A motion for some alteration of these laws was brought forward in the Diet last week, but after a speech of Dr. Falk's, was rejected. Dr. Falk based his main argument on this, that the Catholics were not as opponents who had been bound hand and foot, but as those "who still stood upright and would eternally remain so standing." Michael and his angels fought in heaven against the dragon, but not for ever and ever. It is something more than Miltonic or Dantesque, this vision of eternal conflict between Falk and the Pope. It once was believed that the cause of God was his who would do no wrong. But the Christ-child of to-day is the Woolwich Infant; and Dr. Falk will answer his adversary as King John did King Philip—"Here we have war for war—controlment for controlment."

What has become of the national progression of Christianity, or even of the morals of civilisation? We are engaged in seeking to avenge a sentimental insult offered us by the Afghans by vengeance and slaughter. The Lord's Prayer goes apparently for nothing, and Christ's example for nothing. We throw our Christianity and our civilisation to the winds the moment they interfere with our passions. Revenge, with all its cruelty and more than its usual horrors, is the present chosen task of this enlightened nation. The other consequences of our present policy are not to be overlooked. We are expending as a nation over twenty-six millions per annum on the maintenance of our army and navy. Although the greater part of this is spent within our own kingdom, and goes to the general trade of the country, yet it is not the less a frightful and alarming outlay, for it is a burden on the productive energy and resources of the country which must tell against us in the future race for the supply of the world. We are beginning to find out that we compete at a disadvantage owing to the high price of labour, and that the latter is enhanced, or so far caused, by the support of our war plant.

AMERICAN NOTES.

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

THERE is a prospect that the Unitarian Conference recently held in Madison, Wis., will produce results which are important not only to that city, but to the cause of liberal thought in general. Madison, being the seat of the State government and the University, offers an opening in every way worthy the aid of the Unitarian Association. Rev. Jenk. Ll. Jones remained over Sunday, and preached two sermons in the Assembly Chamber. The meetings were largely attended and great enthusiasm manifested. The people are ready and willing to do their part, and are anxious for the early organisation of a permanent society.

BROOKE HERFORD'S CHURCH OUT OF DEBT.

THE Chicago correspondent of the Christian Register writes:—Have you heard the good news from the Church of the Messiah—how a few weeks ago Mr. Herford made an impassioned appeal for money to pay off the church debt, and how his hearers responded with generous subscriptions away up in the thousands, until seventeen thousand was raised towards the twenty thousand which constituted the floating debt? Later in the week, the remaining three thousand was raised, and the Messiah people are radiant. Nothing so hinders the usefulness of churches as this modern habit of indebtedness into which they have fallen. A church which has to spend all its time and strength in extricating itself from money difficulties, can have little heart or opportunity for carrying on its true mission of brotherly love and helpfulness to mankind. Mr. Herford has long felt this, and spoken plainly on the subject many times before, and this time with telling effect.

A WORD FOR THE DESPISED.

A letter of good hope from the Southern States was recently written to a friend in the North by Mrs. Caroline H. Dall, on taking up her residence in Georgetown, O.C.: "I have been here two months, employing sometimes thirteen and always four or five mechanics daily. My house has been open to them all from cellar to garret. I have employed four different colored servants, and, as they sleep out of the house, one of them had my key, every night, that she need not trouble me in the morning. For one week and three days I employed a colored char-woman. She unpacked all my china in the barn, and brought it a long way to the house. Not one article has been broken here; not a pin's head is missing. One pleasant fact beside. Thirty years ago I was well known to this little suburb as an active abolitionist. My return could not be particularly welcome to those who were secessionists at the close of the war. I came back at the moment when every Georgetown lady wished to do her fall cleaning. There is but one char-woman here fit, as she says, to 'work for the 'ristocracy.' What did these ladies do when I came? They one and all refused to call upon their charwoman for any service till I was settled! No wonder she told me with pardonable pride, 'My ladies'll wait—wait a long time.' Should we have done that at the North? And this I ask you to tell, not because it concerns me, but because it concerns them." Mrs. Dall had been warned against the thieving propensities of the coloured people!

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

CRIES FROM THE DEPTHS.

THOMAS STARR KING.

O, if all the loneliness of sorrow fulfilled its purpose, how much more glorious would life be! If the death of each of those we love forced from us an intenser cry towards the Infinite, opened to us the mystery of life which only the startled heart can worthily feel, and disclosed the far-reaching vista of the future world! What a life would this be if we had such a sense of the nearness of God and the reality of the world to come and the parental discipline of heaven as Christianity would inspire, and as the soul's agony in bereavement and wrestle with the problem of death demand! If we were all faithful to that darkness which so dwarfs the ordinary interests of this world, affliction would be the greatest blessing. In exchange for one friend on earth we should get the vision of eternity, the splendour of divine light, a hope sanctified by tears, the assurance of the Infinite Presence.

We lose immensely by our unfaithfulness to the privilege of sorrow. Cry from its depths for the Lord, and his comfort will be ready. The misery of our griefs is that we make no cry. We feel the pain of a ruptured fellowship; we sit in darkness, missing the precious presence borne away; we struggle with our anguish, but we keep our eyes to the earth. We think of God, perhaps, but we do not concentrate all the energies of grief in one intense prayer for his help and peace. If we did, if we brought the soul into the sincerest religious posture and state, we should know, through the answer to that cry, that the beloved one was withdrawn to the depths of a love which this world could not reveal; and if the soul of the departed was prepared by consecration, we should have such a vision of its blessed work and such a joy in the spiritual world, that this world would seem glorious only as the vestibule of that; and if the soul had not begun here devotion to infinite truth and sanctity, we should have the sweet hope in that Providence which fits the discipline of eternity to the heart's deepest need.

Religion is a cry from the depths. The noblest natures among men have been religious ones. No soul of mighty faculties, of sensibilities strong enough to sound the depths, fine enough to feel the heights, of this world mystery and grandeur, has been an indifferent, irreligious soul. They have bowed to the royalty of religious truth, either by their joyful possession of it or by their cry for it. Only the surface of our nature can nourish an atheistic plant; when its deeps are ploughed, the latent seed of faith begins to germinate, and the promise of a piety vigorous and sinewy as the structure of the oak lifts itself above the soil.

Religious belief is an assent to some propositions about this life and about the soul and about the Infinite. Religion itself is a cry from the heart's deeps, from the depths of experience, upwards to a living God. It is in mercy that God stirs those deeps of feeling, sinks us in those depths of discipline, so that our belief may become experience, so that our words of opinion may become a piercing prayer. There is none of us for whom the Father hath not thus, in some way, opened these shafts of gloom and mystery. How many of us are able to say from the experience of the intellect, the conscience, or the heart, "I am not alone, because the Father is with me."

REV. W. MELLOR AND "THE ROCK."

IN its issue of November 15th, The Rock devoted a leading article to the refutation, from an Evangelical point of view, of a lecture delivered some two months previously by Mr. Mellor in the Free Christian Church, Crewe. The article was not only severely condemnatory of Mr. Mellor's opinions, but seriously misrepresented them, and then did not hesitate to pronounce Mr. Mellor's teaching to be "downright Atheism." Against such misrepresentation and such a charge Mr. Mellor felt it to be his duty to protest, and did so in a letter which The Rock has not seen fit to insert, only noticing it as "a long and angry letter," and picking out what suited its own (The Rock's) purpose. After this treatment, it has the assurance to conclude:—"We think our readers will agree with us that we have not misrepresented Mr. Mellor, and that he has not improved his position by his letter of remonstrance." We think our readers will judge differently after reading the letter, which was as follows:—

To the Editor of the Rock.

Sir,—In your issue of the 15th inst. (November), there is an article headed "Divine Providence," but which really is a sort of critique upon a lecture delivered by me, not last month, as you say, but more than two months since, on "The Loss of the Princess Alice, Viewed in the Light of Divine Providence." I do not know who sent you the "report" to which you refer, nor what form it assumes; but, if your article is based upon it, you have been most shamefully misled, for a more utter misrepresentation of my views, as expressed in my lecture, cannot even be imagined than that which your article contains. As a matter of fact, you misquote and misrepresent me to the utmost extent, and then, upon misquotation and misrepresentation, you make charges against me which have no foundation at all except in your own imagination. You begin by asserting that "it was the special object of the lecture to demolish the theory 'which assigns' every calamity 'to God's providence.'" Now had your "special object" been to misrepresent me as much as possible, you could not have succeeded better than you have done in this respect. My special object was to try, in all humility, to get "a little truth and clear away a little error" on the subject before me; and so far from this leading me to exclude God's providence from the calamities of life, it did the very opposite. I never said and never thought that "the world had outgrown the opinion that God has anything to do with the origin, character, or use, of the disasters which occur to individuals or communities." I detest and abhor such a doctrine. I believe and teach, week by week, and year by year, that God has something to do, not with disasters only, but with all that happens and with all that can happen. It is either a mournful misunderstanding into which you have fallen, or a gratuitous insult which you offer me, when you speak of my "feeble attempts to thrust God out of his own world." I never yet found myself able to imagine, much less attempt, feebly or otherwise, any such horrible thing. I believe and teach, quite as firmly as you yourself do, that God "rules in the kingdoms of men and judges in the earth, and that, if governments or individuals set Him at naught, He will require it of them, and will show them by the 'making bare His holy arm' that He knows what is due to Himself and will exact it." On this broad fact of God's universal government, therefore, you and I are agreed, though, upon the basis of misquoted facts and utterly illogical inferences you venture to charge me with "downright Atheism."

We differ not at all as to the fact of the Divine Government, but entirely as to its manner. We do not happen to interpret the common fact of God's rule in the same way, and, because I do not and cannot accept your interpretation of it, you charge me with denying it altogether. Now I submit that, by this kind of treatment, you enrol yourself among those to whose company you assign me—the men who are "wise in their own conceits." Because I deny your interpretation of Providence, you are conceited enough to say that, by so doing, I deny Providence itself! But I hold that these two things, after all, are by no means one and the same. I should be very sorry indeed to forget "that to the puny intellect of man the Almighty God can never be revealed." I felt this so much with regard to His method of government that when I gave my lecture, I told my hearers that I felt almost "overburdened" in the "awful presence" of my subject, and despaired "of getting at anything like a full statement of the whole truth" upon it. In this spirit I arrived at the conclusion that it is a "huge and prolific error" to assign the calamities of life to the "arbitrary visitations of God." I opposed this huge error on two grounds. In the first place, I opposed it, because it can never be reconciled with any worthy view of God's moral character," and, in the next place, "because it flatly contradicts all we know of the actual course of events."

In supporting these two propositions I showed the absurdity of your interpretation of the loss of the Eurydice. I pointed out that, to justify your view of the cause of that melancholy occurrence, you had to assume in the first place that the British Government had committed a crime against God by appointing Roman Catholic chaplains for the benefit of Roman Catholic sailors. This assumption on your part was perfectly gratuitous and quite unsupported. And here let me correct another statement which you erroneously ascribe to me. I never said that the State "is as much bound to provide Roman Catholic priests for the Roman Catholics as it is to provide Protestant ministers for Protestants." I never believed any such thing. I do not believe it now. In order to make it appear as if I had laid down such a doctrine, you have cut one sentence clean in two and torn one half of my words from the other half. After showing that Roman Catholics are as much subjects of the Government as Protestants are, and that, consequently, the Government is bound to treat them with equal justice, I said: "If, therefore, it be the function of the State to provide spiritual guides for its subjects and servants, as The Rock says it is (I did not say whether it was or not), then it is as clear as noon-day that it is as much bound to provide Roman Catholic priests for the Roman Catholics as it is to provide Protestant ministers for Protestants." I intended this to be, and I submit that it is, a fair logical inference from your own principle of State-provided religion. You no doubt think that the way out of the dilemma, into which you have thus brought yourself, is by saying that the State is only bound to teach what you call true and pure religion, and that therefore it ought not to teach Roman Catholicism, because Roman Catholicism is, in your estimation, "idolatry, pollution, and blasphemy." But now, are you the judge? While you call Roman Catholicism a "soul-destroying" system, the Roman Catholic calls your Protestantism a "deadly heresy." Now, whoever else may decide this dispute between you and the Roman Catholics, the State cannot decide it. The State is as much divided on all such subjects as you and your opponents are. The State, like the Church, is made up of various parties, and it cannot therefore decide in exclusive favour of one without doing injustice to the other. There are many wise and good men who hold that the only right thing the State can do, with regard to Roman Catholicism on the one hand, and Protestantism on the other, as with the rival claims of all other sects, is to let them alone, and leave them to do the best they can for themselves. But, if the State interfere at all, as you hold that it ought, I do not see what ground you have left for resisting the obvious principle that it ought to interfere without the least partiality. But it would be partial to appoint Protestant chaplains, either to the army or to the navy, and yet to refuse to appoint Roman Catholic chaplains also. It must either leave both alone or appoint both on equal terms. Unless it does either one or the other of these two things, it does wrong, by treating one part of its subjects in one way, and another part of them in another way. On your own principle, therefore, of the relation between religion and the State, so far from the Government having committed a crime, as you assumed, by appointing Roman Catholic chaplains to the navy, it would have failed in its plain duty had it not made such appointments. On your own principle; then, you neither did nor can show that the act of the Government with which you associated the loss of the Eurydice, and which you assume to be a crime, was a crime at all.

But, even if you had thus justified the first of your assumptions, your second would have still been in need of justification also. Your second assumption was this—that God would and did punish three hundred innocent men and boys for the supposed guilty act of the Government. You did not attempt to justify this second assumption any more than you attempted to justify the first. You do not try to justify it in the article of the 15th, and I venture to assert that neither you nor anyone else can justify it. I do not think that I "know infallibly" all that is "reconcilable with a worthy view of the Divine character;" but I am sure that this particular view of yours is not. It involves the most flagrant transgression of the commonest rules of justice, and utterly abrogates the very foundation of good morals. No decent man, no tolerably decent man, would do anything at all like the act which you thus ascribe to the universal Father of men. While holding, quite as firmly as you do, that God never fails to punish sin, individual or national, I deny that we have the least warrant for believing that He punishes it in any such unjust and arbitrary way as that you contend for. In addition to what we know of His moral character in other ways, all we know of His actual method of punishing sin goes to show that, between the sin and its punishment, the connection is natural and logical, as well as inevitable. Our actual knowledge shows us that the principle of God's method is that each sin shall bring its own punishment, and that the nature of the punishment is determined, not by any arbitrary rule, but by the nature of the sin. Thus the punishment for the sin of sensuality or intemperance is, not a bad harvest, but a gradual weakening of both body and mind, and, if the sin be persisted in, the ultimate ruin of both. In this way we see that moral consequences are just as orderly and just as logical natural consequences. The mere statement of this well known principle shows how utterly opposed it is to the case you brought forward. Between the loss of the Eurydice, which you looked upon as the effect, and God's supposed anger against the British Government, which you regarded as the cause, there was no natural and no logical connection whatever. Cause and effect in this case, interpreted as you interpret it, are tied together, not naturally and logically, as is the actual way with the Almighty, but most unnaturally and most illogically, as might be the case in a world governed by caprice, and not by law. I hold, therefore, that what you said as to the cause and purpose of that sad event was an outrage, not only upon all worthy views of the Divine character, but also upon the known course of events which God has fixed.

You quote Scripture against me, but you do not quote it fairly. You charge me with sneering at the Old Testament. I deny the charge, and fling it back into the teeth of him who makes it. Both the Old Testament and the New are beyond my sneers. I have as great a reverence both for the one and the other as you have, sir. The difference between you and me, in this respect, is, not that I lack reverence for the Bible, while you possess such reverence, but that I discriminate in reading the Bible, while you do not. I do not, in the first place, believe that the notions of the ancient Jews, as to the method of Providence, are infallible guides to us. If they thought that God was their God alone and fought their battles, as heathen Gods were commonly supposed to fight the battles of their peoples, is that any reason why we should believe the same thing? Or if, again, they thought that God had to go out of His way to punish them for their sin, and if, in their ignorance of His real methods, they ascribed the punishment of one sin to quite another, are we to do the same? If their ignorance thus contradicts our knowledge, are we to leave our knowledge and follow their ignorance simply because their notions are recorded in the Bible? This is what you seem to say, and, in this way, you apparently teach that the mere fact that a thing is recorded in the Bible is quite a sufficient proof that it is true, and also quite a sufficient reason why we should adopt it as an infallible guide. This is certainly not how I read the Bible, nor how I use it. I quite agree with you that the Old Testament, "like all Scripture," is "profitable for doctrine;" but, unless we discriminate in reading it, between what belongs to the Jews, and what belongs to ourselves, between what is transient and what is permanent, so far from being "profitable," either "for doctrine" or anything else, the Book will mislead and work mischief.

But, in the next place, I assert that you venture rather too far when you try to defend your interpretation of the loss of the Eurydice by quoting Scripture as you do. Though the notions of the ancient Jews, as to the methods of Divine Providence, are no infallible guides to us, and though the Old Testament, unless interpreted with discrimination, will lead us wrong on this subject, I utterly deny that you have treated either the ancient Jews or the Old Testament fairly. You cannot find in the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, a single case that is at all analogous to the case you conjured up in connection with the Eurydice. I am not aware of a single passage of Scripture which gives you the smallest warrant for saying that God ever did or could step out of His way to punish three hundred men and boys for a crime of which they were entirely innocent, much less for a crime which has never been proved to be a crime at all, and which has no actual existence at all excepting in the region of mere supposition. Thus, in all that you said about that melancholy occurrence, not only do you set yourself against all worthy views of the Divine character, and against all we know as to God's actual method of government, but you also fail to get the support of the Bible, your radically defective exegesis notwithstanding.

In conclusion, I have three requests to make. In the first place, if you ever again notice what I say, be good enough to give a fair statement of the facts, and do not cut any more sentences in two for the sake of making me appear to say the very opposite of what I did say. In the next place, do not degrade yourself and insult me by making inferences from misstatements of my words, and then, upon the strength of such illgoten inferences, flinging grossly untrue charges at me. In the third place, do not drag in the church to which I belong; for, if you do not know, you might know, that that church leaves me at liberty to teach and preach just what I believe on all such subjects as that which has brought me into collision with you. I do not presume to represent any "system." Moreover, the system to which you refer needs no defence of mine, in this instance at any rate, for it is quite beyond your power to injure it.—Yours truly, W. MELLOR.

GLASGOW: SOUTH ST. MUNGO-STREET.—On the 15th inst., at a meeting of this congregation, the resignation of the pastor, Rev. Wm. Mitchell, was accepted.

CHRISTMAS, 1878.

"And laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn."

No room, oh, mother! 'midst the busy throng
Within, for thee to lay thy new-born child;
Not unto him, the holy one, belong
Comfort and rest and ease; the night wind wild
Pierces the humble roof beneath whose shade,
On lowly couch, the child of God is laid.

No room,—Lord Christ! as in the days of old,
So now the busy world doth pass thee by;
Fierce wars still rage, and avarice and gold
Hold sway; and our vain faithless hearts outcry,
In all their stubborn selfishness and sin,
"No room for thee, oh, holy babe," within.

No room,—oh, prince of peace! we sing thy praise,
And hail the glory of thy holy birth;
Again with loud accord our voices raise
The angels' hymn of "Peace, good will on earth;"
While on the breeze, repeated o'er and o'er,
Comes mingling with the strain the battle's roar.

No room,—for over hill and vale are heard
The tramp of armies and the clang of arms;
Instead of thy pure gospel's peaceful word,
The cannon's thunder with its wild alarms;
And burning villages, and blood-stained plains,
Show where the fiend of war triumphant reigns.

No room for thee—amid the angry strife,
Ambition's arm, pride's wild desire; but still Though dreary be the darksome night of life,
And overhead the wild winds whistle shrill,
Thou liest cradled in the loving breast,
That like to Bethlehem's manger gives thee rest.

ALFRED C. JEWITT.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1878.

'A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.'

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

AGAIN welcome merry Christmas is at hand. Welcome, because it is the recognised anniversary of the birth of him who has words of good cheer for all the sons and daughters of care and sorrow. Welcome, because in the midst of outward cold our altar fires of Good-will burn brightly, and send their genial influence into many frost-bitten hearts. Just before the sober thoughts suggest the close of the year, this happy day comes. Thus the old friend makes us all happy and gay before he takes his departure to Eternity.

It is not exactly known when the anniversary of the birth of JESUS was first kept as a holy-day. But we can trace the observance of the day as far back as the latter part of the second century. It is by no means certain that JESUS was born on the 25th of December, but Christendom has kept for centuries this day in memory of his birth. And it is meet to observe a day in the year in loving joyful memory of him who lived to make in himself the perfect music of righteousness, and also to make the anthem of goodwill to men a blessed reality, in the practical brotherhood of men. As a holy-day the 25th of December is kept in most Christian churches. The Presbyterian churches of Scotland, however, do not keep the day as a religious festival, and most of them regard its religious observance as a Popish superstition.

But everywhere Christmas is a season of social enjoyment as well as a day of religious observance. It is the great social festival of the year, the annual love-feast:

In former times the celebration of Christmas began in the latter part of the previous day—Christmas-eve. The house was first decked with holly, ivy, and other evergreens. Candles of an uncommon size were then lighted, under the name of Christmas candles; an enormous log, called the Yule Log, or Christmas Block, was laid upon the fire. The people sat round regaling themselves with beer. In the course of the night small parties of songsters went about from house to house, or through the streets, singing what were called Christmas Carols—simple popular ditties, full of joyful allusions to the great gift from God to men in the Redeemer. A mass was commenced at midnight, a custom still kept up in the Catholic Church. At one period the people had a custom of wassailing the fruit trees on this evening; that is, they took a wassail-bowl—threw a toast from it to the tree, and sung a song, expecting thus to secure a good crop next season. It was thought that, during the night, all water was changed into wine, and that bread baked on this eve would never become mouldy. The carols were generally sung in the morning of Christmas day.

How many associations are bound up with them, so quaint and simple and happy-hearted!

God rest you merry gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay,
For Jesus Christ our Saviour
Was born upon this day,
To save us all from Satan's power,
When we had gone astray.

These notions and customs are passing away, but the social character of Christmas remains, and is likely to do so. Christmas is an hospitable resting place on the journey of life. English homes are brighter this day than usual. Young hearts have the dance of joy, and bright eyes are brighter at this season. Almost every woman in our land is a MARTHA to-day, not in the sense of being troubled, but in that of loving care about the many dishes. What happy gatherings to-day of families and friends, who talk of times past and times to come, as they partake of the good things. The aged ones rub their spectacles brighter than usual to-day, that they may see, as clearly as possible, the loved and esteemed familiar faces once more, which they cannot hope to see on many more Christmas Days. And over he aged faces there is a sort of bright youthful light as the venerable ones think of their own young days. But soon that morning brightness passes away before the sobering recollection of their many sad experiences between their youth and old age. But as this is the happy unselfish season, young and middle-aged do their best to make the aged as happy as possible; and generous old age is careful not to drop sadness into the joy cup of youth.

The merriness of this season will be sobered in many families by the sad thought that dear ones are absent to-day who were always present on previous Christmas days. As year after year rolls into eternity, relatives and friends pass away to the better land, and their vacant chairs and places at the table and the fireside tell us how much we have lost. But all is not lost even here. Have we not the sweet memory of the good? Have we not the constant music of their example, saying, "Be of good cheer?" And have we not the assurance—not of faith, or mere argument, but of knowledge, that they are in the summer land, at the other end of the dark tunnel of death, where there is the richer feast of reason and the higher flow of soul? J. M. D.

LETTER AND SPIRIT.

"The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." The letter of the Bible cannot be a guide of morals to such an extent that it is infallible; it but points out the road, gives the right moral spirit, the form of which is to be determined by the age in which it comes. The application given even by the Apostles is not the application invariably to suit this land in this age. To use the Bible aright we must deduce a rule from it and adapt it to life now. The active Christianity of each age is the result of two terms, truth and receptivity, the subjective and objective, being perpetually variable with increasing knowledge of the terms. Infinite truth held by finite minds is no exception to this rule. Only in each age are there means of verifying the work of previous ages. The present age is the court against provincial and transient error. The infallible standard of thought and morality is not in any one period. It would be pleasant to have an infallible church—pleasant to have an infallible angel in the closet to consult, to tell us just what to do; but the church is not infallible and the angel is not there, and we have to come back to the moral sense of man as the standard. To say that this sense does not exist is the profoundest scepticism. On the other side, to set up the thought of any one time as indestructible is to build on a quicksand because it first appears above water.

Servile imitation of a period is but another term for disbelief in the perpetual inspiration of the Spirit of God. It is also out of harmony with modern times. To reproduce the thoughts of the Middle Ages at the present time is like introducing the Bedouin to our highest civilisation. The sphere of action is now widely different from olden days. If a man should live on from age to age he would find his work changing. "New times demand new measures." Misapplication of rules is a sad mistake: the most notable example of this is the interpretation of Apostolic writings. It cannot be questioned that the Apostles looked forward to an immediate return of CHRIST and the speedy consummation of all things. The natural effect of such a conviction must inevitably affect the views and pursuits of man. To apply the rules of a permanently-guided world to those of a world transient and immediately to be dissolved, would be strange. If the conviction were burned into men's souls that the destruction of the world was close at hand, should we work? Would LIVINGSTONE have spent years in laying the foundations of a civilisation which must take a great time to accomplish? In operations requiring work permanency is demanded to ensure work. Who would study economy on board a sinking ship? Who would till the soil when the angel with the flaming sword is coming to reap? Take away the element of time, and the dignity of labour is taken away. Art may not be prosecuted without pride in it. The belief of the Apostles in the immediate end of the world had a tendency to withdraw them from human interests. The duties of citizenship were viewed passively: it was not thought worth while to assume new ties of home life, the time was too short, the crisis too near. Better to stand with the soul intent on the coming of CHRIST. This was a correct deduction from misconceived ideas of external relations. If the Apostles had postponed writing till they had learned the permanence of the world, they would not have so slightly treated the affairs of every day life.

The labour of applying principles to the working world is still but imperfectly done. To this source we may impute false ideas of religion. A religious life is a grand, broad, human life, elevated towards God and turning towards man; but religion is still supposed to be something else—an antithesis between the temporal and spiritual. There is a false distinction between goodness and religion. "Come out and be separate," say the Apostles. So men have thought the whole circle of home duties to be sin—hence the whole development of asceticism. Pascal did not want to feel friendship for his sister. Thomas à Kempis feared to forget God if he looked at the beauties of nature. Even to-day nature is feared; we are afraid to recognise it as the temple of God.

Religion is supposed to be a morbid development for future life, and a mischievous distinction is placed between morality and religion. The evangelist wishes to save souls, not to build character. The idea of a religious man is not one engaged in building up human rights. But we best serve God by serving humanity. Religion is a proper use of the present day—culture of the spirit in faith and goodness. The present life is plunged in eternity as the world in space. This world is the garment of God. Divine things are not put away to future reaches of time. Religion glorifies all man's nature. Art, literature, politics—all have root in religion; it covers the whole sphere of life. All life may be divine. This world is a consecrated world, a Holy of Holies, the temple for man's worship. Man is sent into this world to do for it what he can. If he misuses the present he will misuse the future. The sphere of religion is here and now. Heaven is the complement of this world, not a refuge from it.

Baron A. Baldacsi,

WE regret to learn, from the Christian Seed-sower (a Hungarian Unitarian magazine), that this Hungarian nobleman, the last member of his family, died on the 8th of August last. He was greatly regretted over the whole country. Although he was not a Unitarian, nor even a Protestant, he deserved their honour and gratitude. A few years ago he offered his considerable property to the Calvinists, Lutherans, and Unitarians of Hungary, for the aid of poorer congregations, on condition that the bishops should meet together in council to arrange for its distribution. This has now been done more than once, and it is proposed to hold another meeting next year at Klausenburg, where the Calvinist and Unitarian bishops of Transylvania live. It is undeniable that the generous act has already had a very good influence in bringing the Protestant brethren in Hungary into a closer connection. His memory will never fade away, but will live for generations. His generosity will bear its fruit in plentitude.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS GIFT.

THERE had been a merry party at Oakleigh on Christmas-eve. The fine old mansion was full of children. In the great hall which had often rung with the armed heel of mail-clad knights, and in which the former barons used to entertain their honoured guests, upwards of fifty bright young faces were flitting about, and twice as many light feet were beating time to the music. In the gallery which ran round the old banqueting room the older folks were gathered, watching the sport of their little sons and daughters and nephews and nieces. At one end of the gallery the band was stationed. It was hired from the neighbouring village, and consisted of two violins, a bass fiddle, a clarionet, a basoon, a trombone, and a triangle. More loud than melodious was the music, but to the young dancers that was of little consequence. A huge fire burnt in a cavernous fire place, and threw its ruddy beams on the black oak roof timbers which rose from the floor in the form of arches. It gleamed and sparkled on the coats of mail which were hung against the wall, and on the ancient sword and hunting shears, and upon the wreaths of green holly and yew. It wanted something less than an hour to the time when the bells should announce the arrival of happy Christmastide. The feet of the briskest dancers had already shown signs of lagging, and several had retired to seats against the wall. Then the golden-haired Ethel crept up to her uncle Cleveland, who was the host of the evening, and begged that, as on former years, he would tell them a story to finish up the night. Complying with the wish of the little favourite, Mr. Cleveland motioned for the music to cease. All stopped except the trombone, which favoured the company with a solo of several bars—the attention of the player being absorbed in work, and his ears deafened with his own noise. When silence had been obtained, Mr. Cleveland explained the wish of Ethel, which was heartily supported by those present. "Well then I suppose I must consent (he was evidently nothing loath) to please this little maid, who asks me to tell a story to while away the time until the bells ring. If you, my friends, care to hear an old man, and are sufficiently tired to listen, I am willing to follow an old custom, for we mostly have a quiet talk before Christmas breaks upon us."

Saying this the good old gentleman seated himself in an arm chair and waited for the company to gather round, those in the galleries coming down to hear the story. As Ethel came near him he took her upon his knee. Then he began:—

Long, long ago, in a far off land, there was a father who had many children. He had been at much trouble to educate them. He had been very liberal to them and was very fond of them. As might be expected there existed much difference in their characters. Some of them possessed very fine qualities, while others were not at all nice. When the children were still young they were put to a boarding school, where they had a very cruel master, who, in the absence of the father, used to starve and beat them. One boy took upon himself to induce them to run away from school, and actually succeeded in escaping with them, and leading them home by a strange road through many difficulties and dangers. He was a thoughtful boy, and gave them a catalogue of the dangers upon the road, and good advice as to how they should avoid them. On another occasion when some of them had got into loose habits and mixed with bad company, one of the sons called Elijah had told how dreadfully angry their father would be, and had induced them to forsake their evil associates. Another son had become a great prince, as much renowned for his wisdom as for his wealth and power. Several of them had composed beautiful poetry—one especially, who wrote songs and set them to music. Among them there was a strange child, whom few of his brothers and sisters understood. The rest were always grumbling because of the tasks which their father set them, and because they thought he did not reward them according to their merits. Now their father, in order to try this son, for whom he had a great regard, had taken away all his playthings, and had given him many unpleasant things to bear. But, although he suffered more than any of the others, and apparently without a cause, and although some of his brothers vexed him dreadfully, yet through it all, though he could not exactly see why, he felt and said that his father was right. Others of the brothers had become celebrated lawyers, and gave to the world many wise and useful maxims. Some of the children had gone to distant lands, and had learned such sciences as were known—all about the earth and the stars. But, although many of these children were so clever, they none of them seemed really to understand their father, but stood in fear of him instead of loving him. Another sad feature with many of them was their cruel neglect of one poor brother, who was a cripple, and not bright like the rest of them. Lazarus could do nothing to earn his own living, and so they all treated him as though they thought him an intolerable nuisance: all but two little sisters, one of whom, Mary, was not held in much account by the rest. Unfortunately, the cripple, besides being ugly and helpless, was often bad tempered, and not so pleasant in his manners as he should have been. All these things added to the dislike with which his brothers and sisters regarded him, and gave them an excuse for their neglect, of which they were not slow to avail themselves. Now it happened at one time that this family was passing through great trouble. They had got wrong about their father's will. They did not properly understand it, and what they might have understood they paid no regard to.

Here Ethel put in: "I should think one thing was that they were not following their father's will in treating Lazarus so cruelly."

At this Mr. Cleveland gave her a kiss, and told her that she was a little Marplot, and must not interrupt again. Then he went on with his story:—

One night, he said, about this hour, after all the rest were weary of trying to find out what was wrong, and how they should mend it, it was announced to them that they had a new baby brother. Not many took notice of this circumstance, so busy were they in their contention. The lawyer said, if anyone should know he ought to know what their father's will was. The foreign brother spoke about their neglecting to follow up their education. Another brother, who prided himself on knowing hidden things, wanted to draw them into a speculation on their father's character and constitution, and became very scientific in explaining how he must have acted so and so. While they were wrangling a grey-headed man came up to them, and, taking them to the cradle where their new brother lay, said: "He shall tell you when he grows older what you wish to know." At this they all shook their heads, and went away laughing. But the little child grew up quietly and tenderly. No one, except his mother, took particular notice of him. By and by he went to work at quite a humble occupation, not doing anything, as it seemed, to sustain the family honour. But when he had grown to be a man he went forth as with a new and earnest purpose, and he sought out the neglected Lazarus. Then he went to his rich and clever brothers, and told them that they had been all along mistaken about their father—that, above all, he was a kind and just father. He told them that he thought their treatment of poor Lazarus was abominable, and that if they would follow their father's will they must first of all help their brother, and receive him into their homes and into their love. When they heard this the elder brothers were astonished. "What!" said the lawyer, "you prate to us! You who do not understand a tittle of the law!" "You talk," said the foreign brother, who knew neither Greek nor astronomy!" "You talk to us!" said the clergyman (his name was Caiaphas). And they all shook their heads. But he was not to be discouraged. He had a deep assurance that his father's spirit was with him, and he gave himself, heart and soul, to the work which his father had given him to do. One thing, do you know, he was very fond of little boys and girls—"O, we know, of course we do, you dear, good, naughty uncle," said Ethel, "it is Jesus Christ, and instead of telling us a story you have been preaching us a sermon."

Just then the Christmas bells were heard, and beneath the window, the carol singers singing—
Christians awake, salute the happy morn!
Whereon the Saviour of this world was born.

Then the windows were thrown open, and the voices of those within were heard joining those without in their hymn of thanksgiving; and through the still night, and over the snow, the sound of those voices went; but not long did it linger on earth. It just stopped to enter the cottage of a lonely widow, then to salute the ears of a dying child, and then went right up to the gates of heaven. C. H. OSLER.

RIP VAN WINKLE IN THE FAR EAST.

A CURIOUS Japanese legend, tells how a young man fishing in his boat on the ocean was invited by the goddess of the sea to her home beneath the waves. After three days he desired to see his old father and mother. On parting she gave him a golden casket and a key, but begged him never to open it. At the village where he lived all was changed, and he could get no trace of his parents until an aged woman recollected of hearing their names. He found their graves a hundred years old. Thinking that three days could not have such a change and that he was under a spell, he opened the casket. A white vapour rose, and under its influence the young man fell to the ground. His hair turned gray, his form lost its youth, and in a few moments he died of old age.

CURIOSITIES.

The eclipse was a great success for Brother Jasper. He got out his smoked glass, put on a double pair of spectacles, took a long sight at the bright luminary of day, saw it rapidly dodge behind the pale orb of night, and, turning himself excitedly to a group of admiring brethren, exclaimed, "I knowed it! De sun he do move. I seed him dun gone done it wid dese berry eyes!"

The London correspondent of the Western News says: I once heard Mr. Spurgeon tell some of the stories of his escapade as a boy preacher. A provincial Baptist minister of the old school sent to ask that a great gun should be sent to preach his anniversary sermons. Mr. Spurgeon was selected. When he arrived the whiteheaded old minister received him in astonishment, and demanded who he was, and what he wanted. "I'm come to preach for you to-morrow, sir," replied the unabashed lad. The old man looked at him as if he expected the world to come to an end by the mere force of a boy's impudence, and instead of giving the accustomed greeting, walked up and down muttering loud enough to be heard, "Tut, tut; is it to come to this? Boys for pulpits! children to preach! babies to preach!" Meanwhile, the future Baptist Archbishop was kept standing. He, too, muttered to himself, but not loud enough to be heard, "You shall pay for this, old boy." So next morning he choose for his first lesson the sixteenth chapter of Proverbs, and read until he came to the verse, "a hoary head is a crown of glory." Looking up with an air of surprise he exclaimed, to the astonishment of the orthodox congregation, "Solomon's wrong there. Some hoary heads can't be civil to a boy who comes to preach for them. Rudeness gives no crown of glory." Then returning to the book he added, with dramatic surprise, "Oh, I see! Solomon's right after all, for rudeness even to a lad who preaches for you is not the way of righteousness!" The old man was capable of bearing a joke, even from the pulpit, and when the sermon was over ran up the stairs, and slapping the boy preacher on the back, exclaimed with delight, "Thee'rt the sauciest dog that ever barked in a pulpit." Mr. Spurgeon to this day is nearly as proud of that piece of wit as if there were nothing profane in it.

FLOWERY FIELD: OPENING OF THE NEW CHURCH.

ON Thursday last a handsome new church which, has been in course of erection for two or three years, was opened for public worship. Flowery Field is about seven miles from Manchester, and is practically a part of Hyde, from which it is separated by a narrow brook that runs into the river Tame. Over this brook is built, in a valley at the foot of Hyde, one part of the original cotton mill erected by the father of the present Thomas Ashton, and in the immediate neighbourhood of which have successively been erected several other large mills. These, with the residences of the hands employed therein, form a distinct locality, with a considerable population. The father of the present owner of the property very early did what he could to encourage his people to educate their children, and built the "Flowery Field schools" to assist them. He then secured good teachers to conduct them—one of whom was the late Rev. T. E. Poynting, of Monton. The hands were induced to acquiesce in a plan by which each family should contribute for the support of the schools, each house contributing twopence per week. At this time the Established Church had not any place of worship in Hyde, and Nonconformity flourished, Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, being the oldest and most noted place of worship in the district; the pastor then was the Rev. Jas. Brooks. Here the Ashtons worshipped—Samuel, of Woodley and Apethorn; Robert, of Hyde; Benjamin, of the printworks; James, of Newton; and Thomas, of Flowery Field—each family having large mills, and being engaged in the cotton trade. To them, and the Thornelys, and the Hibberts, is chiefly owing the rise and growth of the town of Hyde. The schools erected at Flowery Field by Thomas became the source of many educational activities. Lecturers of ability were brought from Manchester and elsewhere, evening classes were formed, and the musical talent of the district was drawn out, a choral society occasionally meeting there. In addition to the day schools, large Sunday schools were formed, and were the best of the kind of that day, and perfectly unsectarian. The late Thomas Ashton took great interest in these schools, and on the Sunday afternoon would visit them, as did other members of the family. A small gallery was built for their accommodation, which was found very useful on recitation days. Thence a good uninterrupted view could be got of the whole school. Such visits of the family exercised a good influence. It was not, however, until many years after the old chapel at Gee Cross had disappeared, and a handsome new one had been erected near its site, that Sunday Unitarian services, in connection with the East Cheshire Christian Union, were begun here. The Rev. T. R. Elliott was the first minister we remember; then came the Rev. R. C. Dendy, who was succeeded by the present minister, the Rev. J. K. Smith, who becomes, with the opening of this new church, the first minister of an independent congregation.

The new church stands conspicuously at the top of the brow, nestling among trees, near the residence of the late Thomas Ashton, and about equi-distant from the several mills. In style it differs from those beautiful gothic structures which have recently been erected in our neighbourhood, but in its own way holds scarcely a second place to any of them. In acoustic properties it leaves them all behind. We shall give a report of the opening next week.

WHITCHURCH: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

ON Tuesday, Dec. 10th, the second anniversary of this church was celebrated. A bazaar was held in the Corn Exchange in aid of the extinction of the church debt and certain contemplated improvements in the building. The stalls were presided over by Mrs. Watson, Miss Mounds, Miss Haines, Miss Broster, Miss Rogers, Miss Walters, Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Porter, Miss Gresty, Miss Lewis, Miss Wright, Miss Stansby, and Miss Bradbury. A large number of very handsome and useful articles were exposed for sale, and the demand was fairly brisk. At 4.30 about 350 persons sat down to tea in the Market Hall. At 6.30 a public meeting was held in the Assembly Room, which was very largely attended, representatives of every religious body in the town being present. The chair was taken by Mr. JOSEPH LUPTON, of Leeds, who said that he had come gladly to show his sympathy with the church. He almost feared to follow such chairmen as Mr. Herbert New and Mr. Rathbone, M.P., but he would at any rate show how deeply interested he was in their work. He was glad to notice the growing liberality of the orthodox Christian churches. As a Unitarian he was willing to recognise the work of all good and earnest men, and he was rejoiced to know that their work was being increasingly recognised. During the Baptist Union meeting at Leeds the Rev. J. H. Millard, B.A., of London (the secretary of the Union), who was his guest, had spoken at a Unitarian meeting. Only a few weeks ago one of the largest Congregational churches in Leeds had been lent to a Unitarian minister for a lecture on behalf of a Unitarian mission, and in America the Methodists of Saratoga had lent their large chapel to the National Unitarian Conference for their three days conference. So he thought the good work of Free Christian fellowship was progressing. After speaking of the neatness and beauty of their church, he urged them to make it their religious home, and not merely a place for a passing visit; only by so doing would they strengthen their church and help their minister. Having quoted the words of Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., who said he looked with dismay at the state of the masses, and felt that their condition was one which no mere sectarianism could cure, Mr. Lupton gave some valuable words of counsel and encouragement to the people, and then called on Mr. Walters to give a report of the work done during the year.

The Rev. W. CAREY WALTERS apologised for the absence of Sir James Clarke Lawrence, Bart., M.P., Mr. R. N. Philips, M.P. (who each enclosed a cheque for £5 towards the bazaar funds), the Rev. T. Gasquoine, of Oswestry, who he regretted to say was seriously unwell, and other gentlemen, and then gave a brief résumé of their efforts during 1878. The congregations had kept up remarkably well, the Sunday school was more regularly attended, and all the various institutions were in a fairly prosperous condition. The offertory had lately increased, and during the year a Sunday-school library, with 350 volumes, had been purchased at a cost of £38, which was much appreciated by the scholars. Whenever he was tempted to get disheartened he looked into the minute book, and turned to the first entry, which instructed him to treat with the Local Board for the use of the room in which they held their meeting for Divine worship, and in case of this being refused to accept the offer of a room in a friend's house, and now they had a school of 100 children, and a congregation of nearly 200 persons. (Loud cheers.) He felt that if their church were closed to-morrow the good which had been done would be worth all the time and money spent upon it; but he did not anticipate such a result. (Cheers.) He called them earnestly to another year of work for the cause they loved, and assured them of his own willingness to work with them as heartily as he could.

The Rev. J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., of London, then delivered a powerful and thoughtful address. He said he had known Mr. Walters for some years, and had often felt a desire to come down to Whitchurch. He thought the advantage of working in a small town was that the results of a man's work were visible to himself and others, while in a large town these were not seen. He had heard enough since he came to the town—not from Mr. Walters' lips, for he was not the man to talk of his work—to assure him that they were doing really religious work. Too often their Free Churches were regarded as heresy shops, or as places where some outlandish philosophy or theology was taught, but here was proof that this idea was false. He had heard already of lives dark and blank which had been inspired and elevated, of hearts cold to affection, human and Divine, which had been roused and quickened. What was religion? It was a question which was hard to answer, for religion was that which bound a man in conscience to do what was right. There were many beliefs connected with it, which were more or less certain, but they were not the essence of religion. A man might be bound in pocket to do what was right, or he might scorn to do what was wrong, but this was not religion. We could not find religion in elaborate guesses. A man's religion was that of which he was most sure, of which he could not doubt—it was not a belief which rested on a balance of probabilities. The Bible view of religion was expressed in the words of the angel to Peter, "Go and speak to the people all the words of this life." As soon as Paul learned this Word all men became brethren to him, and wherever goodness was found there he found a child of God and a brother; to him circumcision was nothing nor uncircumcision.

The Rev. SYDNEY MORRIS (Congregationalist), of Heaton Moor, in an interesting and able speech, urged the congregation to stand by their minister, who was in every way worthy of their confidence.

Mr. JOHN GREYSTY proposed, and Mr. R. J. FLETCHER seconded a vote of thanks to the friends who had helped to make the meeting a success. This vote—carried with applause—was acknowledged by the speakers.

During the evening the choir sang admirably two anthems, "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness" and "O, Praise the Lord." Miss Bradbury and Miss Haines sang, with great pathos, the solos, "O, rest in the Lord" and "Leaning on Thee." Miss Haines presided with her usual ability at the harmonium.

After a closing hymn and the benediction the meeting—throughout most hearty—separated.

The total proceeds of the bazaar and tea meeting, together with donations received, amounted to £262, which will not only free the church from debt, but leave, after all expenses are paid, a balance of £60 towards contemplated improvements.

THE BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

A MEETING of the Beard Memorial Union was held on Tuesday evening at the Memorial Hall, when Mr. Henry Harwood, M.A., read a paper on "The duty of Christian Churches in times of general depression." In the absence of the Rev. William Gaskell (the president of the Union), Mr. E. C. Harding occupied the chair. There was a small attendance, no doubt on account of the dense fog and cold. Among those present we observed the Revs. James Black, M.A., Halliwell Thomas, Messrs. J. H. Reynolds, John Thomas, Edward Golland, John Phillips, James Odgers, J. H. Reynolds, jun., H. B. Wilkinson, W. E. Bowie, J. Fraser, J. Reed, S. Thompson, F. Thomas, W. R. Shanks, J. A. Kelly, H. B. Smith, and F. M. Blair.

The CHAIRMAN said the subject of the paper was of particularly grave moment at the present time. In Cross-street Chapel they had decided upon recommending the establishment of an offertory for the purpose of raising funds to relieve the distress, and he hoped that other congregations would follow their example. They had also established a society for the purpose of visiting the poorer members of the congregation, and taken other means to alleviate the distress.

Mr. HARWOOD, before commencing his paper, referred to the death of the Princess Alice, remarking that when we, as subjects of that illustrious lady who reigned over this country, had our troubles, she was the first to sympathise with us, and it was therefore not only our duty, but ought also to be our pleasure, to sympathise with her when she was overwhelmed with grief.—(Hear, hear.) In the course of his paper he urged his audience not to relax their charitable efforts now that a great cloud hung over the country. Did they, however, think that in merely supplying the bodily wants of those who could not supply them for themselves they were doing all that could be required of them? It was a grave question, and deserved grave consideration. Was it enough just to keep alive those who would without their aid succumb to privation, which was the office they performed for private pets? If so, they remembered only that man was mortal, and forgot the more important truth—that man was also immortal. It was difficult for any one with a heart within him to avoid feeling melancholy or humiliated when he saw, as he must see if he dwelt in the neighbourhood of a large manufacturing town and took the trouble to look around him, hundreds, nay thousands, of his fellow-journeymen wallowing in debasement, and often seemingly dead to every sense of a higher spiritual life. To what was the indifference of our churches attributable? Many of them were doing their work nobly and in a true Christian spirit, but many, on the other hand, had practically abandoned the duty of evangelisation. The reason of this abandonment of so plain a duty must be traceable either to the fact that we had become grossly selfish and unpardonably thoughtless, or to the belief that religion was a mistake, and therefore all obligation to preach its influence had ceased. How could we consistently neglect to spread the advantages of religion to those around us? At all times it was the duty of Christian churches to preach the Gospel to the poor, the ignorant, the forsaken, and the outcast. To fill their churches and keep them full, they must not wait until education brought the people, or they would remain empty. They must first dig out that deeply-rooted error that religion was made for the rich and prosperous, and not for the poor and needy. A discussion followed, in which Messrs. J. Thomas, J. H. Reynolds, and J. Black took part, and the proceedings were closed with thanks to the lecturer and chairman.

CONSISTORY OF THE HUNGARIAN UNITARIANS.

ON the 25th, 26th, and 27th of August, the Unitarians of Hungary held their general consistory meeting at Klausenburg. The meeting was well attended. Bishop Joseph Ferencz presided on the part of the ministers, and G. Daniel on the part of the laity. A religious service was held in connection with it at the Unitarian church. Bishop Ferencz opened the meeting with an eloquent speech. Many important questions were discussed. The Bishop gave a full and interesting report of the past year. It enters into the minutest detail about the congregations. From it we learn that 131 persons joined the Unitarians, and 19 left them during that period. 1,887 children were born, and the deaths amounted to 1,783. Total number of Unitarians in Hungary (with Transylvania), 53,114. Bishop Ferencz had made his pastoral visitation to some of the congregations, and found them in a satisfactory condition. He expresses his general satisfaction with regard to the good spirit that prevails amongst the ministers and their congregations. He proposes to continue his visitation next year to the other congregations also.

In the second part of the report we learn much information about educational matters. The three gymnasia, and the theological college of the Unitarians, are in a good condition, and on the whole there is an increase in the number of the students.

According to the report of the finance committee the ground property of the congregations is valued at £21,200, the income of which is £875. In money the congregations have £15,063. Out of this they defray the expenses of the churches and schools, and partly of the ministers and teachers.

The close and warm connection with the English and American Unitarians is felt, and repeatedly expressed in these reports, as well as in many other cases.

It is proposed that a General Synod should be summoned next year in connection with the tercentenary celebration of the death of the first Hungarian bishop—Francis David.

On the whole we may learn from this short note that our Hungarian brethren, after their many trials, are in a very hopeful condition. Now, if ever, under the guidance of a vigorous and generally-honoured leader, and by the assistance of a great many outside friends, they may hope that their good work will bear its fruit abundantly.

ROCHDALE.—The Sick and Burial Society of Clover street Sunday school is a creditor to the amount of £18 in the bank of Messrs. J. and J. Fenton, which has recently stopped payment.

BELFAST: THE UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

NORTHERN SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

A CONFERENCE of teachers and friends interested in Sunday school education was held in the Rosemary-street School-room on Friday evening, the 13th instant. Notwithstanding the inclement weather there was a pretty large attendance, amongst those present being the Revs. J. C. Street, H. Rylett (Reading), W. H. M'Gowan, D. Thompson (Hopeton-street); Messrs. J. M. Darbishire, Thomas M'Clelland, John Ritchie, W. H. Mulligan, D. M'Master, Moneyrea; George Moorhead, Thos. Bowstead, A. M'Mechan, E. J. Davids, William Taylor, James M'Quoid, John Lowry, John Lees, J. G. Dobbin, J. W. Kinnear, Hugh Hyndman, W. J. Thompson, James M'Williams, H. Hunter, W. S. M'Calmont, George Fisher, &c.

After tea the chair was taken at eight o'clock by Mr. JAMES M. DARBISHIRE, who, in his introductory remarks, dwelt at some length upon the beneficial effects of Sunday school teaching, and stated that there were now several Sunday schools connected with their union, all in a flourishing condition; and why was that? Simply because their Sunday school teachers had their heart in their work. (Applause.)

Mr. J. C. STREET, president of the society, then delivered an address on the subject "Is there any need of Sunday schools now?" He stated that he thought it would be an immense advantage if the Sunday school teachers and the preacher were called upon, as of old, to give answers to the questions which were agitating the minds of the auditors. About one hundred years ago a new system of Sunday school teaching was introduced. A movement was originated in England to reach the waifs and strays of society; and the schools thus originated increased in number, and were devoted largely to what was called secular education—training the children of the poor to read and write and cast up accounts. The Sunday schools in Ireland and America were mainly devoted to religious instruction. The establishment of School Boards in England, which was the work of Mr. Gladstone's Government, had provided the poor with facilities for secular instruction of the most suitable description; and, consequently, a great change had taken place in the Sunday schools. So much diversity of opinion existed at present with respect to the best methods of teaching to be adopted in Sunday schools, that the problem had been raised "Is there any need for Sunday schools now?" Many had come to the conclusion that there was no need for Sunday schools now, and contended that they were doing more for their children in their homes and by their example than could be done for them in Sunday schools. Others were still of opinion that Sunday schools were necessary and so continued to send their children there. Notwithstanding the excellent machinery of the Education Act, with its compulsory powers, he was compelled to say that there were still a great number of children outside the influences of secular instruction, and, therefore, it was absolutely necessary that secular instruction should still continue to be given in the Sunday schools. In spite of the beneficial working of the National system of education in Ireland, a vast number of people in this country were yet unable to write or read or cast up accounts, and so it was still desirable that secular education should be attended to in their Sunday schools. The Sunday school, he thought, was more necessary now than ever it was. He had come to the conclusion that in all aspects of the Sunday school question there was still a need for Sunday school teaching to-day. Both on secular and religious grounds the work of Sunday schools had yet to be done. Mr. Street concluded with an appeal to those present to do their utmost to help forward the work of Sunday school teaching. (Applause.)

A lengthened discussion ensued, the various speakers expressing their concurrence with Mr. Street that Sunday schools are still absolutely necessary. One gentleman gave it as his opinion that Sunday schools at present, especially in the country, did a great amount of harm, as they were simply a sort of machinery for indoctrinating the young in the dogmas of the churches.

At the conclusion cordial votes of thanks were conveyed to Mr. Street for his admirable address and to the chairman for presiding.

MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

THE annual sermons in aid of the Manchester Domestic Missions were preached on Sunday morning and evening at the Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, and also at Platt Chapel, Rusholme.

The Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, preaching at Cross-street, referred to the objects of the missions, which, he remarked, had, although sounding no flourish of trumpets, relieved many a bitter want, assuaged many a torturing pain, and in some cases even saved from death not a few of the hard-pressed honest poor, who but for its aid would have sunk into the hopeless ranks of pauperism, and had enable them to maintain their self-respect and bear up, struggling on through their difficulties till the dawn of better days. The schools and various improving institutions connected with the missions had supplied instruction and afforded benefit to hundreds of poor children, and prepared them to enter on life's solemn experience. Religious services adapted to the wants of the poor had been held, not without effect, and in that and other ways had these domestic missions, working in a perfectly unsectarian spirit, done no small amount of good to the poor, and fully deserved the most ample support. The present winter promised to be particularly trying, and a special appeal was made in order that the missionaries might give food and clothing in relief of the needs of their poor neighbours. The poor had very often little justice done to them; they had been suffered to grow up in brutal ignorance; the prison had been made their schoolhouse; and over them, instead of the sheltering arms of love, had stretched the black arms of the gibbet. Outward force had been substituted for inward motive; the body had been punished while the soul should have been reformed; and evil had been attempted to be put down by evil, instead of being overcome with good. Happily a better spirit was beginning to prevail, and there was growing sympathy among the more favoured classes with the great masses of the people—a real concern for their physical, social, moral, and religious welfare.

The Rev. C. T. POYNTING, preaching at Platt Chapel, made special allusion to the prevailing distress. There was a distinction which at the present time they should keep in view, that between the pauper and the occasional distressed. They had better leave the former to the properly constituted authorities, the Boards of Guardians, who could administer skilfully and economically to the wants of that class. They were asked to assist those who had kept themselves away from the ranks of paupers by their own industry. Their aid was now asked to save those honest artisans from a future life of pauperism. No section or class of society could be effected without the one lower being pressed also. They might ask, how was it that there came to be so much distress at the present time, when 2,000 able-bodied persons were out of work in Manchester and Salford, each of whom would be receiving aid from his union or club? Shopkeepers who had supplied these men were now also suffering even worse than the artisans. They in the middle classes had been curtailing their expenses and planning for the cheapest in every way for the last year or two, and the result of this was that poor people, never before seen perhaps or never heard of, felt the burden of their economy by absolute want of work. The persons relieved by the domestic missions were not such as had degraded themselves through drink, but those who in the past had prided themselves on their social position and respectability. Their suffering was mental. This depression might have its good side; forced economy might leave them a more simple and more self-respected people; but they must meanwhile seek to alleviate this mental anguish and physical suffering.

GLOSSOP: WELCOME TO THE REV. W. HARRISON.

A LARGE party was gathered here on Wednesday evening, the 12th inst., to welcome the Rev. William Harrison as minister of the Fitzalan-street Chapel. There were present Captain Partington, the Revs. W. Harrison, H. E. Dowson, B.A., Jas. Black, M.A., Noah Green, J. Kertain Smith, and Russell Scott, of London. After tea in the schoolroom, a meeting was held in the church, presided over by Captain Partington. The secretary (Mr. Wright Booth) read letters apologising for absence from Mr. R. Crompton Potter and the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, the deeply regretted cause in the latter case being Mr. Steinthal's serious illness.

THE CHAIRMAN expressed his great pleasure in performing the duty they had laid upon him, in the absence of one who would have so ably filled the chair as Mr. Crompton Potter. He had looked with interest on the progress they had made under their late minister, who had been taken from them, and whose loss they all felt so deeply. In Mr. Harrison they would find another faithful minister and fellow-worker, and he wished them every happiness and success in their union as minister and people. He then called upon

The Rev. H. E. DOWSON, who said he had been asked to offer Mr. Harrison a welcome to their district on behalf of his brother ministers. This he did most cordially. He could not, indeed, welcome Mr. Harrison's coming as a new friend, for he had known Mr. Harrison for many years, had worked with him, and had learned to esteem him very highly. Mr. Dowson then referred with much feeling to their late minister, the Rev. Frederick Ashton, with whom he had been so closely connected when Mr. Ashton laboured at Gee Cross; and concluded by assuring Mr. Harrison that he could have no better pledge for warm sympathy and active assistance in his work on the part of the congregation, than the manner in which they had associated themselves to carry out every undertaking of their late minister, and the manner in which they had sustained the several institutions connected with their church and school during the vacancy of their pulpit. Mr. Dowson then gave Mr. Harrison the right hand of welcome.

The Rev. JAS. BLACK addressed the congregation on the mutual relations of minister and people.

MR. THOS. BARLOW, on behalf of the congregation, extended a most heartfelt welcome to Mr. Harrison, and to Mrs. Harrison and their family.

The Rev. W. HARRISON, who was received with much applause, said he could not sit on that platform and hear the allusions to their late minister, without feeling that in following him he had undertaken a grave responsibility. His great abilities, his excellent qualities of mind and heart, the character of the work he did in Glossop, and the memory of himself he had left in their hearts, made it difficult for anyone to follow him. When he (Mr. Harrison) received an invitation to become their minister, though he felt it a great honour to be thought worthy to succeed such a man, he could not help but hesitate. He told them candidly, without any false modesty, that he was very unworthy to succeed him. In only one thing did he claim to be at all his equal; that was in his earnest desire to spread the influence of their beautiful religion, and to be a real help to the people of that place. Though he fell short of their late minister in many things, he hoped he had something of his spirit, and that, inspired by his example, he might be able to take up the work where he had laid it down. They all knew that he had just left a field of labour where he had been engaged for ten years and a half, and they would understand that it had been no easy matter for him to tear himself away, for he had taken deep root there. When he told them that a large number of the scholars in the Sunday school had been born since he went there, that many of them had been baptised by him, and that many of the aged members had quietly gone to their rest during his ministry, they would see that he had no easy trial in making a change. And he confessed that very often, during the short time he had been in Glossop, his heart had been away at Swinton, and his mind had been filled with the countenances of the friends he had left there. But while he told them all this, he would also say that, when he felt it his duty to make a change, he would rather come to Glossop than any other congregation he knew. All he had heard of them, and what little he had seen, convinced him that, though they were small in number, they were a people in earnest, fully alive to their responsibilities as a congregation, a people who would help their minister in his work—in fact, that they were the kind of stuff out of which strong, healthy Christian churches were made. He came to them a stranger; he only knew a few of them as yet; but though his heart was very full of his old friends, it was large enough to make room for his new ones. He did not wish them to forget their old minister; he should be ashamed of them if he thought it possible; but, as he said on Sunday, he asked that in time they might admit him to occupy a place by his side in their confidence and esteem. (Applause.) After pointing out various ways in which the congregation could help him in his work, Mr. Harrison concluded by saying he had come amongst them to use his powers in the service of that religion which should have the same effect on the souls of men as the breezes of their hills had upon their bodies—to strengthen, refresh, and purify. He thanked them for the warm welcome they had given him, and prayed that their connection might be for the good of all concerned. (Applause.)

The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. Noah Green, Mr. William Pilkington, Mr. Brooks, and Mr. Wright Booth. After a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting was closed with a hymn and the benediction.

BOOK PRIZES.

Our correspondent on the Sunday School Prize Question regrets that the desired information is yet withheld. While he is grateful to Mr. Wade for the list of books referred to, he wishes to say that while the first three books mentioned are used in most of our schools as class books, they would scarcely be acceptable as prizes. If those teachers who know of a few choice books of special merit would only send us a list, it would doubtless be a great boon not only to our correspondent, but also to many other friends similarly situated.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

AINSWORTH.—On Saturday the 7th inst., a most successful concert was given under the auspices of the string band. The programme consisted of performances by the band, solos on the cornet and violin, by Mr. T. Taylor and Mr. J. Taylor respectively, songs by Messrs. Orr and Hilton, Miss Taylor and Miss Kirkman, and readings by the Rev. E. Turland and Mr. J. E. Parr. As an illustration of the good feeling which prevails in Ainsworth amongst the various sections of the Church of Christ, it may be mentioned that amongst the audience were the Rev. Norman Dredge, B.A., and Mrs. Dredge (Established Church).—On Wednesday the 10th inst., after the usual devotional service, Dr. Treadgold, of Bolton, gave a remarkable lecture on "Man as a Machine," in which he gave much useful information about the structure of the body and the laws of health.—On Saturday, the 14th inst., a magic lantern exhibition was given by the Rev. E. Turland and Mr. J. E. Parr to a large audience, the subjects being "Cyprus" and "Afghanistan."

BLACKPOOL.—The Rev. A. B. Camm has just concluded a course of lectures on "Modern Biography and Autobiography as Revealing some Characteristics of the Age." The following was the order:—"Jno. Stuart Mill, Philosopher and Working Man's Friend;" "Geo. Dawson, the Apostle of Free Religious Thought;" "Charles Kingsley, Advocate and Embodiment of Manly Religion." The lectures have been listened to with exceeding interest, and there have been very good congregations. On the occasion of the lecture on "Dawson," the church was quite full.

BELFAST.—HOPETON-STREET.—The establishment of a Band of Hope at this church and school was celebrated by an inaugural meeting on Tuesday the 10th inst. About 100 scholars, teachers, and friends partook of tea, after which the meeting was thrown open to the public, making the audience fully 175 persons. J. R. Neill, Esq., occupied the chair. A hymn having been sung, prayer was offered by the Rev. J. C. Street. Addresses were given by the Chairman, R. M'Calmont, Esq., president of Mountpottinger Society, Messrs. Orr and Herring, representatives from the Irish Temperance League, Revs. J. C. Street, J. Pollard, and D. Thompson, minister of the place, all of whom wished prosperity to the Society and the cause of total abstinence generally, especially among the young. At intervals, recitations and melodies by the scholars were interspersed, and a song, "The French Flower Girl," Miss Pettigrew, was most tastefully rendered. A vote of thanks was passed to all concerned for the success of the gathering.

EXETER.—The Devon Evening Express publishes a letter from the Rev. T. W. Chignell advocating the establishment of coffee taverns. He writes:—"Wine is a good gift of heaven, for hilarity and medicine. But if it be a fact—and evidence points that way—that nearly one-fifth of our English people die before their time, through excess from alcohol in some form, ought we not to provide other luxuries to beguile our population from their baneful habit? Experience shows that the athlete, the soldier, the Arctic explorer, and above all the "brain-worker," as Sir Henry Thompson says, are at least as well off in abstaining from, as in using alcohol. Elegant rooms, where good tea and coffee are sold early and late, would be, as The Lancet has recently said, one of the best aids to true temperance."

HALE, CHESHIRE.—The second of a series of winter evening musical entertainments was held at Hale Chapel School on Monday evening last. Mr. Alderman Heywood, J.P., of Bowdon, in the chair. The programme as on previous occasions consisted of piano forte solos and duets, vocal duets and songs, by Miss Dixon, Mrs. Balstone, Mrs. Lloyd, Mrs. Charlesworth, Mr. Paterson, and Revs. J. B. Lloyd and T. Lloyd Jones; and readings by Rev. E. S. Howse and the Chairman. The contribution of the Chairman, in the Lancashire dialect, from the works of Edwin Waugh, was highly appreciated, and added not a little to the amusement of the evening, and to making the meeting one of the most successful yet held. The usual votes of thanks to the ladies and gentlemen who had taken part, and the Chairman having been proposed, seconded and carried with acclamation, the entertainment concluded with the singing of the glees (Welsh) "Let the hill resound!" by the choir.

HIBBERT SCHOLARSHIP.—We are glad to learn that as the result of the recent examination the Hibbert Trustees have awarded their scholarship to Mr. George Evans, M.A., who is at present one of the senior students of Manchester New College, London.

HULME DOMESTIC MISSION, EMBDEN-STREET.—On Friday evening last the annual distribution of prizes and certificates, won by the scholars of the day schools for attendance, and from Government for drawing in connection with the Art and Science Department, numbering in all, with nine honour certificates, entitling the holders to three years' free instruction, 137, was made by Mr. Darbishire. There were upwards of 600 people present, a considerable majority of whom were parents and friends of the scholars. Besides addresses from Mr. Darbishire, who occupied the chair, Mr. Wm. Lord, master of the boys' school, and the Rev. James Harrop, a long and select programme of songs and recitations was gone through by the children in a manner most creditable to both the teachers and the pupils. During the proceedings, many of the delighted parents gave warm expression of their deep feelings of gratitude for the great benefits received by their children, and also to the hope, owing to the crowded condition of the room, that the next prize giving would take place in the Hulme Town Hall. A most hearty vote of thanks to the Chairman brought this very pleasant meeting to a close.

LIVERPOOL: RENSNAW-STREET.—The second entertainment was held on Wednesday evening last, the chair being occupied by Robt. Durning Holt, Esq. During the assembling of the scholars and their parents the fife and drum band of the Beaufort-street Domestic Mission played several lively airs in a very creditable manner, under the leadership of Mr. J. Macnaulty. A capital programme of music and singing was furnished by Mrs. Isaac Green, Mrs. Youde, Mr. Brockbank, Mr. Kitwood, and Mr. Geo. Gill; the readings being undertaken by Mr. Geo. Eyre Evans, and Mr. Macnaulty. A performance on the fairy bells was very sweetly rendered by Mr. Hargreaves Gill. At the close of the programme, on the motion of Mr. Holt, seconded by Rev. F. Summers, a hearty vote of thanks was awarded to the various ladies and gentlemen for their services, and a similar compliment, moved by Mr. Evans, and seconded by Mr. Isaac Green, was awarded by acclamation to the Chairman, who in his reply gave a few of his reminiscences as a teacher in the Sunday school, nearly twenty years ago. The National Anthem by the band closed a very pleasant evening.

MANCHESTER SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—On Sunday last a teachers' experience meeting was held in the Lower Mosley-street schoolroom. Mr. J. Wigley, vice president, occupied the chair. Mr. John Heys, in opening the meeting said: There was no influence so powerful for good as that of a Sunday-school teacher. He urged that they should devote more attention to the main work of the Sunday school, and constantly keep before them a high ideal of it. Messrs. J. Wigley, chairman, T. Parry Mills, J. H. Reynolds, and Miss Brann, also gave addresses. The meeting was closed with prayer by Mr. J. Wigley. Upwards of 70 persons were present.

PADIHAM.—Our minister, the Rev. H. Shaen Solly, M.A., completed a course of very able lectures on Sunday evening last, on the "Great Facts of Revealed Religion." I feel sure, says our correspondent, that that this course has given the young men and the congregation generally a clearer and firmer grasp of the great fundamentals of religion. The first was given on November 17, on "What we know of God," followed on succeeding Sunday evenings by "What we know of Prayer," "What we know of Conscience," "What we know of the Mystery of Evil," and "What we know of a Future Life." An anthem was sung on each evening by the chapel choir.

PRESTON.—A series of six Sunday evening lectures has just been concluded in the Percy-street Chapel of this town, in the delivery of which the Minister, the Rev. J. G. Evans, has been ably assisted by ministers of several neighbouring congregations. Notwithstanding unfavourable weather, these lectures have been well attended, and have unfolded various aspects of the Unitarian faith to deeply interested listeners. The last of the series was given last Sunday by the Rev. C. C. Coe, of Bolton, when the services of the day were commemorative of the 161st anniversary of this ancient chapel.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E. S. and N. W.—Next week.

SCHOOLS FOR OUR CHILDREN.

To the Editors.—It certainly never occurred to me before to suppose that Mr. Dobson is advocating the establishment of a school from which all non-Unitarian pupils are to be rigorously excluded, simply because they are not Unitarians; yet that must be the meaning of Mr. De Wasgindt's letter in your last number. This would certainly be turning the tables completely on our orthodox friends, but, I fear, in somewhat an unchristian way. Should such really be the central idea of the scheme in question, I beg decidedly to withdraw my name from all competition with its authors. Let me only recommend them to select some less populous place than Brighton for such an end. Surely some remote country village would be a safer spot in which to guard from all adverse influences the tender minds of our Unitarian children.

For myself, I feel no such unhealthy fear of possible juvenile Jesuits amongst my pupils. All that can be legitimately desired for our children is, I think, a fair field in which they will not feel themselves looked down upon and sneered at by their more numerous orthodox companions. This I believe I can guarantee at Hastings, promising at the same time that, where desired, most earnest attention will be given to religious teaching of a distinctly Unitarian type. The words quoted by Mr. De Wasgindt from our prospectus were simply intended, when written, as an assurance to other than Unitarian parents, that no undue advantage would be taken of the responsible position of teacher to influence their children's minds in a way of which they themselves would not approve. The same motives, of course, are not at work in the case of children of our own faith; nor did I anticipate that the words would be misinterpreted by those who held our views. I trust that this letter will correct any misapprehension that may have arisen from a carelessly chosen expression, and thanking you for your kindness, on which I am again presuming, remain yours truly,

PHILIP VANCESMITH.

St. Leonard's-on-Sea, Dec. 16, 1878.

COMING WEEK.

FLOWERY FIELD.—On Sunday the opening services will be continued at 10.45 and 6.30, when the Rev. Wm. Gaskell will preach.

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—On New Year's Day, devotional conference meeting at 7 p.m.

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—On Sunday, at 6.30, musical vesper service.

PENDLETON.—A Christmas service of song by the children and the choir, on Christmas Day.

STALYBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture, at 6.30, by the Rev. Noah Green, on "A Noble Life."

STRANGEWAYS: UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday, at 11 and 6.30, the Rev. J. T. Marriott will preach. Service at 11 on Christmas Day.

Marriage.

CHARLES-DORNAN.—On the 12th inst., at Lord-street Chapel, Oldham, by the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., Thomas Charles, of Bury, to Sarah Alice, daughter of Thomas Dornan, of Oldham.

Deaths.

BRICE.—On the 30th ult., at Beaufort-street, Liverpool, Thomas Brice, aged 71 years. For upwards of thirty years a faithful member of the Beaufort-street Mission. Deeply lamented.

LEIGH.—On the 4th inst., at his residence, Winton, Patricroft, Joseph D. Leigh, engineer, aged 56 years.

MEGGITT.—On the 14th inst., Thomas Meggitt, of Wide Bargate, Boston, aged 69.

TRIPPIER.—On the 30th ult., Hiram Trippier, of Rooden-lane, Prestwich, aged 58 years.

WURTZBURG.—On the 24th ult., at 13, Cecil-street, Greenheys, Charlotte Louisa, the beloved wife of Charles Louis Wurtzburg, Esq., aged 67. Friends will please accept this intimation.

NEW WELLS, WAKEFIELD. ESTABLISHED 1772.

S. HOLDSWORTH & SONS,
CABINET MAKERS, UPHOLSTERERS,
AND
GENERAL HOUSE FURNISHERS.
ONE OF THE LARGEST STOCKS IN THE KINGDOM.

Terms—Net Cash. All Goods Delivered Carriage Free.

PAPERHANGINGS.

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE:

93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS PAINTERS
VARNISHES, &c., &c.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester. London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, December 20, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—922.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Doing and Saying	460
American Notes	460
The Sadharan Brahmo Samaj	460
Middlesbrough: Isaiah Eadon	461
York: St. Saviourgate Chapel	461
Fire-side Readings—Christmas Gifts	461
The Real Christ	461
In Memoriam—Princess Alice	462
The "Jewish World" on Congregationalism and Unitarianism	462
Education of Women	462
The New Testament—revised version	462
Theology at Oxford	463
Flowerly Field	463
News of our Churches	465
Correspondence	466

CHARGE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Ten lines and under.....6d. a line.
After the first ten lines5d. a line.
For 6 consecutive insertions, a reduction of.....25 per cent.
Half column.....50 per cent.
Half column.....1. 6s. 6d.

NOW READY.

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC.

	s. d.
Tuck and gilt edges, with diary	1 0
Pelt case, red edges, "	0 9
Cloth, red edges, "	0 6
Cloth, blank paper	0 6
Paper cover	0 3

Orders should be sent to JOHN PHILLIPS, at once, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester.

FLOWERY FIELD CHURCH.

CONTINUATION OF OPENING SERVICES.

On Sunday, December 29th, the Opening Services will be continued. Morning at 10.45; evening at 6.30. The Rev. CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A., will preach, morning and evening.
The Collections will be devoted to the ordinary expenses of the Church.

STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

On New Year's Day a DEVOTIONAL CONFERENCE MEETING will be held, at seven p.m. Several ministers and laymen are expected to take part. All who sympathise are requested to aid by their presence, this attempt to promote a greater warmth of devotion amongst us.

CROSS STREET CHAPEL.

RELIEF COMMITTEE.

The Committee have several urgent cases on hand, and earnestly solicit donations of money, clothing, or other goods, which may be forwarded to the Chapel Rooms.
GEO. W. RAYNER WOOD, Treasurer.
JAMES BELLHOUSE, Hon. Sec.

UPPER BROOK STREET FREE CHURCH.

SOLEMN MUSICAL VESPER "In Memory of Our Dead," on Sunday evening, December 29th, at 6.30.

OLD MEETING, GREAT YARMOUTH.

APPEAL FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION.

Owing to the great and continued increase in the attendance of children at this School, together with the want of accommodation for conducting with efficiency and convenience the social and public work of the Church, the congregation feel themselves compelled to enlarge the present schoolroom.

As the congregation have not at their command sufficient means to provide the whole of the estimated cost, they are under the necessity of soliciting subscriptions from all those who are in sympathy with the religious education of the young, and who are desirous of obtaining in our respective towns all requisite facilities for the teaching and practical application of the principles and aims of Unitarian Christianity.

Subscriptions will be received by the following gentlemen, Members of the Committee of Management:—
SIR THOMAS B. BEEVOR, BART., Chairman,
20, Regent-road, Great Yarmouth.
JOHN LEACH, Hon. Treasurer,
Market-place, Great Yarmouth.
CHARLES RUMBOLD, Jun., Hon. Secretary,
4, Dene-side, Great Yarmouth.
All subscriptions received will be acknowledged by the Secretary through the post. Amount received to this date, £48. 17s. 2d.
26th November, 1878.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, BOLTON.

AN APPEAL.

The Committee of the above Church have entered into negotiations for the purchase of the Lark-street Temperance Hall. For his purpose, and for needful alterations, the sum of £900 will be required, and the Committee appeal to all friends of Free Religious Thought to aid them in the work they have undertaken. The Congregation from its commencement has been entirely self-supporting. The Sunday school is doing a good and useful work in a neighbourhood where a school is much needed. It was opened in August, 1873, when it commenced with 12 scholars; now it numbers 146.

Towards this sum the members have raised £300.
The following persons have kindly consented to receive Subscriptions, which will be acknowledged through the columns of the Unitarian Herald:—
Mrs. Stephen Winkworth, Ravenswood, Heaton, Bolton.
J. P. Thomasson, Esq., Woodside, Heaton, Bolton.
Rev. H. Sharn Solly, M.A., Padstow.
Rev. W. Carey Walters, Whitechurch, Salop.
Mr. Bernard Dawson, The Laurels, Malvern Link.
Mr. Herbert V. Mills, Memorial Hall, Albert Sq., Manchester

MINISTRY TO THE POOR.

The Mission is characteristically Christian and unsectarian. It is not an almsgiving institution, but during many years of quiet labour has devoted itself to acquiring a large experience and a considerable personal acquaintance amongst our poor "neighbours."

This winter, however, it is quite impossible for the Missionaries not to feel obliged to give food, and clothing, and firing, to relieve the terrible needs of those whom they visit.

The Committee have made arrangements for a regular and increasing distribution of good stores and cooked food, clothes, and materials.

It is a principle of the Society to discourage indiscriminate alms. While they know no distinction between "neighbours" who are in want, they endeavour to give such gifts only where and in such a manner that they may afford really healthy relief and help to body and mind.

For this special effort the Committee earnestly beg for immediate subscriptions.

Money, or clothing, or materials, or orders on shops for such things, may be sent to any of the undersigned.

During the illness of Rev. S. A. Steinthal, the Secretary, to Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE, Treasurer, 26, George-street, Manchester; or to Rev. J. HARROP, 3, Poynton-street, Greenhill-street, Greenheys; or to Rev. B. WALKER, 3, Franklin-street, Rochdale Road.

DISTRESS FUND.

	£	s.	d.
Advertised	85	0	0
S. L. Helm	5	0	0
J. Williams (Stockport)	1	0	0
J. S. D.	2	0	0
Clerks	1	15	0
Embsen-street Day School	1	7	6
Miss Hudson	0	10	0
Miss Worthington	5	0	0
G. Westermann	0	7	6
R. Potter	1	1	0
J. Leister	5	0	0
C. Tafel	2	0	0
W. Evans	2	0	0
Jas. McConnel	5	0	0
Mrs. Penrose	2	0	0
C. E. Schwann	5	0	0
Memorial Hall Trustees	20	0	0
Mrs. Behrens	5	0	0
Silas Leigh, Esq.	10	0	0
Mrs. Booth	10	0	0
R. Hilditch, Esq.	5	0	0

£174 1 0

WANTED, in March next, an experienced
Certificated MISTRESS, for a Mixed School, at Sale.—Apply by letter, stating age and particulars of experience, "Z," Box 633, Post Office, Manchester.

SITUATION Wanted as Useful Attendant on an Elderly Lady, or children out of the nursery: good plain needlewoman and dressmaker: four years' character.—Address A. B., 7, Redcliffe Square, South Kensington, London, S.W.

WANTED, at the end of January, for the Chowbent British School, TWO FEMALE EX-PUPIL TEACHERS, one for Infants, another for First Standard: must be good disciplinarians: salary £40, and a share of any surplus income of the school.—Address: Rev. M. C. Frankland, Chowbent, near Manchester.

WANTED, a Situation as COMPANION, or to assist a lady in the management of her household: cheerful disposition; active; musical; domesticated: good needlewoman; good references.—Address E. G., Unitarian Herald Office.

THE UNITARIAN MAGAZINE.

Monthly. Price Twopenny. Orders to be sent to Mr. R. STEWART, 38, Annet-street, Govanhill, Glasgow.
"Such a magazine, if it could be widely diffused, would be the best possible missionary of our Liberal Religious Faith throughout Scotland."—Inquirer.

Hirst, Smyth, and Son, 137, Gower-street, London.
NEW PARLOUR DRAWING FOR CHRISTMAS.

Now ready, in cloth, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.
THE PRINCE'S TRIUMPH:
A Drama for Home Representation.
N.B.—New Books at 1d. in the shilling discount for cash, free by post. Parcels of £2 and upwards at 25 per cent discount.

Now ready. In small 8vo, pp. xvi.—240. Cloth, red edges. Price 2s. 6d. (to Congregations, 1s. 8d.)

A BOOK OF PRAYER: IN THIRTY ORDERS
OF WORSHIP. With additional Prayers and Thanksgivings. Edited by R. CROMPTON JONES.
Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

Now ready, for January, Price 4d.,
TEACHERS' NOTES
For Moral and Religious Lessons.

Contains—Moral Lessons from Common Things; An Ear of Wheat; A Piece of Coal; A Piece of Ice; The Spider; The Ant; and Ten Lessons on the Life of Jesus.
London: Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

"EVENIN' NEWS! H-HEEVNIN' NEWS!"
And other Stories. By J. J. WRIGHT. Just published. New book for boys and girls. Illustrated. Interleaved with bright bits of verselets. Pretty bindings. Price 9d.

Publishers: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., London.
* * * Mr. Wright's own Special Arrangement for Schools, and for Teachers giving Prizes or Presents—
25 BOOKS FOR 12s. 6d.
If ordered in one parcel of 25 copies and upwards, "Evenin' News," for schools and teachers, 6d. each.—For this order write direct to J. J. W., Berners-street, Leicester. A sample copy sent for nine stamps.

1879. { DIARIES, ALMANACKS, { 1879.
CHRISTMAS CARDS, best designs,
and great variety. A large lot of SCRIB-
BLING PAPER at 6d. per lb.

JOHNSON & RAWSON, 89, Market-street, Manchester.

Now ready, No. 37, for January, 1879,

YOUNG DAYS,
Price One Penny. Numerous illustrations.

Contents—How a Little Mission Scholar became a Princess; What a Good Man said to Boys and Girls; A New Year's Motto; Old Year Musings; Long Words; Johnny Dare; Tommy Coale; Animals that Learned by Experience; My Old Jack; Heroes; Puzzle Bag; The Voices of the Bells.

Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD.—BOARD-
ING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—For Prospectus apply to Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, Principal.

SCHOOLS FOR OUR CHILDREN.—
ANDERIDA HOUSE SCHOOL, St. Leonards-on-Sea,
REOPENS January 21st.—Prospectuses, &c., by return of post.

SEASIDE EDUCATION FOR GIRLS.—
DYSART HOUSE, CLEVEDON.—Miss E. MARTIN'S
Pupils will RE-ASSEMBLE on Monday, January 20th, 1879.

LANCASTER.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, B.A., will REOPEN School on Friday, January 24th, 1879.—
Present address: care of Mrs. Davis, Almswood, Evesham.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—Miss JEFFERY
receives as Boarders GIRLS attending the Bath High School, to whom she gives her personal care and supervision.—
9, Norfolk Crescent.

CROYDON.—School for Girls.—Miss Biddell, who has passed in honours the Cambridge and Kensington Examinations, receives Boarders: home comforts: terms 40 to 60 guineas.—2, Ailsa Villas, Wellesley Road, next Free Christian Church. Half-term commences November 4th.

BRIGHTON: UNITARIAN COLLEGE.

This High-class School will be OPENED on January 21st, 1879. Only Academical Honourmen will be on the Educational staff. The Religious Instruction given in the School will be in full accordance with the principles of Unitarianism. Referee: The Rev. T. R. Dobson, Minister of the Unitarian Church, Brighton.—For prospectus, terms, and testimonials, apply to Mr. A. de Wasgindt, temporary, No. 12, Dorset Gardens, Brighton.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL.

For Boys from ten to sixteen years of age: Junior Classes for children under ten years of age. Pupils are now working for the London Matriculation Examinations of June, 1879, and June, 1880. The arrangements of the School permit of some Girls being received with their brothers. The NEXT TERM begins on Wednesday, January 22nd, 1879.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE, Heath Brow, Hampstead, London, N.W.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.

Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., of the Universities of London and Heidelberg, assisted by Mr. G. H. HENSON, University of London, thoroughly prepares Boys for college, the local examinations, or for business. The school possesses an unusually complete provision of apparatus and specimens for the teaching of science. No means is neglected which the experience of fourteen years has shown to conduce to the progress and interest of pupils in their studies. Good cricket ground and playground.

Nottingham now offers special educational advantages in its Midland Counties' Art Museum, School of Art, Natural History Museum, and Cambridge Lectures.

BRIGHTON.—Miss WOOD, 12, Lower Rock
Gardens.—Board or Apartments. Terms on application.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE,

39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.
Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE
HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

ARMSTRONG AND RICHARDS, St. Ann's
Place, Manchester. SHIRTS of superior quality, 48s. for half-a-dozen, made to order. Youths' and Boys' Shirts to order.

ARMSTRONG AND RICHARDS, St. Ann's
Place, Manchester. HOSIERS and GLOVERS, &c.
Children's best NOTTINGHAM HOSIERY in great variety.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale.
We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to
24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street,
Manchester.

DOING AND SAYING.

Coal has been discovered on the shores of Lake Nyassa, Central Africa.

Important Roman remains have been discovered in the desert of Sahara.

Metz, which at the census of 1871, had 51,332 inhabitants, has now only 39,000.

A Japanese in this country wrote home: "Everybody here is a doctor, and always shakes your hand and asks after your health."

During the present month many Catholic churches in Switzerland, which had been closed for five years, have been re-opened for worship.

Linguistic lessons are to be diminished, and mathematical and natural science instruction increased in the Government schools of Germany.

Sojourner Truth, a negro woman, over a hundred years of age, is lecturing in New York. Fifty years ago her hair was grey; it is now black as jet.

A Ruskin Society has been formed in Manchester. It is intended to give public readings from Mr. Ruskin's writings, to place collections of his works in public libraries, and to unite Mr. Ruskin's friends in one body.

Lina Berger, a young Swiss lady, has just taken the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Berne University, after a brilliant examination; and two other ladies, American and Austrian, have passed as doctors of medicine.

We learn from the Jewish World that one of the most prominent Rabbis of Germany has intimated his intention of visiting America at an early date, to deliver a course of lectures on the true significance of reform and the duty of Israel in our century.

For nearly thirty-five years the Ragged School Union has been exercising a vast influence for good in the thickest, most wretched, and neglected portions of the metropolis, rescuing from infamy and crime multitudes of children, large numbers of whom are now occupying positions of respectability and usefulness. This beneficent labour is put in peril by the yearly falling-off of subscriptions, the expenditure for the last three years having exceeded the income by £2,200. To remedy this deplorable state of things Lord Shaftesbury makes an earnest appeal to the public.

Our readers will find a specimen of the effect of church influence upon the men of to-day by reading the following. An arrangement had been made at Blackley, by Mr. Ben Brierley and others, to give an entertainment for the benefit of the poor of the neighbourhood, and an application was made to the rector of Blackley for the use of the church schools for the performance. He replied as follows: "I do not think a Church school ought to be used for feasting the aged members of Roman Catholics, Unitarians, and others, who are diametrically opposed to us both in religion and politics." It is apparently the old story, with this difference, that formerly the church burned those who conscientiously disagreed with her teaching, now they are allowed to die by starvation.

The Rev. Hely H. Smith, rector of Tansley, near Matlock, in a letter to the Record, contends that Protestantism is the correlative of prosperity, while that of Romanism or Ritualism is decline. Protestantism and prosperity have always gone hand-in-hand, while Popery has invariably been either accompanied with or quickly followed by national calamities. He traces the fluctuations in the position of the country from William the Conqueror down to the present time, when, he says, "an ominous darkness is obscuring the long sunshine of our prosperity." This is all simply the inevitable consequence of the giant strides Romanism and Ritualism are making in our land. At the next election he wants the electors to bear this in mind and to make the Protestant question the great political question of the day.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., remarked last week, amidst the loud laughter of the House of Commons, that the Bishop of Gloucester had written a letter saying that he supported the attack on Afghanistan and the slaughter of the Ameer's subjects because he was interested in the blessed work of the propagation of the Gospel; and he, being an orthodox prelate, thought that the English would carry on that work much better than the Russians. So they were really now to understand that General Roberts's corps and all those wild hill tribes were simply one branch of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. The same inveterate joker asked what had these Indians to do with it? They did not want war. They were not Christians, and did not want all this bloodshed. In the same debate Sir H. James said, with reference to the idea of punishing Russia through Afghanistan, that no man had a right to knock down Richard because he was afraid of Thomas. And it is equally clear that no man has a right to knock down Richard because he is anxious to convert Thomas.

The rural deanery of Prescott, which embraces a considerable part of Liverpool, has adopted, by 16 votes to three, a resolution advocating the entire closing of public-houses on Sunday; but rejected a proposition that cocoa-rooms should be opened on that day. Mr. David M'Minn, who introduced the subjects, modestly suggested that it was not altogether advisable that the publicans should be left in undisputed possession of the field on Sundays. He also warned the meeting that if Sabbath necessities of the enormous population were not provided for by Christian men, "the world" would take the matter in hand by opening galleries and museums; and he even expressed the opinion that this would "be infinitely preferable to the shocking state of things which now existed." The majority of the meeting, however, seemed to prefer "the present shocking state of things" to any reform which might be brought about by the secular agency of cocoa-rooms and museums.

An important proclamation has been published by the Queen of Madagascar with reference to internal affairs. Some little time ago a new official was appointed by the Queen, who may be said to be a kind of amalgamation of our chief constable, school visitor, registrar, and sanitary inspector. One or more of this class will be placed in 156 towns and villages of Imerina, the central province, where alone the reforms will in the first place take effect. Those just appointed to the new office assembled recently in Antananariva, and in the presence of a large number of people were formerly instructed as to their work. Their instructions were read out by the Prime Minister, in the Queen's name; they are printed in a green book, and consist of eighty-seven clauses, preceded by a preamble, of a portion of which the following is a translation:—"I thank God very much because the Gospel of Jesus Christ has entered my land and my kingdom, to make wise my people, and to make them know God, that they may obtain everlasting life in the end. . . . And on account of this protection which I have got from God, which I see is very good, then I rested my kingdom upon God." Among the other laws is one against selling, making, or drinking native rum. There are also laws having reference to churches, and their orderly management; a law forbidding work on Sunday; and a law against unjust weights or balances.

AMERICAN NOTES.

Rev. Brooke Herford has been giving three Sunday evening lectures on Ancient Egypt. Subjects:—"Egypt's Place in the Ancient World;" "Life in Ancient Egypt;" "Religion in Ancient Egypt."

In one corner of Emerson's house, at Concord, is a curious little room which has always been known as the "Saints' Chamber." On its walls are inscriptions in the hand writing of the good men who have rested there.

The papers are telling us that of thirty ministers who have within a comparatively short time left the Orthodox Congregationalist body, sixteen have joined the Liberal ranks—twelve becoming Unitarians, one a Universalist, two Independents, and one calling himself simply a "Radical."

The admirers of Dr. Bushnell, who did so much to liberalise and rationalise the orthodoxy of our day, are about to place a mural tablet in the Park Church, at Hartford, Conn., in commemoration of his brilliant genius and great services as a theologian and a scholar. He was pastor of the church 26 years.

Dr. Bellows declared at the Philadelphia Convention that he had been told fifty times by orthodox friends: "You Unitarians do not know the service you are rendering; you haven't half enough confidence in yourselves," and then he added, "That service consists largely in interpreting to men's minds their own growing thought and faith."

Rev. A. P. Abbott, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., who for three years has been keeping up a great Sunday evening meeting in the Opera House of that city, where many hundreds of the unchurched have heard a broad, earnest, uplifting Gospel from his lips, has lately sought affiliation with the Unitarian body. The American Unitarian Association has just voted 500 dollars from its funds to help Mr. Abbott in his admirable work.

In a recent number of the Atlantic Monthly is an article that should be read by every member of every church in the land, Orthodox and Liberal. It is entitled "Certain Dangerous Tendencies in American Life." The drift of the article is, that the members and ministers of the churches generally doubt, if they do not positively disbelieve, the creeds; that churches are becoming societies for religious amusements; and that the sermons are as little doctrinal as possible because the ministers fear to speak their thoughts. Unity trusts that some of our orthodox brethren will read the article and learn whose theology is now "of the mollusk order."

As a single interesting illustration of how far the spirit of religious inquiry is spreading, and how almost world-wide is coming to be the desire for a more rational Christianity, Unity prints a letter recently handed to it by Rev. J. B. Green, of Montreal, Canada, which had just been received by him from the Director of the National College of Honduras:

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Central America,
Aug. 20, 1878.

To the Editor of the Rational Christian, Montreal:
Dear Sir,—Having learned your address through my brother in Quebec, I hasten to learn more of you and your publications. Will you please give me fully your views, as there are many of us here who are pretty rational, but without any definite guides as relates to Christianity.—Yours very truly, E. E. RIOPEL, Director National College.

THE SADHARAN BRAHMO SOMAJ.

THE proposal to organise the Brahmo Somaj movement in India has long been debated among its leaders. One of the charges brought against Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen was that he had placed obstacles in the way of such organisation. We of the liberal churches are aware how much there is to be said on both sides of that question. For our own part we are not so much afraid of systematic action in common as some of our neighbours, and we could heartily wish well to the organisation of Brahmoism which has at length been completed by the party who have always supported that cause, were it not that we must regret the insistence upon uniformity of worship, and the centralised direction of affiliated local Somajes. A more open constitution was quite compatible with the benefits of united action. By and by we shall look for a reform here, when the desire of liberty predominates over the need of law.

The Brahmo Public Opinion, of October 31st, contains the rules of "The Sadharan Brahmo Somaj," finally adopted on the 19th September. The following are the principal enactments:—

The objects of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj are to establish a constitutional organisation in the Brahmo Somaj, to do all works in connection with the Somaj in conformity with the views of the Brahmo public and the Brahmo Somajes, and thereby establish a bond of union in the entire Brahmo community, to advance the welfare of different Somajes, and of the Brahmo public, by combined efforts, to propagate Brahmoism by various means, and keeping these objects mainly in view to render help whenever needed to the promotion of works of public good. All persons who believe in the fundamental principles of Brahmoism, i.e., those who believe in the existence of God and in the necessity of worship, and do not ascribe divinity to any created object, or consider any person or book as infallible and as the only means of salvation, who are not less than eighteen years of age, and pay an annual subscription for the furtherance of the objects of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj, shall be eligible as members of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj. Difference of sex shall not make any difference with regard to eligibility to membership. Members may be elected on being duly proposed and seconded at any meeting of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj, or of its general committee; and on their signifying that they are eligible as members in accordance with the requirements of the rules the names of members so elected shall be entered in the register of members. Men celebrated in connection with religion may be elected as honorary members. If any member publicly professes his disbelief in the fundamental principles of Brahmoism, or becomes guilty of any heinous crime, after due inquiry the general committee shall have the power to make a proposal to remove such member's name from the list of members in any sitting of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj, when his name may be removed. Any person whose name may have been removed from the list of members for some reason or other, may again at his own request be duly elected according to the general rule for the election of members. Any person whose name may have been removed for heinous crimes shall have to give proofs of his having borne a good character for at least one year. The Sadharan Brahmo Somaj shall have a president, a secretary, an assistant-secretary, a treasurer, a general committee of 40 members, and a sub-committee of 12 members (besides the office-bearers) appointed by the last, to be called the managing committee, the latter to meet once a month, the general committee to meet once a quarter. The general meeting of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj shall take place once a year. There is a curious rule on the Rights of Absent Members: At any sitting of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj, or of the general committee, absent members shall have power to write to the secretary their opinion on the subject of discussion for that sitting. These votes shall be taken into consideration when the sense of the meeting is taken.

The section against which we think there is ground for objection is the following: The managing committee shall frame regulations for the erection of churches, formation of congregations, appointment of ministers, and conducting of Divine service, always keeping in view the advancement and uniformity of public worship, and shall submit such regulations to the general committee, who shall in their turn submit them (with corrections as may be necessary) to meeting of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj for approval. Those Brahmo Somajes that will place themselves under these regulations shall be reckoned as affiliated Somajes.

MIDDLESBOROUGH: ISAIAH EADON.

ON Sunday evening, December 15th, the Rev. John Bevan, of Bolton, formerly of Middlesborough, preached the funeral sermon of the late Isaiah Eadon. The congregation was large. The text was from Psalm vi., 4, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me." We did not know, said Mr. Bevan, what were the capacities of joy, of happiness, of content, until we had sounded at least some of the possible depths of sorrow, and loss, and disappointment. Until we are shaken out of our moral thoughtlessness by some great shock and conflict of the spirit, we cannot tell what nobleness of strength, what debasements of weakness lie concealed within us. Still more, our faith is never firmly rooted in our hearts till we have looked out upon life and faced what it would be without faith. We never know what God is and may be to our spirits until we have gone down into the valley of the shadow of death with Him, and there in the thick darkness felt the stay of His presence, and the comfort of His love. The late Isaiah Eadon was for 15 or 16 years a striking figure in the life of Middlesborough, and now, whilst comparatively young in years, he had been called to pass through the valley of the shadow of death. In the hard school of labour he had been taught to think clearly and reason correctly. He had through reading and observation treasured up a great store of knowledge, which was always ready for use. His literary taste was such as you seldom find in a working man. His own views were broad, and he manifested something approaching contempt for the exclusive spirit of Sectarianism. He then spoke of his labours in the cause of education, politics, and religion. In daily life he was no saint; but beneath the hard and outward crust of his nature there was a depth of feeling and generosity which none could fairly appreciate who did not know him intimately. In intelligence, virtue, integrity, and true religion, meaning love to God, and love to man, he was much ahead of his class. He was like one of the flowers that grew on the mountain side, beautiful and fragrant in his way. He was cabined, cribbed, and confined by the iron hand of circumstances, yet in his short life he rose to a position of intelligence and usefulness. Doubtless he often fell below his own ideal, and so do those who are placed in more favourable circumstances. He who did his work well and faithfully in the position in which he was placed, was as true and noble as those who did their work well in stations infinitely more commanding. He appealed, in conclusion, to those present, to go forth into the world and enrich it by honesty, sincerity, and purity. The age wanted men who dared to be true to their convictions, and men who not only had right to claim, but duties to perform—men who would put their integrity into their work—men who would set their faces against the frivolity and luxury of the age, who would set an example of high thinking and simple living—men who would esteem conduct above dogma—men who would take the thought and spirit of Jesus into the world to save and redeem it.

YORK: ST. SAVIOURGATE CHAPEL.

ON Tuesday afternoon, December 17th, a bazaar in aid of the Church Building Fund was opened in the Kenrick Rooms by Edwin Wade, Esq., who stated that the object of the bazaar was to clear off, if possible, the debt upon the new school. They were perfectly well aware that in that school no articles of faith or creeds would be taught, for its promoters aimed at something higher. They wished to teach the children to love God and to fear wrong doing, and they hoped to receive the sympathy of all liberal Christians in the undertaking. He then declared the bazaar open.—(Applause.) Mr. Councillor E. T. Wilkinson endorsed what Mr. Wade had said. The Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved said the response they had received from friends who had contributed to the bazaar was very gratifying. Not only had the members of their own congregation contributed liberally, but much assistance had been rendered by those outside the congregation, both in York and other places. Mr. C. WALKER observed that they had received handsome contributions from Evesham, Norwich, London, and elsewhere, and he thought such practical sympathy with them deserved some public acknowledgment. He therefore proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the donors. This was seconded by Mr. G. C. LEE, and passed unanimously. The business of the bazaar then commenced. The following ladies presided at the stalls, which were well laden with useful and fancy articles:—Miss Swaine, Mrs. Cowling, Mrs. Hammond, Mrs. Wellbeloved, and Miss Powell. Mrs. Cox-Walker and Miss Drummond had charge of the refreshment stall. The great attraction of the evening was the phonograph, which was exhibited for the first time in York by Mr. Cox-Walker, of the firm of Messrs. T. Cooke and Son, by permission of Mr. Alderman Nottage (of the London Stereoscopic Company,) who purchased the British patent from Mr. Edison, the inventor. Mr. Cox-Walker gave a very lucid explanation of the working of this marvel of science, so that no one could fail to understand the principle upon which the sounds were reproduced after the instrument had been sung or spoken into. Briefly, the phonograph consists of a brass cylinder, around which runs a spiral groove. The operator speaks into a mouthpiece upon a thin diaphragm, exactly like a telephone, to which a metal point is attached. The cylinder is covered with tin foil, and the point being put in connection, and the handle turned while the operator is speaking, the point runs in the groove and makes a number of indentations in the tin foil corresponding to the vibrations of the diaphragm caused by the voice. On repeating the revolutions of the cylinder the same sounds are re-produced, the indentations in the tin foil, acting upon the metal point, causing the diaphragm to vibrate and communicate its motion to the air. The singing is very distinct, but the reproduced words of a speaker are somewhat thick, though the result is marvellous in the extreme. Two instruments were exhibited, one working by clock work and the other by hand. By the former the tone is reproduced more correctly, owing to the greater regularity in the turning of the instrument.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

A FRIEND who had no money to spend for jewels or silks, or even antique vases, has employed his Christmas more wisely than this, and in his action there is more angelic music than in those divine old statues. He filled a large basket full of cakes, and went forth into our most miserable streets to distribute them among hungry children. How little dirty faces peeped after him, round street corners, and laughed from behind open gates. How their eyes sparkled as they led along some shivering barefooted urchin, and cried out: "This little boy has had no cake, sir!" Sometimes a greedy lad would get two shares by false pretences; but this was no conclusive proof of total depravity in children who never ate cake from Christmas to Christmas. No wonder the stranger with his basket excited a prodigious sensation. Mothers came to see who it was that had been so kind to their little ones. Every one had a story to tell of health ruined by hard work, of sickly children, or drunken husbands. It was a genuine outpouring of hearts. An honest son of the Emerald Isle stood by, rubbing his head, and exclaimed: "Did my eyes ever see the like o' that? a jiltleman giving cake to folks he don't know, and niver asking a bit o' money for the same." Alas! eighteen centuries ago that chorus of good-will was sung, and yet so simple an act of sympathising kindness astonishes the poor.

In the course of his Christmas rambles our friend entered a house occupied by fifteen families. In the corner of one room, on a heap of rags, lay a woman with a babe three days old, without food or fire. In another very small apartment was an aged, weather-beaten woman. She pointed to an old basket of pins and tape, as she said: "For sixteen years I have carried that basket on my arm through the streets of London; and often have I come home with weary feet, without money enough to buy my supper. But we must always pay our rent in advance, whether we have a loaf of bread to eat or not." Seeing the bed without clothing, her visitor inquired how she slept. "Oh, the house is very leaky. The wind whistles through and through, and the rain and snow come driving in. When any of us are sick, or the weather is extra cold, we lend our bedding, and some of us sit up while others get a nap." As she spoke a ragged little girl came in to say: "Mammy wants to know whether you will lend her your fork?" "To be sure I will, dear," she replied in the heartiest tones imaginable. She would have been less generous had her fork been a silver one. Her visitor smiled, as he said: "I suppose you borrow your neighbor's knife in return for your fork." "Oh, yes," she replied; "and she is as willing to lend as I am. We poor folks must help one another. It is all the comfort we have." The kind-hearted creature did not know, perhaps, that it was precisely such comfort as the angels have in heaven; only theirs is without the drawback of physical suffering and limited means.

THE REAL CHRIST.

DR. R. LAIRD COLLIER.

HERE is a life whose passion was truth, whose pleasure was purity, whose product was peace. We partake of these holy delights in some measure when we partake of the faith of his life. Christ had great faculty for leading men to these—to religion, to God, and so was a mediator between man and God. Not a mediator between man and himself, for he came not to show us himself, but to show us the Father. So faith in God is the faith of Christ; the very mission of the Master is hindered and defeated when faith stands still in him. This is obstruction, not mediation. If this spiritual instrument stops the vision by the murkiness of its own lenses, this obscurity is simply the dust that ages of false and scholastic speculation have accumulated. This brushed away, and the spiritual eye is unhindered, ay, helped to see that which, without it, it could see not at all, or at least as afar off, minified, a speck clothed in haziness. There is a sense in which, therefore, faith in Christ hinders and annuls the faith of Christ.

BLACKPOOL: CHRISTMAS TREE.—On Wednesday last our Unitarian friends held their Christmas Tree. The little church was beautifully decorated for the occasion, evergreens, pictures, mottoes, and flags ornamenting the walls. After tea the business of the evening commenced. There were two large trees, and suspended from the boughs were all kinds of useful and ornamental articles. The dressing of the trees and sale of goods were ably carried out by Mrs. Camm, Mrs. Marsden, Mrs. Holt, Mrs. Ben Hulme, and Miss Yates. Laid out on a table was a first-rate assortment of glass goods. This stall was under the management of Mrs. Burtles, assisted by Mr. Stewart, and realised a very handsome sum. One of the most attractive articles for sale was a beautifully carved miniature Tudor bed, the workmanship of Mr. Helm. The Rev. A. B. Camm presided, and gave a hearty welcome to all the friends from other denominations in the town. Valuable contributions were received from inland Unitarian friends, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Wrigley, Windermere; Miss Dover, Bolton; Mr. Coffey, Mr. Whitworth, and Mrs. Tottie, Manchester; and Miss Oliver, Pendleton; also friends at Todmorden. Mr. Ainsworth of Carnforth sent per Mrs. Little £5 for the Minister. The whole proceeds of the tree amounted to about £38.

IN MEMORIAM.

Princess Alice of Great Britain,

GRAND DUCHESS OF HESSE-DARMSTADT.

BORN, APRIL 25, 1843.

DIED, DECEMBER 14, 1878.

THRONES stand apart, their lives that sit thereon
 Fenced in with forms, by ceremony barred
 From common converse with plain truths, and lone,
 Though in full light of all the world's regard,
 Sad lives were theirs in such high slavery bound,
 But for the love that will not be denied
 Its way to human hearts, though, robed and crowned,
 Their owners sit apart in sceptred pride.
 For Kings and Queens are men and women too,
 And palaces are homes, on which descend
 The blessings that well-governed homes ensue,
 The curses that on ill-ruled homes attend.
 Our QUEEN among all Queens this truth has known,
 And made us know it, for her country's cheer;
 Best-ruled of English homes in hers has shown,
 Till, from the highest to the humblest here,
 England has joyed her joy and grieved her grief,
 Prayed at her side by her good husband's bed,
 And when Heaven sent the woe beyond relief,
 Our hearts, that could not comfort, for her bled.
 We knew such light was round that darkened throne
 As comes from children's love and widow's faith;
 And most we heard and blest the name of one
 Whose heart showed firmest by that bed of death.
 One sweet face earliest at the sufferer's side,
 Latest to seek the rest that love gainsays;
 One weakness still the stronger the more tried,
 One yearning look that met his latest gaze.—
 And when fond daughter was made loving wife,
 And carried to her home beyond the sea
 England's God-speed, we joyed to learn her life
 Was all a life so disciplined should be.
 As wife, as mother, and as sovereign there
 She lived by the example set her here;
 Sowing all round the seed that fruit must bear
 Of blessedness, far on, from year to year.
 When joy and sorrow wove into her lot
 Their web of bright and black, we noted still
 How joy into o'erweening raised her not,
 How sorrow wrung no murmur at Heaven's will—
 Just seventeen years since then, and as our Queen
 Touched the dark threshold of her day of woe,
 Still in that memory of love kept green,
 Lo, now, she, too, hath gone—where all must go,
 Princes and subjects—gone, so young, to rest;
 Gone from the home she loved, the children fair
 She reared as she was reared, the land she blessed,
 The wise good works whereof she made her care.
 So fair, so young, so good, so much well done
 Of life's best work, so much left still to do:
 Sweet soul—with all those crowns so early won,
 There needed not the mother-martyr's too!
 Her death was such as such a life should find,—
 A death in love, caught from her boy's dear lips.
 Sorrow is well for those she leaves behind
 In sudden darkness of this swift eclipse,
 But not for her,—she is where love sits crowned
 Upon the Throne, has reached the shining shore:
 Is with the sire in whom her heart was bound,
 Is with the babes she finds to lose no more.
 —Punch.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1878.

THE "JEWISH WORLD" ON CONGREGATIONALISM AND UNITARIANISM.

In an article on "The Anomalous Attitude of Congregationalism," the Jewish World notices the claim of the Congregationalists to be descended ecclesiastically from the two thousand Puritan divines, ejected from the National Church, under the harsh act passed in 1662, as well as from the body known as Independents in the reign of the Protector. "But," says the Jewish World, "their right to the honour of being the lineal heirs of the spirit, theology, and church administration, peculiar to the Independents of the Commonwealth, or the Puritans of CHARLES II.'s day, has, with considerable force, been contested by the Unitarians. The followers of PRIESTLEY, CHANNING, and MARTINEAU insist that the bulk of the congregations formed by the ejected ministers of 1662 were not governed according to Congregational or Independent principles at all, but that these victims of the Act of Uniformity, as regards their mode of church discipline, were Presbyterian."

The World falls into a slip of the pen when it goes on to explain that the Nonconformists already mentioned, for the most part, passed from belief in Evangelical Christianity "into that phase of Christian theology called Arminianism, which rejects the doctrine of the Trinity, but still maintains JESUS on his pedestal as a special missionary of heaven, supernaturally begotten and endowed with the power of working miracles." Arminianism, which rejects Calvinistic predestination, was a phase of their progress, but of course the phase here referred to is Arianism, though it is to be observed that the Arianism of the Liberal Succession in England widely differed from the doctrine of AREIUS of Alexandria. Passing from that, it is somewhat amusing to find our opinion of the Congregationalists represented, by a candid but remotely-situated observer like the Liberal organ of Judaism, as follows:—

The Unitarians declare, therefore, that the Puritan pedigree belongs to them and not to the Congregationalists, that their theology is the natural and logical outcome of Puritanism, and that Congregationalists are simply a reactionary party with a specie of Evangelical fanaticism in their constitution, who are usurping a lineal distinction to which they are not entitled, content to linger, in an unreasoning manner, at a point from which the later Puritans took a new departure towards more rational conceptions of God and duty.

We don't deny that we may have thought all this, but we are obliged to our contemporary for the clear and forcible expression he has given to it. It is necessary to add, however, that Unitarians, while claiming for themselves a true succession from the memorable "Two Thousand," have never denied so absolutely as the Jewish World would imply, that others also have a right to share in the claim.

As to the questionable position of the Congregationalists, in their attempt to profit at once from the claim of liberty and from the security of a Statement of Doctrine, we must express our cordial gratification in reading the deliverance of the Jewish World in closing this article:—

There are two aspects of Church life logically defensible. We could conceive of the consistency of Presbyterianism having a definite creed by which the orthodoxy of its clergy and laity shall be tried. Again, the position of the new school of Unitarians is equally admissible. They are bound by no creed whatever. Hence every enlightened public teacher among them who is credited with being a sincere truthseeker, is at perfect liberty to abandon the Christian designation and call himself a Theist or something else if he please. Both these policies have consistency to recommend them. But Congregationalists play fast and loose between creed and no creed, and sound a "loud trumpet," proclaiming that they are the freest body in the world, while their doctrinal system, though professedly unwritten, is of the narrowest description.

A second article on the Anomalous Attitude of Congregationalism takes up the incidents of the past year—the passing of the May resolutions in spite of the strong protest contained in the Rev. BALDWIN BROWN'S noble sermon, Mr. BROWN'S second sermon at the autumn meeting, and the rebukes administered to him by Dr. KENNEDY. On all these points of an exceedingly anomalous situation, the Jewish World remarks as follows:—

With an unaccountable obtuseness all the contending factions together in this wrangle seem to us to overlook the ludicrous inconsistency of their policy. The Union is said to have been founded about 45 years ago upon a clear "Declaration of Faith and Order" which has never been rescinded. That declaration contains a string of unmistakable dogmatic propositions. While these are allowed to remain unmodified, what sense is there in Messrs. PICTON, WILKS, DORLING, and others adopting a course which ignores them? What sense is there in Mr. BROWN pleading for the retention of his tainted brethren in fellowship when these propositions cease to express their theological convictions? On the other hand, let us turn to the equally anomalous attitude of the Committee. They proclaim ad nauseam that the Union is the freest theological corporation in the world, and that they are fettered by no creed! Thus theological votaries of Christianity delude themselves by empty names.

The Committee, in preparing the May resolutions, had a difficult task to perform so as to exclude a few obnoxious members without excluding several influential ones, who were coupled with the former in departing, less or more, from the terms of the Declaration. While ignoring the Declaration they foisted on the body resolutions almost colourless, and by passing them saved, with a mere pretence of justice, the heretics of the second degree, BROWN, DALE, PARKER, WHITE, &c., and branded the heretics of the first degree, PICTON, WILKS, and DORLING. "But," says the Jewish World (and we think not too strongly, under the circumstances), "they have kindled a fire which in a few years no scheming of the Committee will be able to quench."

EDUCATION OF WOMEN.

A STEP FORWARD.

THE Spectator reports that an important step in favour of the higher education of women has recently been taken at Sandwell, near Birmingham, a country seat of the Earl and Countess of Dartmouth, which they have for many years past given up for philanthropic purposes. Their generosity enabled Miss Selwyn—the late Bishop of Lichfield's sister—to carry on here a school where the daughters of the poorer amongst the higher classes might be received on moderate terms. On Miss Selwyn's retirement from her benevolent work, Lord and Lady Dartmouth formed an influential council of which they are presidents, and the institution thus governed comprises now a college for the ladies above, and a school for those under, eighteen years of age, as well as an industrial home, where boys and girls are trained for service. Arrangements are also made for a temporary home for governesses. It is hoped that the college may ultimately be affiliated with the University of Oxford. The whole institution is placed under the superintendence of Miss Winscomb, a lady who has distinguished herself not more by her able lectures at Malvern on English literature than by her indefatigable exertions on behalf of the higher education for women in general.

THE NEW TESTAMENT REVISED VERSION.

THE revisers of the authorised version of the New Testament, as we announced last week, have concluded their second and final revision. The company have held eighty-five sessions and have spent 337 days on the work, having commenced in June, 1870. The total number of the company is twenty-four, and the average rate of attendance throughout the time has been fifteen. It now remains to consider the suggestions which may be made by the American company, and the adjustment of some questions which have been reserved till the end, as well as the revision of part of the Apocrypha, which falls to the New Testament Company; all this will take a long time yet. It has been reported that in the revised New Testament the passages, Mark, xvi., 9-30, John, viii. 1-11, have been omitted. This we believe to be incorrect. The passages are inserted, but within brackets.

The history of the English translations of the Bible (the Daily News remarks) is not only interesting, but extremely difficult to write. Whoever adventures himself here must steer between the bibliographers and the devotees of early printing. It is not safe to say much about Aldhelm and Caedmon; it is ticklish work talking about Wycliffe, the very spelling of whose name may provoke a literary quarrel. When we come to Coverdale and Tyndal, we are in the centre of a faction fight. The Genevan Bible and the Bishops' Bible are as perilous topics as the Prayer Books of Edward VI. and Elizabeth. In the confused theological turmoil of the sixteenth century, when Protestants and Catholics succeeded Henry VIII., who fought chiefly for his own hand, many parties and people had a turn at translating the Bible. It says a good deal for their honesty that our authorised version was evolved, after much contest of opinion and selection, out of the Bishops' Bible, which superseded the Geneva Bible, which was a revision of Coverdale's Bible to which again Matthew's Bible, and the Great Bible and Cranmer's Bible were not indebted; while Wycliffe and Tyndal's Bibles must have been consulted now and then, as a scholar might consult Boccaccio's Latin Homer, as far as it goes. The complete result of all the revisions up to James's later time is the most splendid monument of pure English in existence. It has the vigour of the great age—the Elizabethan age—with none of its eccentricities and conceits.

A correspondent of the Daily News, in correction of these remarks so far as they apply to Tyndale, says that the authorised version, of the New Testament at least, is indebted to his to a far greater extent than a mere consultation "now and then" would imply. In fact, a very large portion indeed of our present version is taken, almost verbatim from Tyndale's New Testament.

THEOLOGY AT OXFORD.

A VERY unsatisfactory class list, writes the Oxford University correspondent of the Guardian, disappoints the hopes of those who have looked for something better to be made out of the Theological School. Out of eighteen candidates for honours, ten appear in the fourth class, and three fail to obtain any class at all. This is to be regretted, if it is due to excessive severity on the part of the examiners, for the discouragement it must give to theological reading: more still is it to be regretted, if due to the inferiority of the candidates for honours, for the indication which it gives that the ablest undergraduates cannot, or will not, read for honours on this subject. After nine years of trial (during which, in the eighteen class lists that have appeared, there have only been sixteen first classmen—in the past four years only three), the school appears to be in a somewhat critical dilemma. Unless better men go in for it, its standard, and the reputation which its honours give, cannot improve; and until these do improve, the better men will not go in for it. The best hope for it would be the encouragement of theology, as of other studies, by appropriating to it certain Fellowships; for in this respect it is certainly starved, as compared with other subjects. But whether the Commissioners will adopt this method of carrying out their provisions for religious instruction is at present uncertain.

FLOWERY FIELD: OPENING OF THE NEW CHURCH.

THE opening ceremony of this new church took place at three o'clock on Thursday afternoon, December 19th. Every seat was occupied, and forms had to be brought from the school and placed in the aisles. The Hyde and Denton Chronicle says:—"The congregation comprised almost all the élite of the town, a large number of clergymen of the Unitarian body, and we fancied we spied in the gallery the Rev. J. Yearsley, Primitive Methodist."

After a voluntary upon the organ, Mr. J. Ogden bringing out well the tones of the magnificent instrument, the choir, augmented for the occasion by several trained voices, sang the sanctus "To God on high." The Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., followed with the dedicatory prayer. The Rev. J. K. Smith, the minister of the congregation, read prayers, selecting the first of the Ten Services. The lessons were read by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A. The Rev. Chas. Beard preached from the text John vi., 66-68:—"From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him. Then said Jesus unto the twelve, will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." He said it was occasions like this on which the hopes of many hearts and the toils of many years are crowned with success at last, that naturally invited a retrospect and reflection on the past. He did not come as a stranger invited by their kindness to give fit expression to their feelings in this great religious celebration, but as one who shared in their joy. The first welcome which had greeted him on his entrance into the Christian ministry was from the inhabitants of this church, and his presence that day renewed the recollection of it. Twenty-eight years ago, on a Sunday evening in November, he first came to conduct religious worship in the school hard by, and the occasion was fresh in his memory. Many men had since laboured in this corner of God's field, and the little furrows that he began to plough had been deepened and lengthened, good seed had been planted, had been quickened with spiritual sunshine, and now the harvest was come. All these thoughts were presented to his mind, and irresistibly he felt compelled to throw his mind back to the beginning of his work. Twenty-eight years ago the one leading idea was the continuity of God's revelation. Christ was the first-born amongst many brethren in whose ranks they took a real if an humble place. Other systems of doctrine rested on long-descending ecclesiastical authority, and were necessarily exclusive. Not so, however, was their system; its Bible was the whole of human literature, and its prophets were of every nation and church; wherever they discovered truth they recognised a revelation, that bid them look for God in the mirror of their own hearts. With God all around and within them, smiling upon them in the profuse beneficence of nature, why should they seek Him in the half-dead and intelligent past? "Truth against the world" was their motto, and even if Christ was taken away, and they knew not where they had laid Him, it was only the Master's lifeless form they had power to touch, and His spirit was still alive in themselves. If they were driven out of the old harbours of refuge into a hemisphere of sea, God's spirit filled their sails, and he would conduct their voyage to a happy issue. The tendency of this spirit was to revert from the authority without to the authority within. Yet if they looked back it was plain that the temper of the times was hardly favourable to such a consummation; it was by no means a period when the spirit of God was poured upon all flesh, for physical science was coming in like a flood, and they had a materialist form of belief which, whether true or false, was not reconcilable with religion. The great discovery of this age is development; the word and the thought which it has bequeathed to all generations is evolution. That was but the latest outcome of a series of intellectual conditions which had been profoundly exercising religious thought. To reconcile old and new necessitated a change of position, and the question was in what direction and how far? What he felt himself was that these new thoughts were hardly favourable to the spirit of which he had been speaking. He needed to feel all about him a living, throbbing, divine life, and science forced upon him the thought of inexorable law. He wanted a God beside him, behind and before, and the only Deity for whom evolution left room was one who, ages ago, breathed into the primordial fire-cloud the qualities of this changing world. He wanted a Father of his spirit, and when he looked round with the eye of science, he was met by the wars of species and the survival of the fittest, which make universal nature one vast carnival of slaughter, in which the strongest everywhere trample upon the weakest. Even if physical nature gives its weight to a theistic philosophy the God it offers is far away, and the God we want is a God nigh at hand. And when we turn to our own souls do we find Him there? Some elements of our inner life are due to direct divine illumination, but are they potent enough in all? We cannot tell what we owe to prophetic souls and to Christ; because we never lived without them. We cannot put ourselves out of their school by any force of our own. For himself he was willing to confess that he had a less unbounded faith in his own spiritual instincts than he once had; and if he was not satisfied with it in his own case he liked even less of what he saw of it in others. He could not help thinking that concurrently with the attempt to cut themselves off from the past, and to claim the full inheritance of their individual humanity, there settled over them a certain coldness, and a hardness and rigidity of heart; in becoming an inflexible law in themselves they began to think they could not be a law to others. It is not always those who stand alone in the spiritual world who are humbled by his presence. However we may separate a man from his fellows for purposes of analysis, no one can be adequately understood unless he is viewed in a social aspect. We cannot be genuine Buddhists, or sing the hymns to Veda, or adore Allah in the mosque like those to the manner born; we are citizens of the spiritual world, and all aspirations after goodness strike a chord in our heart, but we have our closest sympathies with those of our own religious home. The more he studied his own heart and the history of religion the more he came to the conclusion we were never meant to stand alone. It is natural and right that every human soul should have perfect access to God, but it was also natural and right that poets should sing, and philosophers meditate, and prophets preach, and Christ suffer, and that men should rejoice in their light, and learn the secret of their strength. God chooses his own prophets, and out of common clay moulds for himself a mouthpiece among men. The spiritual instinct in man enables all to know, but the prophet only speaks. We can follow them into the secret places of God; our hesitating thought becomes bold in their certitude. He spoke for himself alone. He had long enough found out that he belonged to the number of men who could not stand upright. Neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet was he, but such spiritual instinct as he had led him to the feet of a master. He had learnt, and was ready to learn in any school. No truth could come amiss to him. But he could not forget the rock whence he was hewn, the pit whence he was digged. Of all the teachers one spoke to him with clearest and most persuasive voice; of all lives one seemed to have been lived abiding upon the mount of God; of all great efforts to purify the world one seemed to him the most lasting. In that life alone he could decipher the past; in this hope alone he could look with calm spirit to the future. Men have found truth in these words all down the Christian centuries, and the old story has not lost its efficacy. Science hides itself in the glory of Christ, and philosophers wonder at him afar off, but the common people hear him gladly. He teaches no comprehensive theology; he does not even expatiate over the whole field of morals; he is a stranger to culture—except the simple knowledge of his people; but he stretches out arms of unspeakable compassion, and cries, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." And they come, and the promise is fulfilled. At the same time he (Mr. Beard) was as far as possible from thinking they were to hold fast their Christianity in defiance of modern knowledge. He would recommend an amalgamation of the two. Let science teach them the inexorable laws of nature to which they must submit themselves. By all means let them learn those lessons thoroughly, and too thoroughly they could not learn them. A time was coming when they must recognise that their highest life did not spring from a Hebrew root only; that henceforth their aim should be to weave together in their lives the brightest and strongest threads, come from where they may. But why not combine the two? Why should they not be citizens of the world and yet liegemen of Christ; pensioners of God's universal bounty to man through man, and yet acknowledging Christ as the central point of life. Christ will never win his last victory until popular Christianity renounces its autocratic designs of conquest; then only will it be true that there is neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ all in all, the prophet of universal humanity. While he occupied that pulpit those who were gone rose up before him, and he seemed to speak as one who stood between the living and the dead. What better things could he wish than that that church might foster the old principles of sweetness and sincerity; that men might learn the secret of invincible uprightness, and the women that gentleness which never tires. Men come and go, but duty never changes. Life is a perpetual obligation; prayer and praise still go up to heaven; Christ still leads onward, and God is over all.

A collection in aid of the current expenses was made, realising £76. The choir concluded the service by singing the Hallelujah Chorus.

A considerable portion of the work has been carried out by the workpeople at the mills, under the direction of Mr. John Thornely (Mr. Ashton's manager), and very great credit is due to them for the excellent manner in which it has been executed.

The plan of the church is different from the ordinary arrangement, being an uninterrupted area on the ground floor, free from any obstructions by pillars or arches. The nave measures 71 ft. x 32 ft.; the two transepts, 20 ft. x 12 ft. 6 in.; the choir (which has an apsidal end), 25 ft. x 18 ft.; vestry and organ chamber, 12 ft. 6 in. x 12 ft. There are galleries at the entrance end, over the vestibule, and in the two transepts, with separate entrances and staircases for the use of the congregation and school children, and the total accommodation provided is about 500 sittings. Special attention has been given to the position and arrangement of the choir, which is separated from the nave by a wide and lofty stone archway, also from the communion, vestry, and organ chamber, by corresponding arches, so that the singers will occupy canopied stalls in front of the congregation, just beyond the pulpit and reading desk, and be in immediate proximity to the organist.

The building has somewhat the appearance of a college chapel, and has been designed in the perpendicular, or Tudor style of architecture, with large and lofty windows both at sides and ends, and is faced with stone all round outside. A handsome disengaged tower rises over the main entrance to a height of 81 feet, with stair turret, at angles, finished with embattled parapets.

In the wall of the vestibule formed by the tower is a stone slab, with a large brass plate, having the following inscription:—

*To the Worship of God,
By a Congregation
Bound by no creeds or confessions of faith
Who, under the guidance of Ministers
Equally free to follow Truth,
Humbly strive to love God and to serve
Their Fellowmen,
This Church is dedicated by Thomas Ashton, of Hyde, and Elizabeth, his wife,
A. D. MDCCCLXXXVIII.*

And above the principal entrance a large ornamental panel stone is built in, the sculpture of which has not yet been determined. The choir has an apse end, with traceried windows, which are filled with stained-glass figures of the twelve Apostles; the opposite end window is also painted with armorials and medallions. All the internal woodwork is pitch-pine, left the natural colour, including a panelled dado 6 feet high all round the walls, and traceried gallery fronts. The pulpit and reading desk are elaborately carved with tracery, &c.; these have been placed in the church in memory of the late Miss Ashton, in fulfilment of her desire to contribute something towards its completion; her monogram and a lozenge bearing her arms have been placed on them. An organ by Hill and Sons, of London, has been erected of sufficient power for the church. Gas brackets have been fixed to the walls, and a handsome corona over the choir. Special attention has been given to the warming and ventilating; the former is accomplished by means of hot-water pipes, fixed in a recess at the bottom of all the outside walls, with branches to the entrances, passages, and galleries; ample provision is made for the admission of fresh air, and the extraction of vitiated air at the highest part of the ceiling.

The whole has been carried out from the designs, and under the superintendence of Mr. Thos. Worthington, F.R.I.B.A., of Manchester, architect.

Mr. Peter Green, of Hyde, was the contractor for the masonry, &c.

The pulpit, reading desk, and choir seats, were made by Mr. Birch, St. John-street, Manchester.

Messrs. Lavery, Barrand, and Westlake, of Manchester and London, are makers of both the plain and stained-glass windows. Messrs. Thomasson and Co., of Birmingham and Manchester, made the gasfittings, bolts, handles, &c. Messrs. Thomas Brown and Son, of Manchester, supplied the seat rugs, matting, communion table cover, carpets, &c.

What the cost of this church has been we are not likely to know; one estimate we have seen puts the sum down at £16,000.

THE EVENING MEETING was held at the close of the service in the girls' schoolroom; Mr. THOMAS ASHTON presiding. There were present the Revs. J. K. Smith, minister of the congregation, C. Beard, B.A., S. Farrington, T. Lloyd Jones, J. Moore, H. E. Dowson, B.A., D. Walmsley, B.A., Jas. Black, M.A., J. E. Odgers, M.A., William Harrison, G. H. Vance, B.D., Noah Green, W. G. Cadman, Joseph Freeston, J. B. Lloyd, A. Ashworth, J. G. Slater, J. Harwood, B.A., E. Turland; Messrs. Thomas Thornely, Edwd. Hibbert, John Hibbert, Saml. Thornely, John Thornely, Orlando Oldham, J. F. Cheetham, Captain Thornely, W. Marshal, Lieutenant Hibbert, Chas. Hibbert, and Jesse Pilcher, together with a large attendance of gentlemen and tradesmen of Hyde. Altogether the gathering was of a most influential and enthusiastic character.

The CHAIRMAN opened the proceedings by taking a retrospect of the past history of the church at Flowery Field. He said that in 1831 there was no place of worship in Hyde except the Independent Chapel near the Mechanics' Institution, and the Methodist preaching room at the top of Water-street, consequently that district was suffering from spiritual destitution, and in order to encourage the habit of going to some place of worship, the ministers of the neighbourhood agreed to conduct services on Sunday evenings, which were held in the schoolroom which was now the infant school. Mr. Brooks, of Gee Cross, Mr. Gaskell, of Dukinfield, and the minister at Gorton were amongst those who conducted the services. That seemed rather a long way back, and to Mr. Wells, who was the successor at Gorton, it would seem almost antediluvian, having to go back for a period of 30 or 40 years. The services, however, were not conducted entirely by Unitarian ministers, as Independents, Wesleyans, and some of the ministers of the New Connexion Methodists held services in the room; indeed he did not remember the names of many of the friends who joined in conducting the services. The object then was not to proselyte in any faith; they wished all to join in these services simply to encourage them to go to some place of worship, as they were expecting churches and chapels to rise up as they were required. The services were conducted in this manner for many years: sometimes they were stopped, and then began again, and at last they were chiefly conducted by Mr. Brooks and Mr. Gaskell. Amongst the ministers who followed were the Rev. Charles Beard and the Rev. R. C. Dendy. Mr. Gaskell for a time conducted the service by himself, and as churches and chapels were built in the neighbourhood, they provided for those who had certain views, and such people left and joined the bodies to which they belonged, so that they who remained had the established theological views that were held at Gee Cross. Mr. Gaskell's work extended over a period of eleven years, and he might be said to have laid the foundation of this congregation. It then fell into the hands of the East Cheshire Mission, and they had in succession the Rev. Mr. Elliott, Rev. R. Dendy, and the late missionary, Mr. Smith. The congregation gradually consolidated itself, and to-day had entered on an entirely new life, being independent of the East Cheshire Mission, Mr. Smith being no longer missionary, but minister of Flowery Field Church, and under his administration he trusted they would have every chance of success. It would require great earnestness and enterprise to make their labours successful, but henceforth they would have greater influence in elevating and refining, and purifying the people amongst whom they were placed.

The Rev. J. K. SMITH said they were thankful, as a congregation, to see so many sympathising friends there that night, on an occasion in connection with the history of Flowery Field Church, which, as they might suppose, was a most important one. After a very varying career, as the chairman had well shown, they all felt it was now starting on a new mission, that crowned all previous efforts, and with additional responsibility. For several years past, in connection with the work they had to discharge, many of them felt that it was coming to a position of stagnation, simply because its resources were used up, although some who had been brought into fellowship would have put up with the inconvenient place of meeting. Various means were suggested to get over this state of things, but for many reasons it was a long time before Mr. Ashton could see his way to build a church. He could not see how it could be carried on thoroughly on free and independent ground. Now all had been got over, and they had to-day opened for public worship as handsome, beautiful, and commodious a place of worship as the most fastidious would care to worship in, and they had, as it were, entered upon a new life. As to the handsome manner in which Mr. Ashton had accomplished his promise to build a new church, he dare not express his own feelings, because he knew Mr. Ashton did not need any praise of his. When it was first made known that he was going to build, one and all said they need not question him as to the character of the church; they would leave that in his hands; he never did anything but in one way, and in his own way full reliance could be placed. Mr. Ashton had more than fulfilled their highest expectations. As to their responsibilities, it had often been pointed out by historians that private persons might say many things which public characters could not, and in like manner men who occupied obscure positions in society might say what they liked without let or hindrance, but if Mr. Gladstone made any statement, everything he said was taken notice of, and if he wrote a letter in answer to some village politician, that letter was printed and scattered far and wide. They had hitherto occupied a comparatively private character, but had now stepped out into the circle of self-supporting churches. They felt that they must have much more zeal, that a greater weight of responsibility rested upon each of their shoulders—there were more seats to let, and more friends to consider. There was a much larger outgo in possessing such a beautiful building as the new Flowery Field Church, and it was incumbent upon everyone of them to carry out the work of Christ to the best of his ability. They must not rest upon their oars, and think that having left the infant schoolroom some one else would step into their place and do their work. They must rise to a consciousness of their responsibilities, and he trusted all who joined would enter into the work with the same spirit that had been shown in connection with the school. In considering what to aim at to make the church a true centre of Christian influence, Mr. Smith said they should strive to make the life and character of Christ their own. After some further remarks Mr. Smith concluded by reading the following address on behalf of the congregation:—

THE MEMORIAL.

The Members of the Flowery Field Christian Church to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ashton.

Dear Sir and Madam,—The opening of the New Church offers an opportunity we gladly embrace of expressing our great pleasure in the realisation of the hopes and labours of many years; and also of tendering to you our earnest and heartfelt thanks for the unvarying interest you have always shown in the Flowery Field Congregation; for the liberal and judicious support you have given us, and now, most of all, for the noble generosity which has placed so beautiful a building at our service.

We know you do not need or desire any words of thanks in acknowledgment of the deep obligation under which you have thus placed us; all the more earnestly, therefore, do we hope we may prove ourselves in some measure worthy of the important charge committed to our keeping.

We look on this church as a token of your close attachment to the locality and the people with whom you have so long been connected, and of the deep interest you take in their mental, moral, and religious improvement. We pray that it may be a centre for the propagation of pure religion, that it might be hallowed by the tenderest Christian charities, and become dear to us all from its religious associations. May we make this church a real religious home; may we enter it always with willing feet and thankful hearts, and in it be strengthened in those noble resolves and high aspirations which shall purify, exalt, and bless our whole lives.

In conclusion, permit us to repeat the expression of our sincere thanks for your great kindness, and to hope that you, and all the members of your family, may have the satisfaction of realising the hopes and expectations you have formed in building the church this day dedicated to the Worship of Almighty God.

Signed, on behalf of the Congregation,

J. KERTAIN SMITH, Minister.

ANTHONY STAFFORD, Chairman of Committee.

GEORGE SLATER, Treasurer.

ROBERT HOWARTH, Honorary Secretary.

The address was very beautifully engrossed and illuminated in gold and colour, with a vignette of the church in the centre and Mr. Ashton's crest at the corners. It was enclosed in a gilt frame and glazed.

Mr. ANTHONY STAFFORD, chairman of the committee, said their minister had enlarged so much on the address that it required few words of his to express the feelings of gratitude they owed as a congregation to Mr. and Mrs. Ashton for building that handsome edifice. Looking back to the time when Mr. Charles Beard first gave winter evening lectures at Flowery Field he recollected—and it was a pleasing recollection to him—that the lectures had conferred many advantages on those who heard them. Now that they had a place set apart for religious worship they had already a considerable increase, resulting in double the number of seat-holders, which at present stood at 360; and now that they had entered and enjoyed the first service in their most beautiful and comfortable church, he hoped it would endure for generations as a standing monument of the kindness of heart of its founders. He hoped the congregation would prove themselves worthy of the trust committed to them.

Mr. ROBERT HOWARTH, as secretary, said the members of that church had been looking forward to that day, which would long be remembered by all of them. They had watched the building from time to time as it had grown, and cherished the hope that they might be spared to see its completion. He trusted they would within its walls cultivate the Christian feeling which characterises the lives of all good men; and he did not know that they could show their thankfulness to the donor of that church better than by being earnest in the work of carrying on the church for the common good of all who might desire to worship there.

Mr. THOMAS ASHTON, who spoke with some emotion, said he found it extremely difficult to reply to the speeches which had just been made. On behalf of his wife and himself he thanked them heartily for the address that had been presented, and for the kind way in which they had recognised what had been done, and he hoped that the services they had rendered to the congregation might be productive of good result. They had alluded to his long connection with the place; although he did not live in Flowery Field, they must know he had been extremely attached to it. He could not say that he had done everything which should have been done, it certainly was not for want of will, but for want of power. He hoped the new church which had been opened that day would be useful in every way in elevating the moral condition of the people of Flowery Field and Hyde generally. He hoped they would excuse him saying more on that subject, but he would take that opportunity of expressing his thanks to other people who had a great deal to do with the church; and first of all thanks were due to their architect, Mr. Worthington, for the patience with which he had borne all his (Mr. Ashton's) interference in trying to meet what perhaps some people would call his whims. He thought that in reality the architect had been very successful, and next in order to him came a gentleman who was Mr. Worthington's assistant, namely Mr. Elgood, who did not believe in their being able to do the whole of the work in Hyde, and seemed to live in terror the whole time the work was in progress. And, perhaps more than all, they were indebted to the Hyde friends, especially to Mr. John Thornely, who was a man who would secure success anywhere; Mr. Peter Green had been to him (the speaker) more than a contractor, and there were many others he could like to name; one more he must name—Mr. Creswell and one man who was the last and first he saw working upon the job—Mr. Stott. The building was one that did them all credit; every man had worked with good will and love for his work, and a determination that the job should be one of the best that could be turned out. He believed himself there would be less trouble with employers as well as with the men, if they knew their work, and appreciated the proper means that were taken to enable them to do it. He believed they had had good joiners, bricksetters, and stonemasons about the work done at that church; he only wished the names could be handed down in the church to futurity. He trusted that his wife and he would be able sometimes to come over and join them in the service, and he promised they would both do anything they could for Flowery Field and its people.

Mr. JOHN THORNELY said he had unfortunately not heard what Mr. Ashton had said, but everyone who had had a hand in the building of Flowery Field Church had striven with all his might and main that it might be good work, and last for ages.

Mr. PETER GREEN did not think he could add one word more to what Mr. Thornely had said. He did the work heartily, knowing that his employer had plenty of money to pay with, and, as the Chairman had truly said, good work could be done if there was good material to do it with.

Mr. CURFEW proposed the best thanks to the Rev. Charles Beard, for the very excellent sermon he had preached that afternoon. Next to Mr. Ashton they did not owe so much to any man. He said it was 28 years since he first conducted the service in connection with Flowery Field Church. He well remembered it. For eight or ten years it depended mainly on him, and the effect of his lectures filled the place. He hoped they would give him a hearty vote of thanks for his sermon as well as for previous efforts on behalf of Flowery Field congregation. (Applause.)

The Rev. C. BEARD said he was extremely obliged for the kind reception they had given him, and for the too flattering words in which Mr. Curfew had spoken of him. It was a long time since he first came to Flowery Field, and he confessed he did not find himself any more at home in this room than in the pulpit of the beautiful church that was opened that afternoon. He should feel a great deal more at home in the Infant School where was the pulpit that he used to preach in in 1850, when he began to come from Gee Cross after his afternoon service, as he continued to do for 11½ years. During that time they spent a great many pleasant evenings together; at any rate, they were pleasant on his part, if not pleasant on theirs. They had some indifferent sermons and some tolerably good ones. He thought he might say that they had some indifferent congregations and a great many good ones—(laughter)—but under all circumstances it was quite a pleasure to him to come to Flowery Field, they were so kindly disposed and attentive; be the audience large or small its character was always such as to encourage him to come again. They were there that day not only to open a new church but to celebrate the consummation of a public work in which he had been deeply interested. He looked upon Flowery Field as his second home. The sermon they had listened to was his 176th that he had preached in Flowery Field, and he thought he might take credit for having done work of some sort or another. What wonderful music they used to have to be sure. (Laughter.) He should like to hear the old organ again, and hear its tone. He recollected on one occasion they had a tremendous anthem, "Who is this that cometh from Edom?" said the powerful bass; "Who is this that cometh from Edom?" shrieked the treble, and "Who is this that cometh from Edom?" warbled the alto. Thus they asked "Who is this that cometh from Edom?" for about a quarter of an hour, and he never knew who came after all. (Laughter.) There was another memory, not at all of a ludicrous kind, that would rise up in his mind when he thought of those days. It was the memory of one who, if he had been living, would have been present on this occasion, he meant the Chairman's brother, Mr. Samuel Ashton, a gentleman who had his own way of doing things, which might not be the way that other people did them, but always a very kindly or friendly way. He never would come with them to the chapel, so he was left at the tea table, but he came later, and there was a little room off the gallery where he sat and listened to the preaching. There were a great many more good friends who were no longer with them, but he could not dismiss his memory without making some allusion to it. His thorough affability was known to all who worked in the great factory of which he was the head, and if he had been living, although in all probability he would have come no further than the door, he would have been as heartily with them as anyone present. That memory was too sacred to bear allusion in such a public place, but he ventured very lightly to touch upon it, because he hardly should have done justice to his own feelings if he had not done so. He begged of his fellow workers to take courage in their work, as something might come of it at last. He knew very well that it was possible to build up a Christian congregation in a place like this, and build it up of working men without finding a Mr. Ashton at the far end. Then there was something in this work more encouraging to him than the great and noble munificence which they celebrated that day, and in celebrating which strangers joined as heartily as they did themselves. It had been well said that this church was a working man's church. It was true that the money came out of one man's capacious heart and not very shallow pocket. At the same time if there had not been that respect and feeling of mutual trust and confidence engendered in this place by more than one generation of good employers and workmen, he ventured to say the place would not be the place it is. They did not want to make a Unitarian propaganda of it, but to make it a working man's church—true, broad, and free, on a lasting foundation. After some experiences of life, he thought that the people of this neighbourhood were very much to be envied. The working classes of a place like this had had a chance for many years of showing what a model the working man's life might be and ought to be. They had had no grinding poverty in their midst, and no flaunting and shameless vice. He did not mean to say that they were a pattern population, but if they lived in the streets of a vast population of 700,000 people gathered from all cities and parts of the world, they would see degradation of human society of which they had in a place like this no idea. They had fairly good wages. He did not mean to say as good as they could wish, and he was sure Mr. Ashton would only rejoice to pay more whenever he felt able to do so. They had in their homes a few of the comforts of life, and an opportunity to lay up something for old age. Another advantage was that they had the shadow of hills over them, and could go out and commune with nature in many of her unspoiled aspects, and with all they had that distinguishing characteristic of the Lancashire race to which the Chairman and himself and many present belonged, viz., a good proud spirit, which made them feel and look upon themselves as not inferiors to any man, be he their employer. So long as they could pay twenty shillings in the pound, keep their own house door open, and live their own life in their own way they were comparatively independent. He trusted he had many friends among them whose hands he was proud to shake, and whose friendship he was willing to acknowledge, and esteemed them quite as much in their sphere of life as those in a more conspicuous station. He did not know what money was given to a man for except to enable him to build a church like that at Flowery Field.—(Laughter.)

The Rev. JAMES BLACK, of Stockport, taking for his subject "Our Presbytery," addressed Mr. Smith on behalf of the East Cheshire Christian Union. He spoke of the sympathy and harmony that existed amongst the Unitarian ministers of Cheshire, and bid Mr. Smith good-bye as a missionary from the presbytery, at the same time offering him a welcome amongst them as an independent minister.

The Rev. JAMES HARWOOD said he had great pleasure in joining with the other ministers in congratulating them upon the opening of the new church. The handsome Address made by the congregation to Mr. Ashton showed that they fully realised their obligation. They began right by getting the congregation first and the building afterwards.

Mr. HENRY R. GREG, brother-in-law to Mrs. Ashton, said that he felt a strong sympathy with the occasion of their meeting. It was a matter for congratulation to the body of Unitarians to know that such a magnificent building had been erected for the worship of God.

The Rev. W. HARRISON, of Glossop, said he was pleased to be with them on that occasion, and expressed his cordial feeling of sympathy with them in their day of rejoicing.

Mr. JOHN ALCOCK thought they might allow him to add some congratulation to what had been before expressed upon the completion of the beautiful church, which he hoped would be the home of their affection in connection with various events in many of their lives. Factories might be useless through bad trade, but this church would always have its use, and he did not see any limit to its usefulness. He trusted it might continue to prosper.

The Rev. H. E. DOWSON said that, as Mr. Smith's nearest neighbour, as the minister of a church in sympathy with theirs, and which lay nearest to theirs, he wished to add his meed of congratulation. He spoke from the bottom of his heart when he said there could be no kinder natured or obliging friend than their minister, and he trusted he might for many years be the happy minister of one of the most beautiful churches in England.

On the motion of Mr. W. MORGAN, seconded by Mr. ROBERT BELL, a vote of thanks was passed with acclamation to the Chairman.

Mr. CURFEW then begged leave to ask that the name of the late Miss Ashton might not be forgotten. He always felt when he saw Miss Ashton she was like an angel going about the village. And he had not heard the schools named. He thought they were worthy of mention, as there were not many places with a population under 3,000 could seat 600 in one room, and then adjourn to another in the same building and seat the same number, that was the private property of one gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN, in acknowledging the vote of thanks, said he was glad Mr. Curfew had mentioned the name of his sister in connection with the day's proceedings, as the pulpit and reading desk were her gifts.

The kindness of Mr. Ashton, as engraven on the table, will be handed down to posterity, but long before the record was inscribed thereon it was engrafted on the hearts of the living present. He and his father before him have ever held a place in the effectuations of their workpeople, and at the present time it would be difficult to over estimate Mr. Ashton's influence. His unobtrusive virtues and large hearted benevolence have not been circumscribed within his own territory, or limited to the population of Flowery Field, for in Hyde they have been so beneficially felt that even there the name of Thomas Ashton is as familiar as a household word; by many people he is recognised as a leader, and by all respected, honoured and deferred to, not only on account of his high social status, but because of his conspicuous merits, which must be apparent to the most careless observer of his useful career. He has ever been regarded as one whose heart is in the right place. For years he has laboured to mitigate the evils which sickness and poverty entail upon their victims, and has done more than ever will be known to bring comfort and health into the homes of the afflicted since his name was associated with the Hyde Sick Kitchen—a charity which owes its existence to him. Perhaps all the chapels in the town have been indebted to him for assistance and the same may be said with respect to every good object for the benefit of the community and the improvement of the town. Amongst the services he has rendered to the town the support he has given to the Mechanic's Institution, and especially to the evening classes, has earned for him so many thanks that he has been constrained to tell the directors that in future he will not be thanked, so that henceforth Mrs. Ashton will receive all the praise, for in her the institution has found his help-meet. At present Mr. Ashton is Chairman of the Hyde bench of magistrates, and a member of Hyde Local Board.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

BELFAST.—On Monday evening week the Mutual Improvement Association in connection with the Second Congregation, Rosemary-street, concluded the first half of its session. After Mr. G. Boros had been elected a corresponding member, a varied programme of songs, glees, and readings was gone through. The Rev. J. C. Street gave a very interesting reading and took part in the glees, and the Rev. Harold Rylett also read one or two of O. W. Holmes's poems and sang an old English ballad. Miss Darbishire, Miss Lipsie, Miss Clarke, and other ladies and gentlemen likewise contributed to a pleasant evening's enjoyment.

DEWSBURY.—On Tuesday evening, December 17th, a paper was read by Mr. J. W. Cannon, architect, in the Unitarian schoolroom, on the use of the beautiful in our churches. Beauty was defined as "a quality in visible objects by means of which their colours and forms are agreeable to the human mind." Mr. Cannon said it might well be asked whether it is a mark of improvement that for a long time the outward sign of devotion had been absent from the religious world. Within recent years, especially in the Church of England, there had been marked evidence of a revival of this spirit in the numerous rich and imposing churches with which our land is now being studded. . . . He contended that the utmost they could do to render their spiritual home appropriate as to its purpose, beautiful as to its accessories, and solemn as to its services, was too little by far to represent the spirit with which they ought to enter its portals. Nor need poverty deter them from making an effort to do what lay in their power to render their services and their churches fit for their sanctified objects. It was not necessarily "storied windows, richly light, casting a dim, religious light" that marked the reverence of the worshippers within their shadows. Some simple cottage flowers on the altar might equally display that they had with loving hands done what was possible to make their church redolent of the reverence which is more precious than the most costly material and the most elaborate work-friendship. A discussion followed, in which Messrs. R. Thompson, J. Bower, and C. Shiele, and others took part.

LEICESTER: REV. J. PAGE HOPPS ON CHRISTIANITY AND WAR.—At the Great Meeting, Leicester, on Sunday morning, December 15th, the Rev. J. P. Hopps preached a special Advent sermon on Jesus Christ, the "Dayspring from on High," and the "Guide into the way of Peace." He said that the work of Christ was not accomplished. When he came there was no room for him in the inn, and they laid him in a manger; and presently there was no room for him in the world, from which he was flung by way of Calvary and the Cross; and there was hardly room in the world now to humanise his divine principles. Myself, who adore him as God, did not imitate him as man. His great ideas concerning peace and the relations of man to man are despised and inordinately despised. What a contrast there was between his teachings and much of what had lately been going on in the very highest places of this land! What a contrast between Christ's peace principles and the wild and wicked assertion made a few days ago in the English House of Peers, that it is the advocates of "peace-at-any-price" that are responsible for the wars which the most ruthless conquerors, and that they have dimmed the majesty of England! Why, the utmost that the peace-at-any-price party had been able to accomplish had been to mitigate by a very little the frenzies of the war-at-any-cost party. "Peace-at-any-price" might be an exaggeration, but Jesus came as near as anyone ever did to advocating it; and it was one of his most distinctive teachings that the speaker in the House of Lords damned as "deleterious." What was this but to "crucify the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame?" They must admit, then, that Jesus had not accomplished in this world all he hoped for; but they must also admit that if his spirit were cherished, if his example were followed, and his teachings put into practice, the world would be in a very different condition.

MANCHESTER: CROSS-STREET CHAPEL CHORAL SOCIETY.—On Wednesday, the 18th inst., this Society gave its first concert in the Memorial Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. G. M. Little, the proceeds being in aid of the piano fund. The first part of the programme consisted of songs, trios, glees, and instrumental music, the songs being given by Miss Bellhouse, Messrs. Warrington, Watson, and C. T. Hibbert. Mr. Sothern played one of his own pianoforte pieces, "Adeline," Valse de Salon. The concert was brought to a close by the performance of "Locke's Music to Macbeth," in character, Mr. H. S. Bolland taking the part of Hecate, and the Misses Bellhouse, J. Scholes, and Reynolds, and Mr. Watson, that of the witches. Owing to the very unfavourable state of the weather, the audience was not so large as could have been desired.

MILES PLATTING, MANCHESTER.—On Sunday, 15th inst., it was announced that the offertory would be handed over to the minister for distribution among the necessitous members of the church and parents of Sunday scholars. Suitable sermons were preached by the minister (the Rev. W. G. Cadman), and the offertory reached the unexpected sum of £8, which will suffice to relieve all urgent cases of need. Mr. Cadman is at present delivering a series of short discourses on the Sunday morning, addressed especially to the young people of the church and school, on the positive teachings of Unitarian Christianity. The discourses are based on the successive paragraphs of the statement of "Belief" drawn up by Mr. Hopgood, which has been circulated among the teachers and elder scholars.

OADBÏ, NEAR LEICESTER.—A public meeting was held in the Village Hall on Wednesday evening, when the Rev. J. J. Wright delivered a lecture on the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. There was a fair attendance. Mr. W. Clover, of Leicester, occupied the chair, and spoke of the great services rendered to this country by Mr. Gladstone. The Rev. J. J. Wright then proceeded to give his address, which proved to be very interesting and instructive, showing very conclusively that the great principles which the right hon. gentleman stood by had built up a great character and produced one of the greatest of English statesmen. The secret of his success was deep and honest conviction, love of right, and devotion to his country. The lecturer was frequently applauded.

READING.—On Monday last the first marriage which has taken place in the church was celebrated. The eldest daughter of Mr. Reed, the hon. secretary of the church, was the bride and Mr. J. T. Mabey, carpenter and builder, Bournemouth, the bridegroom. The Rev. W. A. Clarke, of Godalming, officiated at the ceremony, and at its close, on behalf of the congregation, presented a copy of Tennyson's poems to Mr. and Mrs. Mabey.

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.—The twenty-second annual report of this congregation is to hand. The annual meeting was held on the 9th of September. The congregation in their report state that the stir of public thought in the direction of religious subjects has during their period of office been undoubtedly favourable to freedom and thoroughness of inquiry, and while the single and silent effort of those connected with our body has been to obtain the services of a qualified instructor and leader, the arrival of that leader is opportune at a time when there is so much wholesome doubting abroad, and we may fairly anticipate that our own simple and practical views will receive a more friendly and a wider recognition than they have hitherto obtained. At the close of the formal business an address of welcome was presented to the Rev. J. H. Smith, and also to Mrs. Smith. In a lengthy address Mr. Smith replied, expressing a desire that they should undertake their work with hearty good will—to propagate a pure and free religion and live by their hopes—the realisation of the highest good.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LIFEBOAT FROM THE UNITARIANS.

To the Editors.—Having been a subscriber for some years to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, and feeling somewhat interested in its movements, may I ask you to give me a place in your correspondence column for a few remarks in connection with this noble charity? I have been thinking that collection boxes might be placed in most of the Unitarian chapels in London and the provincial towns for the purpose of receiving contributions from their various members towards purchasing a lifeboat and building a boathouse, the same to be placed on some part of our coast, and forming a new lifeboat station. The cost of a boathouse, lifeboat, its equipment, and transporting carriage, averages £900, and in addition to this, a still further sum of £70 per annum is required to keep each lifeboat station in proper working condition. I would suggest that the lifeboat of which I am at present speaking, should be named after one of the eminent Unitarians, say for instance, "The Florence Nightingale," "The Mary Carpenter," or, "The George Dawson." I think there would not be much difficulty in setting on foot the plan I have thus proposed, and I hope that it may be favourably received by your readers. Subscriptions are also much needed by this institution. It has upwards of 267 lifeboat stations; last year it expended £37,860 upon them, and rescued 1,041 lives, in addition to saving several vessels.—I am, truly yours,

NATHANIEL WATERALL.

London, Dec. 17th, 1868.

SCHOOLS FOR OUR CHILDREN.

To the Editors.—Your correspondents have thus far taken no notice of the fact that several Unitarian boarding schools already exist in different parts of the country, one at least as far south as London. We know how limited is the public to which these schools necessarily look for support. Is it wise to increase their number? Orthodox parents will not send us their children as boarders; rarely even as day-pupils. They seem to dread the mixing with Unitarian boys. Indeed, I have quite recently lost four day-pupils expressly on this ground. On the other hand, Unitarians are ready enough to send their children to schools where they know the religious teaching is ostentatiously orthodox, and where all the influences of daily example, fashion, and social prestige are distinctly and purposely in favour of the Established Church.

But, it is urged, we want schools where the religious teaching shall be decidedly Unitarian. May I be permitted to state what has been my own practice, for the last fourteen years, in the important matter of religious instruction? We have usually had on a week-day a course of lessons on the historical books of the Old Testament; and on Sundays a similar course on the New Testament, including a review of the general principles of religion. Practically, these classes have been confined to my Unitarian pupils; but others have been occupied at the same time with other work, so that their non-participation in these courses has excited no more remark than if they did not attend the German class. In my treatment of the subjects themselves, I have striven simply to draw out, to the best of my ability, the historical and spiritual teaching of the Bible, from a purely unsectarian point of view.

At the same time I have never shrunk from explaining, as occasion arose, where we differ from our orthodox friends in the interpretation of particular passages, and why we think our own opinion the true one. Thus, without sacrificing mental freedom to sectarian idols, I honestly believe my pupils have had a fair opportunity of learning the evidence for those views which are commonly held at the present time by liberal Unitarians. More than this I cannot undertake to say.

With regard to another question, I have never heard of the boys squabbling together over their religious opinions. On the contrary, I should be only too glad if religion ever formed a topic of conversation among them. But youthful reserve, as a rule, keeps them silent upon the great subject, except when formally spoken to by their elders. After all, the chief difficulty is, in the case of most boys, to inspire them with the genuine religious feeling itself, without which the truest theology, even if we could know it to be true, is but a grate without a fire.

EDWIN SMITH.

Nottingham.

To the Editors.—I am in no way desirous to enter into any controversy with Mr. Vancesmith, yet in justice to Mr. Dobson and myself, I cannot pass unnoticed the letter of this gentleman in the last number of the Herald. In order to discuss any important question with advantage to the public, as well as to the parties concerned, two essential conditions are necessary. First, there must be no acerbity; secondly, the laws of logic must be observed. Sneering may take with a few—happily they are very few. As to logic, the reader may judge for himself. Some weeks ago a letter from Mr. Dobson appeared in the Herald advocating the establishment at Brighton of a High-class Unitarian School, where religious instruction should be made part of the curriculum. In the next number Mr. Vancesmith tells the public that Mr. Briggs and he himself have tried to establish "just such a school." The unreality of this assertion having been proved out of Messrs. Briggs and Vancesmith's own prospectus, the latter decidedly withdraws his competition. Now I beg to be allowed to state that the authors of the Unitarian College, Brighton, had no intention whatever to enter into competition with Messrs. Briggs and Vancesmith, but that they thought, and still think, they provide what is really wanted, viz., a high-class Unitarian school whose standard will be up to the Oxford, Cambridge, and London Universities' matriculation examinations, and in whose curriculum the teaching of the principle truths of Unitarianism is comprised.

The fact that such a school is really wanted, is proved by the circumstance that already some Unitarian and three non-Unitarian lads—whose parents, however, do not object to the religious instruction given—have been promised.

With this I consider my correspondence on this topic as closed, and thanking you for kind insertion, I remain yours truly,

A. DE WASSINDT.

Brighton, 23rd December, 1878.

BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—Having seen in the Herald a request for a list of books suitable for school prizes, I venture to send the enclosed, hoping it may be of use to some teachers in their difficulties. The books are not all entirely free from objectionable doctrinal teaching, but there is in all very little of it. Many of them I have read to Sunday-school children, and they have been much appreciated. It may perhaps be necessary to say that they are none of them new publications, but almost all, I should imagine, would be still in print.—I remain, yours truly,

12, Highbury Crescent,
London, Dec. 22nd, 1878.

GIRLS.—Publishers, Nelson and Sons: Little Aggie's Fresh Snowdrops, by F. M. S.; Susy's Flowers, by F. M. S.; Martha's Home, by F. M. S.; The Roby Family, by A. L. O. E.; Parliament in the Playroom, by A. L. O. E.; Old Friends with New Faces, by A. L. O. E.; Flower Stories and their Lessons. Publishers, Routledge: Marian and her Pupils, by Charlotte Lankester; The Medwins of Wykeham, by Charlotte Lankester. Publishers, Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday: Lessons of Love. Publishers, James Nisbet and Co.: Three Little Spades. Publishers, Hamilton, Adams and Co.: Two Tales for Girls. Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand: Forrest Mills; In the Clearings; Father Gabrielle's Fairy.

BOYS.—Publishers, Nelson and Sons: Hope On, by F. M. S.; The Giant Killer, by A. L. O. E.; My Neighbour's Shoes, by A. L. O. E.; The Crown of Success, by A. L. O. E. Publishers, Routledge: A Hero, by the author of John Halifax; Cherry Stones, by the Rev. William Adams. Publishers, Frederick Warne: The Silver Cup, or True Heroism.

COMING WEEK.

FLOWERY FIELD.—On Sunday the opening services will be continued at 10.45 and 6.30, when the Rev. Chas. Hargrove will preach.

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—On New Year's Day, devotional conference meeting at 7 p.m.

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—On Sunday, at 6.30, Solemn Vesper Service—In Memory of Our Dead.

STALYBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture, at 6.30, by the Rev. Halliwell Thomas, on "A Christmas Lesson for the Unorthodox."

STRANGEWAYS: UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday, at 10.45 and 6.30, the Rev. J. T. Marriott will preach.

Birth.

BEARD.—On the 19th inst., at The Meadows, Ashton-on-Mersey, the wife of John Russell Beard, of a daughter.

Marriages.

BATTERSBY—CARR.—On the 22nd inst., at the Presbyterian Chapel, Hindley, by the Rev. A. Rushton, Peter Battersby, to Ann Carr, both of Hindley.

LEWIS—TIMINGS.—On the 23rd inst., at the Old Meeting House, Dudley, by the Rev. Matthew Gibson, Henry Ambrose, youngest son of Mr. John Lewis, of Stratton St. Margaret, Wilts, to Harriet S., youngest daughter of the late Mr. George Henry Timings, of Dudley, Worcestershire.

Deaths.

FOSTER.—On the 23rd inst., at Newcastle, Staff., at the residence of her friend, Mr. Habbishaw, Annie, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Foster, of Portsmouth.

PECK.—On the 23rd inst., at Brooklands, George Peck, of Manchester and Brooklands, aged 57. Friends will please accept this, the only intimation.

VICKERS.—On Christmas day morning, suddenly, Richard Vickers, in his 72nd year. For 24 years chapel keeper at Cross-street Chapel, Manchester.

NEW WELLS, WAKEFIELD ESTABLISHED 1772.

S. HOLDSWORTH & SONS,
CABINET MAKERS, UPHOLSTERERS,
AND
GENERAL HOUSE FURNISHERS
ONE OF THE LARGEST STOCKS IN THE KINGDOM.

Terms—Net Cash. All Goods Delivered Carriage Free.

PAPERHANGINGS.

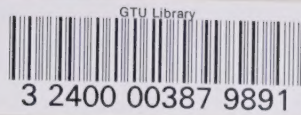

F. S. PHILLIPS & CO. have always in Stock an extensive variety of the newest and choicest designs, at moderate prices. Large buyers liberally treated. Small lots, sufficient for single rooms, at greatly reduced prices.

WHOLESALE WAREHOUSE:

93, BRIDGE STREET, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

BORDERS, DECORATIONS, GOLD MOULDINGS PAINTERS
VARNISHES, &c., &c.

Printed for the Proprietors by JOHN PHILLIPS, of The Terrace, 22, River-street, Eccles New Road, Salford, at the Unitarian Herald Printing Office, No. 20, Cannon-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at 20, Cannon-street aforesaid, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, December 27, 1878.

THREE DAY
CIRCULATION

GTU Library
2400 Ridge Road
Berkeley, CA 94709
For renewals call (510) 649-2500
All items are subject to recall.

